Mr. A. Haskill, who for fourteen years has held the position of Clerk, and who during that time has discharged his duties with the utmost satisfaction to the members of the lodge, declined to take the nomination last night, saying that he had seen enough of service, and it was time for some other member to take up the reins of the secretaryship. His action was regretted by the Woodmen, who were outspoken in their praise of his services during the past 14 years.

FOOD PRICES NORMAL IN FRANCE DESPITE WAR

PARIS, Dec. 14.—More than a hundred days of war; the mobilization of three million men; their equipment and feeding, and the feeding of two million Belgian refugees and of 80,000 German prisoners have had no appreciable effect upon the cost of living in France.

Production, however, has been restricted by the occupation by the enemy of several departments and the distribution of food stuffs has been hindered by the calls made upon transportation facilities by the army.

Normal market conditions have been maintained, partly by a remarkably prolific harvest of vegetables and fruit, partly by the suppression of duties on wheat and other important necessaries, and partly by confidence, preventing panicky fluctuations.

Beef costs the same as in 1913, excepting the cheaper boiling pieces, which are in great demand and have slightly advanced. Pork and poultry are cheaper than a year ago.

Butter and eggs cost more to-day than a year ago, and sugar is four cents a pound higher.

Brock St. Rink Is Flooded

Hockeyists Will Likely Get a Chance on Thursday Night

Manager Meharry took advantage of the cold weather last night and flooded Brock Street Rink. A good surface was ready this morning and in a day or two the hockey players will probably get a chance to don the steel blades. It is not likely that the rink will be open to the skaters until Saturday night, but there will likely be hockey practice on Thursday night if the weather stays cold.

Last Night's Temperature

Seven degrees above zero was the lowest temperature recorded during the night by the thermometer. The wind that accompanied a light fall of snow was muh harder to bear than the cold wave of several weeks ago, when a temperature of three degrees below zero was noted. The ground is frozen up and weather sharps aver that we will be favoured with a liberal fall of snow before Christmas. This should have a tendency to revive trade.

REVERSE GEAR SENTENCES.

Besides making puns, our English cousins are fond of composing palindromes—that is, combinations of words that read the same backward as forward. The most famous palindrome is that by Dr. Edward Brewer, supposed to be the greeting of Adam to Eve:

"Madam, I'm Adam."

In the current number of an English magazine I discover some recent attempts of this sort, which are more ingenious that poetical:

GERMANY IS DOOMED

A STRIKING INDICTMENT

Special to The Examiner:

NEW YORK, Dec. 15.—The New York Times is one to-day with the strongest anti-German editorial published in the United States since the war began. It says that just a few months ago the world only dimly comprehended Germany. Now it knows her thoroughly. For the sake of their own peace and safety the world's great nations must demolish that towering structure of militarism. Germany, says the Times, is doomed to sure defeat. Bankrupt in statesmanship, over-matched in arms, under the moral condemnation of the civilized world, befriended only by dying nations, Germany pours out the blood of her heroic subjects in a hopeless struggle that postpones but cannot alter the fatal decrees.

W. A. A. SEND A DONATION

Some time ago Miss Plummer and Miss Arnoldi appealed to the Women's Art Association of Canada to assist them to collect an emergency fund which they require for their work for the Canadian soldiers at Salisbury Plain.

In response to this appeal the local branch of the Association sent seventy dolairs and fifty cents, the proceeds of Professor Squair's lecture.

The executive of the W.A.A. wish to thank Mr. Graham of the Empress, who entertained Professor Squair, and Mr. Veroun Fisk, who lent and operated the lantern used in connection with the lecture.

Heretofore, lectures under the auspices of the W.A.A. have been free, but the local branch, wishing to raise money for a work which must be dear to the hearts of all Canadians, sold tickets for Professor Squair's lecture.

Licenses For Five Tables

Must Be Taken Out by December 24th—The Finance Committee

Mr. O. O'Connell and Mr. M. Pappas waited upon the Finance Committee of the City Council last evening, and asked that Mr. Pappas be allowed to give his cheque for $520, being the license fee for thirteen billiard tables, the cheque not to be cashed until January 15th.

On motion of Mayor Buller and Ald. Stratton, it was moved that if Mr Pappas does not take out licenses for five billiard tables by December 24th next, the Chief Constable be authorized to take action against him, and if he does not pay for the remainder of the tables in use by January 15th, similar action will be instituted.

CAPACITY CROWDS AT ZACKS BROS' FIRE SALE

It is seldom that such capacity crowds have filled a Peterborough store as flocked to the Zacks Bros' fire sale on Saturday, and even on blustery, stormy Monday, and that they did not go away empty was amply evident by the arms-full of bundles that emerged from the doors in a steady stream. The buyers found the bargains so attractive that they loaded up with as much as they could carry. Messrs. Zacks Bros. seem determined to make a good job of it, and clear out the whole of the stock regardless of cost or value. The large staff of clerks attend to the wants of the buyers very quickly, and there has been very little waiting necessary. New lines are displayed as fast as the counters are cleared, and there are always fresh bargains to be picked up.

IN DIVERS WAYS.

Apparently Lord Fisher, fighting head of the British Admiralty, is being obeyed, and his curt injunction to the fleets, to "strike hard, strike often, and strike everywhere," is being regarded. At any rate very effective activity has followed his assumption of the leadership. The British naval victory in the south seas, has a gallant counter part in the feat of the plucky little British submarine, B 11, in the Dardanelles. To dive under five rows of mines and plant a torpedo in the vitals of a Turkish battleship, is something to be proud of; it is regarded as the most daring marine exploit that has developed during the war. Though the loss to the Turkish navy may be great, the ship destroyed was an old one, that would not have been in commission in the British navy. Turkey cannot boast of many warships, and the loss of even one is a matter of moment. Though the B 11 had to stay under water nine hours, she came out on top in every way, and continued the successes that have of late attended the operations of the British fleet. The British sailor gains his successes in divers ways.

A CHALLENGE TO CHRISTENDOM.

Turkey may not be regarded as a very valuable ally of Germany in a military sense; but she is evidently a satisfactory running mate in the matter of exploiting the "kultur" of German militarism. Turkey promises to show that she can be almost as conscienceless and brutal and cruel as Germany. The atrocities for which Turkey has achieved such bad eminence promise to be repeated in this war, especially in Armenia, where the people are already being hanged in the streets—in sympathy with the German method—to strike terror—to be an example to others. There are said to be 20,000 Christians in Armenia who are in danger of massacre. Among these will doubtless be many United States subjects, especially missionaries; and it would seem natural that that country would interfere, if in no other way, by protest. When war is waged against Christianity it would seem that all Christian nations would be absolved from obligations to neutrality, in its interests. Germany has declared war on civilization and the Christianity whose interests are involved, and universal Christendom is concerned in repelling the assault. The action of the mad Kaiser and the war lords in bringing about the reign of barbarity is a challenge to Christendom.

A FAMILY SQUABBLE.

"When rogues fall out, honest men get their dues." That applies to Germany and Austria. The latter country has not made a very brilliant showing in the war; but it does not lie with Germany to reproach her; for the all-puissant German army has fallen far short of implementing its programme. The Germans were to be in Paris the middle of September. After smashing the French, they were to invade England and capture London. Then they were to rush to the East and crush Russia's slow-moving armies. All this has failed to come to pass. Instead Germany is compelled to bend all her efforts to repel invasion of her own territory, something she will also fail of, if we should judge the future by the past. In the face of all this, Germany in an official statement, gives Austria a public and humiliating "calling down." No doubt Austria has done her best—she is not to blame if, after the hardest fighting the game goes against her. She is not to blame for the apparent fact that little Servia has, like a cat, nine lives, and comes up strong for another round, after having apparently been crushed. Germany is not a true "sport" when she whines and tries to put the blame for the failure of their put the blame for the failure and the reverses she is undeniably meeting every day, upon Austria. It is a sign of recognition of defeat, of the danger of ultimate failure, that she loses her temper and resorts to the fish-wife's weapon.

WILL BE STARVED OUT.

That the scarcity of food supplies in Germany will be a factor in finishing the war is suggested by the fact that the German government has issued instructions that potatoes are to be boiled with their skins, on, to avoid the loss of nutriment by peeling. There are reasons to assume that failure of food will have a large influence in terminating the war. Although German cities, many claim, as does Dresden, according to Mr. Melville Staples, who recently arrived here from that city, to have a year's supply of food, yet that will last only a year, and then, what? When the present supply is gone it cannot be replaced at home. Germany is not very largely a food producing country, and even if she were, there cannot be any considerable food-growing under war conditions. The country itself has not yet suffered from the effects that invasion will produce; but invasion is only a question of a very short time. The circle is narrowing both in the west and east. Then we shall see a cessation of most of the operations of industry, and the pressure from lack of food supply will begin to be keenly felt. La Presse, Montreal, had on a striking full-page picture showing a la carte, how largely Germany is dependent upon the outside world for food supplies. Germany normally imports vast quantities of food, which naturally she would not do if she could produce them at home. The United States sends her every year, twenty million bushels of wheat, and four million bushels of barley. Canada sends five million bushels of wheat and Russia, ten million bushels of wheat, forty million bushels of barley, sixty million pounds of butter, 1,600 millions of eggs. Germany gets from France in normal times, every year, 200,000 heads of live stock, sixty million pounds of meat, forty million dollars' worth of fruits, and sixteen million dollars' worth of wine. The Argentine furnishes six million bushels of wheat and large quantities of wool. From India comes ten million bushels of wheat, and Roumania ships three million bushels of wheat. Besides Germany draws from various other countries various other quantities and kinds of food.

The total of all these importations of food becomes important when it is remembered that now the supply is altogether cut off. The British, Australian, French and Japanese navies maintain an effective embargo, and it is evident that Germany will soon, be suffering from shortage of food to a greater extent than at present—to a fatal extent. And the invasion at both fronts now imminent and sure to come, will paralyze industrial operations as well as agriculture. In good time Germany will have to yield to exhaustion and will be spent as a fire when the fuel is consumed. When we add to the exhaustion from this cause, the hammer strokes of the increasingly victorious, allied armies, there is more than possibility of Germany and Austria being beaten to their knees; and the powers that entered into the battle of world domination will have to submit to world dictation of terms; for, not only will the warring powers, the Allies, have a voice in the settlement of the whole question, but the voice of civilization will demand that militarism and all its fruits be wiped out forever.

SHALL THE BARS BE CLOSED DURING WAR?

Special to The Examiner

TORONTO, Dec. 15.—Mr. Rowell's proposal to the Government to close all bars and clubs, that is, all social drinking places, during the war, and, after the war, to submit to the electors of the Province on a majority basis the question whether these places should be re-opened or not continues to occupy much public attention, and a pratical question, often heard asked is, "What will the Government do?"

Hon. F. G. Macdiarmid, the new Cabinet Minister, as far as is known, is the only member of the Government who has publicly referred to Mr. Rowell's offer. What he said is significant:

"I do not think," he declared "that we need concern ourselves greatly about Mr. Rowell. The people have told the Government of Sir James Whitney to go on with its good work in temperance as in other matters."

This statement reveals two points, first, that in spite of the sharp lessons for the Government in the two bye-elections of West Hamilton and Dundas County, its spokesman still keeps relying on past records—on the "Whitney tradition" — and does not realise that public opinion is swinging against the Government precisely because it shows lack of initiative and too great a leaning on the past.

In the second place, Macdiarmid's speech reveals the fact that he, as a responsible member of the Cabinet, is not favourably disposed to Mr. Rowell's proposal to close all bars and clubs during the war and that the Government probably intends to adopt a stand-pat attitude.

Why did not the Prime Minister himself, make this statement, is a natural question which is being asked these days. Hon. Mr. Hearst is regarded as a temperance man and apparently he does not want to bear the responsibility himself, although, as a matter of fact, he and his colleagues are responsible, and they must recognize it, for what Mr. McDairmid said. One suggestion is that the influence of the liquor interests with what they did for the Government last summer, is so strong that the Government cannot move eevn to adopt such a popular policy, and one so much in the public interest as to meet a definite critical situation by a definite method—to discourage drinking during the war by shutting all bars and clubs.

With the unemployment, as it is in the industrial centres of the Province the economic saving alone which would result in the closing of these drinking places during the war, would be very considerable. Ontario, in taking drastic steps, would only be following the lead of Russia, France, Great Britain and Manitoba.

TO WATCH GOVERNMENT.

House of Lords Will Meet While the Commons is Adjourned.

LONDON, Dec. 15.—The determination of the House of Commons not to sit again until Feb. 2 has excited considerable criticism, and the decision of the House of Lords, to reconvene on Jan. 6 is praised by the critics, who maintain that both Houses should sit intermittently for the purpose of keeping an eye on the executive branch of the Government.

Long sittings would not be necessary according to these critics, as there is no question of legislation or finance immediately impending. The sole duty of the House under prevailing conditions would be to keep an eye on the Cabinet, which with the aid of the Defence of the Realm Act, is in a position of almost arbitrary power.

After Two Years' Search.

MONTREAL, Dec. 15. — George Tremblay, for whom the local police had been searching for two years, was taken into custody on Saturday when he was located hiding in a trench in the basement of a house on Cadieux street. Tremblay had literally "dug himself in" and was found by accident by detectives under several feet of loose earth.

Tremblay was condemned two years ago by Judge Lafontaine to a fine of $500 or a term in prison for erecting and operating a still for the distilling of whisky. He was on bail at the time and when an effort was made to collect the fine or take Tremblay to Bordeaux, it was found he had left the city.

No Money For Funeral.

LONDON, Ont., Dec. 15.—Because he had no money to pay the funeral expenses of his child, which it is claimed died without receiving needed medical attention at birth, Mark Woodbury, a blacksmith, of Park avenue, threw the body of the infant in a creek in East London.

He was arrested and in the police court yesterday pleaded guilty. He was remanded a week for sentence.

Kaiser Seriously Ill?

BASLE, Switzerland, Dec. 15. — A private despatch from Berlin via Munich, reiterates the report that the Kaiser's condition is serious. It says:

"The Kaiser is suffering from serious bronchial pneumonia and must undergo an operation on his throat as soon as he is sufficiently strong. The Crown Prince has been summoned to Berlin."

THEY WANTED TO KNOW.

British Aircraft Refused Rescue If It Meant Internment.

LONDON, Dec. 15.—A telegram to Reuter's Telegram Co. from Flushing says that the Dutch steamer Orange Nassau has picked up two aviators in the North Sea.

The aviators proved to be a British officer and his mechanic, who had been compelled to descend upon the score account of the motor of their seaplane becoming disabled.

At first they refused to leave their craft until they were assured they would not be interned in Holland, whither the Orange Nassau was bound. It was reported that the aviators had been flying over Belgium, where they dropped five bombs.

OFFICERS LOSE HEAVILY.

British Casualties Up to Nov. 30th Total 3,466.

LONDON, Dec. 15.—The official officers' casualty list for the week ended Nov. 30 has been made public. It shows that in these seven days the British forces on the continent lost 79 officers killed and 151 wounded and that 33 were reported missing. This gives a total of 253 for the week.

Added to the previous totals, the last report shows that since the outbreak of hostilities Great Britain has had 966 officers killed and 1,918 wounded, while 582 have been reported missing. The total of casualties of officers up to date is, therefore, 3,466 men.

Society Nurses Inefficient.

LONDON, Dec. 15.—As a result of a protest from the National Council of Trained Nurses, that incompetent women are serving at the front, and in hospitals, Lord Kitchener, the War Secretary, has called on the council for a detailed report.

The press some time ago directed public attention to the fact that many eager young women, either wealthy or socially prominent, were clamoring for positions as nurses. While the motives of these young women are to be commended, it has been said that meagre training was hardly beneficial to the wounded.

Zeppelin Forced Back.

AMSTERDAM, Dec. 15.—A Zeppelin, proceeding in the direction of Dunkirk from Nieuport, Sunday was compelled to return, by the heavy gun fire of the allies, says a despatch from Ghent.

Broke Their Parole.

AMSTERDAM, Dec. 15.—Two German officers who had been interned at Bergen, in the Dutch Province of North Brabant, who made their escape from the country, despite the fact that they had given their parole, have arrived back from Germany, stating that they were ordered to return by the German authorities.

With Czar's General Staff.

OTTAWA, Dec. 15.—Lt.-Col. Herbert Mackie, of Toronto, and formerly of Pembroke, is now serving as a Staff officer with the Russian forces. Col. Mackie wired the Minister of Militia yesterday from Petrograd to that effect.

MOLTKE'S OUSTING FOR FALKENHAYN MEETS CRITICISM

German Papers Displeased by Change in Leadership of the General Staff

CITE CHECK AT DIXMUDE

THE HAGUE, Dec. 12, via London. —German newspapers which have just been received here show that the German press is much displeased by the sudden change in the leadership of the German military forces. They state that Count von Moltke has been "politely sidetracked" as chief of the general staff and that supreme command has been given to "a war minister whose behaviour towards the Reichstag in the Zabern incident was insulting." In the short biographies of Major-General von Falkenhayn which the newspapers are permitted to print they refer in a guarded way to what they term his failure up to the present time in the operations on the western front.

"Von Falkenhayn was appointed temporary chief of the general staff on October 25," says the Berliner Tageblatt. "He therefore has held the position since the fall of Antwerp. During this period have occurred the battles of the Yser and Dixmude. In this serious time, therefore, Von Falkenhayn have been uniting all the functions which during the war of 1870 were divided between Von Moltke and Von Roon."

It is intimated in these newspapers that there has been friction between Emperor William and Count Von Moltke, owing to a difference of opinion concerning the conduct of the campaign in the west; it being understood that while Von Moltke favoured energetic operations against the French centre, the Emperor was strongly inclined toward pushing the advance in the direction of Calais. As a result of this conflict of opinion, it is said Count Von Moltke retired to take the cure at Homburg, being, however, in actual need of medical attention.

Flanders Campaign Displeases Public.

General Von Falkenhayn then continued the operations in Flanders, under the direction of the Emperor, with results which are described as not wholly pleasing to the German public. Announcement was made five days ago that General Falkenhayn would remain at the head of the general staff, but that Count von Moltke might be given another mission.

The plan of campaign of Count von Moltke, as originally outlined, was to advance on Paris as rapidly as possible, and this led to the swift movement toward the French capital by General von Kluck and General von Hausen in August and September, which was ended by the forced retreat to the positions now occupied by the Germans in France. It is stated that friction between Emperor William and Count von Moltke first occurred at this time, the Emperor taking the ground that the move tactically was futile.

After the capture of Antwerp it was Von Moltke's desire, according to these reports, to concentrate efforts upon the Verdun-Toul line, while the Emperor, pointing to the possibility of an enveloping movement by the Allies or a break through the wedge which Von Moltke proposed to advance, favoured the continuation of operations against the forces of the Allies in Flanders.

This is the situation, it is now said, which finally led to Von Moltke's trip to Homburg and the installation Von Falkenhayn as chief of the general staff.

Detective Had Narrow Escape

VANCOUVER, Dec. 5.— Stepping back from his companions who were being questioned by two detectives, an Italian whipped out a revolver and levelled it at Detective Ricci. The detective was too quick for him, and by his alertness probably saved his life, for as the Italian swung around, Ricci caught the gleam of the reflected street light on the metal barrel of the gun, and struck out. Putting all his force into the blow the officer caught the Italian on the point of the chin. His arm dropped and before he could recover his balance or bring the gun up again, Detective Sinclair had grappled with him.

The incident occurred directly under the white glare of a street lamp at the corner of Cordova and Carroll Street, when at nine o'clock, the streets were crowded with shoppers. The man, whose name is said to be Joe Fata, and his four companions, one of whom was found to be carrying a long bladed stiletto and the others razors in their pockets, were all locked up.

Detectives Ricci and Sinclair had been watching the men for some time and growing suspicious of their actions decided to question them. They approached the Italians and stopped them with the usual warning that they were police officers. They started to lightly "frish" the men for unconcealed weapons, when the leader of the band drew the revolver.

The scuffle attracted a large crowd and it was with considerable difficulty that the detectives succeeded in clearing a passage way for their captives who they herded in front of them to the police station. A further search of the men at police headquarters revealed that several of them were carrying opened razors; one a stiletto and the other the revolver, which proved to be a .38 calibre gun. It was fully loaded.

THE RENWICK RECITAL

In the Assembly Hall of the Collegiate Institute last night a splendid recital was given by the advanced pupils of Mr. J. H. Renwick. The surprise was that although seventeen different proteges of Mr. Renwick contributed to the programme the numbers were uniform in their high standard and were individually worthy of high praise In spite of the unfavourable influence of the weather upon the attendance the hall was practically filled by an audience that proved itself beyond doubt highly pleased with the recital

In actual numbers the vocal selections held the preponderence last evening, but the instrumental renditions were no less striking than the many splendid vocal offerings It is not often that a musical recital takes the dignity of a first class concert, and yet the programme was so varied, and each number in itself so charmingly and suitably performed, that last night's event was one of the most pleasant musical affairs of the season.

In the realm of vocalism so splendidly represented last night by the double quartette, ladies' quartette and the sextette, the artistes and artists were: Mrs. J. H. Renwick, Misses Maysie Armstrong, Charlotte Hanson, Ethel Elliott, Lillian Garbutt, and Messrs. Edward Jones, John Anderson, Asa Huycke, Fred Miles and Edward Hanrahan. The opening and closing numbers were especially meritorious. In both the voices blended beautifully, the balance was good, and the interpretation of the harmony especially praiseworthy. In these selections particularly the excellent preparation was in evidence, and the effect attained must have been very gratifying to both the students and their teacher.

In the ladies' quartette, Misses Garbutt and Armstrong took the solo parts well, while Misses Hanson and Elliott sang in splendid harmony.

The first two vocal solos were sung by Misses Bentley and Lytell. Though a mere girl, Miss Bentley's singing was sweet and her rendition very creditable. Miss Lytell has a good contralto voice which she used to good advantage in the singing of Behrend's "The Gift."

Miss Hanson and Mr. Huycke gave a much appreciated duet. Miss Hanson in her solo was also given a hearty reception. She possesses a mezzo-soprano voice of rich tone and quality, and her singing has come to be known and looked forward to among local audiences. Mr. Huycke also gave a solo, Handel's "Honour and Arms," which he sang with good expression. His voice is one of unusual range and power, and in his solo last night he also exhibited fine control.

Mr. Edward Jones delighted the audience with his ringing tenor voice in a Mendelssohn composition. His range is large and his voice possesses remarkable power and accuracy. Last night Mr. Jones maintained his reputation as one of the City's leading tenor soloists without difficulty.

Miss Maysie Armstrong, who took first soprano in the double quartette, also sang "For All Eternity," in splendid voice. Her voice is particularly admirable in the singing of the very high notes, which she takes with ease, and with a clearness and roundness of tone that is also characteristic of her singing in the lower ranges. The beautiful violin obligata by Miss Mignon Tellgman augmented the pleasing effect of Miss Armstrong's solo. Both young ladies merited the hearty applause they received.

Miss Etta Kemp's solo was also very greatly appreciated. Miss Kemp's ability to soar far above the staff with sureness and accuracy constitutes a part of the value of her pleasing voice. She rendered "Sing On," a Denza composition, very acceptably indeed.

Miss Lillian Garbutt's rich contralto voice, was used with splendid effect in her singing of "What from Vengeance." Miss Garbutt's solo was heartily received, and in it she demonstrated the versatility, clearness and power of her voice, in a charming manner.

The instrumental portion of the programme was of the same standard as the vocal work. The first intimation given the audience of the excellence of this department of the evening's entertainment was in Miss Elsie Adam's admirable piano solo. Miss Adams' playing demonstrated that she possesses and has developed many qualities that are requisites to the successful musician. Her renditon of that difficult selection "Motto Perpetuo," by Paff, was a splendid exponent of that particular variety of instrumental accomplishment.

Miss Marjorie Mather, in her successful and meritorious interpretation of Mendelssohn's "Andante and Rondo Cappricioso," played with remarkable expression and unusually masterful technique. Miss Mather's work on the pianoforte, splendid as it is, shows signs of a great capacity for further development.

A surprising mastery of the piano was evinced by Miss Grace Gumpricht. Her accuracy, expression and versatility on the piano were well displayed in the rendition of Op. 27, No. 2, from Beethoven's famous moonlight Sonata. Her performance was a very brilliant one and Miss Gumpricht was deservedly highly rewarded by the reception she received. That she has attained a high degree of achievement was amply shown last night.

Miss Sophie Elliott rendered a delightfuul piano solo. Her offering was Von Weber's "Invitation to the Dance," which was presented in splendid fashion. Miss Elliott's musical abilfty was once more brought home to a Peterborough audience last night.

If applause is any indication of what number was most appreciated, the piano quartette undoubtedly made a marked impression on the audience last night. The first parts were taken by the Misses Telgmann and Gumpricht, and the second parts by Misses Mather and McFarlane. The four young ladies acquited themselves admirably and those present last night will long remember the resonant harmony of that unusual number.

Mr. J. H. Renwick accompanied every number. This department was well looked after by him, whose accompaniments added to the success of the recital.

France Has Big Reserve

Three Million Men, Under 30 Years of Age, Waiting for a General Offensive—6,000,000 is Strength

ONLY HALF IN FIELDS

NEW YORK, Dec. 14.—The American's Paris correspondent writes under date of Dec. 5:

The French army consists, not of 6,000,000 men, but double that number. Of these 6,000,000, one-half have been under fire. The remaining 3,000,000 have not left their garrison. Very few people in Europe realize that General Joffre holds this tremendous army, still unblooded, in reserve. Every man of this 3,000,000 is under thirty, and is fully trained and adequately equipped for battle, ready to march at a moment's notice.

Opposed to the French 3,000,000 that have been under fire are—not 1,500,000 Germans, but 2,250,000—not thirty army corps, but fifty-six.

With half a million British troops and about 100,000 Belgians, the allies have on the western battle front 3,000,000 men against 2,250,000 Germans. But owing to General Joffre's careful nursing of his troops, the forces actually in the firing line are roughly equal.

Of the French three million, one-half are doing the fighting while the other half relieve them in the trenches and fill the gaps caused by casualties.

French Strength.

The strength of the French army I have said, is 6,000,000. The figures are arived at as follows: The active army includes three classes under the flag, or 1,500,000. With these go the reserve of the active army, that is, men of the four preceding classes, or 2,000,000. This gives 3,500,000 men all under twenty-eight years. In addition there are the first-class of the Territorials (under thirty, 500,000; the remaining 2,000,000 are made up of the 1914 and 1915 classes already under the colours (about 1,000,000, colonial trops, Algerians, Moroccans, Senegalese; foreign volunteer corps (over 400,000), and the foreign legion.

Can Add Many More.

These 6,000,000 could be expanded to 8,500,000 by a general call to arms such as was resorted to for the Revolutionary wars in 1793. The additional 2,500,000 would be made up of territorials between the ages of 30 and 45.

The question still remains why Joffre, with his tremendous resources in men, allowed the Germans to sweep across Belgium down to the gates of Paris.

Briefly stated, the answer is that at the outbreak of the war the French concentrated mainly on Germany's western frontier, leaving the northern forts of Maubeuge, Lille, Laon, La Fere and Rheims efficiently manned. When the Belgian army delayed the German army at Liege Joffre took advantage of the respite to move an army to the Meuse and the Belgian frontier.

The One Mistake.

He struck, but under unfavourable conditions. Joffre underestimated the German strength by two army corps, and preferred a strategical retreat to holding on and sacrificing life until adequate reinforcements came up.

The retreat involved the abandonment of the northern forts, which, owing to political reasons, had never been modernized. The mistake the French then made, now freely admitted, was in failing to destroy the forts, because the Germans, by strengthening them, have been able to cling to the Aisne region for two months after their retreat from the Marne. Had the French destroyed their out-of-date forts there would never have been any battle of the Aisne.

Over five million cups of Salada tea are consumed every day. This is proof positive of the public appreciation of quality.

CHOLERA AS A WEAPON

Austrian General Officially Proposed to Use Germs in War

LONDON, Dec. 15. — The Morning Post correspondent at Petrograc says:

The Army Messenger, a newspaper issued by the Russian Staff of the armies at the front, has now learned that the use of cholera cultures as a weapon in modern warfare was proposed officially by Gen. von Hetzendorf for use against the Russians and Servians. Gen. von Hetzendorf's formal proposal was presented to the Supreme Military Council of Austria and warmly opposed by Count Berchtold, Austrian Minister for Foreign Affairs, who threatened, if such measure were formally sanctioned, to resign his official post.

The Army Messenger, by the way, is the official organ of the Russian army during this war. It was created after the armies had got to work, and is distributed practically only at the front. It is a perfectly trustworthy organ.

GERMANS IN RETREAT

Grand Duke Nicholas Ready to Shatter the German Line Along the Lowicz Front

VICTORY IS NEAR

LONDON, Dec. 15. — The Daily Telegraph's special correspondent at Petrograd telegraphs:—

It is expected that the Russian success on the front at Przasnysz and Czenstochowa will soon be reflected in the operations around Lowicz. The fact that the Russian cavalry was able to strike a blow at the retreating enemy as far northwest as Zuromin, only five miles from the frontier of East Prussia, shows that the German retreat has been hurried, and none too orderly. The Russians have taken into their own hands the initiative to the north of the Bzura river. There are grounds for assuming that the further development of the struggle will be to the advantage of the Russians, in spite of the fact that it was necessary for them to fall back a little in order to take up a new line. The general situation on the right flank is quite satisfactory.

The German advance north of the Vistula has now been disposed of. It was not a very large force as matters go nowadays—about two army corps—but its attacks were repeated, stubborn and fiery. The Germans advanced from the direction of Mlawa and and were met and repulsed with heavy losses somewhere in the neighborhood of Przasnysz and Ziechanow—that is astride of the railways from Danzig to Warsaw. They went to ground, establishing themselves on the line of Przasnysz-Ziechanow, and from this position delivered an endless series of attacks. During the next six days the Russians quietly accepted the attacks and repulsed them with loss every time, until the ardor of the Germans somewhat cooled, which was on the 8th, when an official bulletin reported that fighting here "has acquired a less strenuous character."

Subsequent attacks were only partial, and obviously directed towards the forestalling of expected Russian attacks, or possibly to draw the Russians. Three days later the official bulletin simply noted the fact that the conflict was developing on normal lines, which is one of the Grand Duke's modest expressions to describe what often passes elsewhere than in Russia for victory.

On the 12th the moment came which had been waited and prepared for by the Russians.

They delivered their attack and captured the enemy's fortified positions and drove him back towards the political frontier, nearly 30 miles away, but as battle was arranged by the Russian commanders the Germans have been compelled to cover a great deal more than 30 miles without yet reaching home and comparative safety.

It appears the Russians directed their attacks mainly upon the German left, and by a successful flanking movement drove the Germans out from their fortified position. Pressing still heavily upon the left, the Russians flung the Germans back from the line of railway and roads leading directly towards the German frontier. The Germans, therefore, were compelled to retreat due west until they reached a point at the village of Boghan, where the roads fork north and northwest. The main body appears to have taken the shortest road home, and Russian horse charged into the thick of them at Zuromin, doing fearful execution.

The General Staff of the Russian army has given out the following communication under date of Sunday, Dec. 13:

"There has been no engagement of importance on any of the fronts. In the region of Mlawa we continue to force back the German troops, who are in retreat.

More than 500 Polish towns have been ruined, according to various accounts from the correspondents. Both armies accuse the other of looting and cruelty. The flight of the civilians from Lodz was one of the most tragic episodes of the war, while one correspondent pictured the fate of Kalics as a repetition of Louvain.

A distressing feature of the fighting in Poland is the blood kindred pitted against each other. There are several hundred thousand Poles in the Russian ranks and several hundred thousand more in the ranks of the Germans and Austrians.

The Germans claim a distinct gain in their position in northern Poland, although they are not believed to be as near to Warsaw as the report last week indicated. On the other hand, the Russians announce a strategic realignment of their forces in that field, which strengthens their position.

In a late report last night the Austrians announce that they have reoccupied the important point of Dukla, to the north of the Carpathians, on a line south of Przemysl and Cracow, but nearer to the former, with the capture of 9,000 prisoners.

"Oh, Cousin Hiram and Aunt Mehitable—so kind you dropped in on us!"

Good News For Fur Buyers

Barrie's Limited, Christmas Sale Timely and Welcome—Liberal Concessions in Prices to Meet War Conditions

Christmas service, as usual, was the answer at Barrie's, Limited, respecting the shopping in Furs this year. Thousands of dollars' worth of beautiful fur sets and individual pieces were on display in the large showrooms, corner of Brock and George streets. A wide selection of exquisite styles and novelties, and fashionable peltries, a rich inspiration of gift choosidg. The recent fall of snow, in company with the return of Jack Frost, is convincing many people that of sensible and practical gifts there are none to surpass the gift of furs.

The beauty of milady's furs depends on the luxuriance of fresh, bright, lustrous fur, arranged in the most pleasing models. Thin, uneven, straggly, or streaked fur is far from the "correct thing." Furs to give a smart stylish effect, as well as warmth and protection, must pass a rigid examination by Barrie's experienced furriers. An expert who knows good pelts and the characteristics of fur-bearing animals devotes personal attention to every inch of material made up into garments for Barrie's, Limited four stores at Edmonton, Regina, Saskatoon, and here in Peterborough. Garments are made to order quickly, if the store fails to fit you. Persian Lamb and Seal coats for ladies, and Coon, Beaver and fur-lined coats for gentlemen constitute some of the best examples of this firm's work. Not only is Barrie's Limited a safe place to buy furs, but Peterborough people, especially, have long had the assurance of the resourcefulness of the firm in meeting every fur need correctly. A perfect and fashionable out-door garment in the highest degree of fur luxury and comfort is within easy reach of our citizens. The newest models can be just as easily obtained in Peterborough as in any other city of the Dominion.

A pre-Christmas Sale at Barrie's, to effect a reduction in the heavy stocks of exclusive sets, is both timely and welcome to buyers. It has been generously planned, the reductions ranging from one-third to one-half off the prices prevailing a year ago. As there is no cross road to quick clearance of even such lovely furs as these other than reduced price, the concessions made will bring joy to those in search of a pretty set of furs for gift purposes.

French Advance in Alsace is Almost Within Striking Distance of the Strong German Fortresses - Germans Compelled to Abandon Positions

PARIS, Dec. 15. — In Belgium, along the Lorraine frontier in front of Metz, and in Alsace the French forced the Germans back, according to official announcements made last night.

Owing to the constantly increasing pressure which is being exerted by Gen. Joffre's right wing army against the Germans in the Woevre region, where the invading forces are steadily being forced back on the line between the Meuse fortresses and Metz, the developments in this region are the most significant of the day.

A violent cannonade directed against the German artillery positions located on the heights along the Meuse river failed to provoke any considerable response, and air scouts made a reconnaissance which resulted in the discovery that the German batteries had abandoned their positions, the fury of the French fire evidently having forced them to withdraw to the north.

Infantry engagements were fought in the Mortmare forest, in the Woevre region, the French finally taking the German trenches on a front extending for 500 metres along the edge of the wood. Two counter-attacks were directed against the victorious French troops, in an effort to retake the lost positions, but despite the violence of the onslaughts the French were able to maintain their advantage, effectively repelling the attacking forces.

Strassburg and Muhlhausen are still threatened by the French advance in Alsace. Gains have been made daily against the German resistance in this territory, despite the difficult terrain and the superiority of the German defensive positions.

Following a lull of about twelve hours in the fighting in Flanders, the French resumed the offensive with great vigor, utilizing considerable numbers of the recently arrived reinforcements. In several attacks which they directed against the German positions on the east bank of the Yser they drove the invaders from their first line of trenches and occupied the pits, which they immediately strengthened for their own occupancy. The Germans retaliated with a series of violent counter-attacks against the British trenches to the west of Hollebeke, but their attacks were met successfully, and the massed divisions of Germans quired back.

"In Belgium several attacks by the French troops have resulted in progress along the Ypres canal and to the west of Hollebeke. Several violent counter attacks have all been repulsed by our troops.

"The railway station of Commercy, Department of Meuse, was bombarded yesterday by batteries firing from a very great distance, but insignificant damage was done.

"In Alsace an offensive movement resumed by the enemy to the northwest of Cernay has been repulsed.

"On the rest of the front there is nothing to report."

The following official report was given out in the afternoon:—

"There is nothing important to report between the North Sea and the Oise. In the region of the Aisne to the northwest of Soupir the enemy has violently bombarded our trenches. We have replied and thrown them into disorder. There was no infantry attack from either side in this region.

"Our artillery has destroyed important works on the slope of the Argonne.

"In the forest of Crurie we have advanced slightly by mining. There have been no attacks by the enemy there.

"On the heights of the Meuse there was a violent cannonade, the enemy's batteries seeming to have been forced to withdraw toward the north.

"In the region of the Woevre, after having taken a line of trenches on a front of 500 yards in the forest of Mortmare our troops repulsed two violent counter-attacks.

"In Alsace our advance has carried our front as far as the line of Hill number 425, to the south of Steinbach, the bridge of Ashpach, the bridge of Drinighoffen."

Big Guns Busy In Alsace.

BERLIN, Dec. 15. — (Via The Hague to London.)—Despatches from the southwestern war zone report that a violent artillery duel was in progress Sunday in upper Alsace, arising apparently from an attempt by the French to advance in the direction of Altkirch. The firing lasted from 11 in the morning until late in the afternoon. The result of the fighting has not been reported.

Toronto Globe Writer Gives His Impression of Peterborough --Tells of Local Factories and What They Are Doing

Mr. Norman Lambert, one of the staff of the Toronto Globe, was in Peterborough a few days ago, and here are some of his impressions as given in Saturday's issue of the Globe:

PETERBOROUGH, Dec. 7.— There is a packing company in this city which, in addition to its wholesale trade throughout this and other countries, operates three retail shops in Peterborough. From those shops are sold chiefly meats and butter and eggs, and they constitute a fairly accurate barometer by which to guage the economic temperature of the community. "Compared with a year ago," said the Manager of the packing company to The Globe correspondent, "our three retail branches are making just as many sales to-day. But in these sales one-third less cash is represented than in an equal volume of business a year ago. The secret of it is that the people are buying cheaper kinds of food?"

What is true of Peterborough undoubtedly applies to other parts of Ontario, and could be shown, if it were possible to inspect and publish the contents of every butcher's cash book throughout the Province. Economy amongst the consuming public happens to be the best policy also for the butcher, if another statement of the Peterborough packer can be accepted as a fair judgment. He said: "Our trade in Ontario, taking the whole Province from east to west and north to south, is as good as ever it was." While people seem to be buying less costly cuts of beef, the net profits to the dealer appear to be undiminished.

Metal Industries Affected.

In the case of this particular community, the general reduction in the expenditures upon meats as reflected from the statement of the butchers, is traceable, to a large extent, to the closing down of certain large and important industries. The Canadian General Electric plant, which ordinarily employs two thousand hands practically closed down two or three days after war was declared, and at the present time only some four or five hundred men out of the entire staff are at work. Here, as elsewhere, the metal industries have been affected more than almost any other line of manufacture. The cream-separator factory and the agricultural implement plant are running on very much reduced strength.

Other Lines Working Overtime.

On the other hand Mr. Ackerman leather business, Turner's tent and blanket firm, and the sawmill, which is engaged just now in turning out material for wooden boxes, are very busy working overtime with full staffs of men. In the activity of these industries others are indirectly benefitted. For instance, in Mr. Ackerman's business and saddlery plant where they are working overtime on war orders for the british Government, everything entering into the saddles, girth-straps and bridles which are being made, comes from other Canadian factories. The leather has been made in Berlin, Ontario; the buckles were made in Whitby and the stirrups for the saddles came from Gananoque and Niagara Falls. The British Government alone has ordered two million dollars' worth of saddles from Canada, so that what one sees in one factory jus now is simply an example of what may be seen all over the Dominion, wherever the leather industry is established.

Agricultural Conditions.

Going northwest to Peterborough from Belleville, through Madoc and Campbellford, from Hastings county into Peterborough county, one passes through a famous cheese district all the way. Dairying and hog-raising seem to be the two chief sources of income to this section of the Province. Immediately surrounding Peterborough the crops have nto been good this year. A dry season made the crops of hay and grain very light and there is now a scarcity of feed for live stock. Notwithstanding this shortage of fodder, the farmers in this district have ten per cent. more swine than they had a year ago, according to the word of the manager of the packing house in this city. Further evidence collected from the bank shows that the Peterborough farmer is in good financial standing, and is as in the case of Belleville, the principal mainstay in the community at the present time. While the extensive curtailment and retrenchment in several of the industries here have borne upon the merchants rather heavily, the farmer has remained a constant actor in the situation, with his usual trade connection in the town unimpaired. The fall season has been very favourable to work on the land, and it is reported here that on all sides the acreage devoted to winter wheat has been very materially increased.

Resources to Be Drawn Upon.

The unemployed element within the municipality is not in a serious condition of want, and will not become a heavy burden upon the city. Most of those who have been thrown out of work from the industries which have been mentioned are able to live here and await the resumption of activities in the idle factories. The uniformly prosperous conditions prevailing here prior to the outbreak of war will make that task of waiting all the easier. Is is rumoured here that some of the concerns which have been doing very little during the past three months will take on a large proportion of their usual staffs after the new year, in order to cope with the demands for renewed supplies in Canada. In the meantime economy is being practiced in the homes, as well as in the places of business. In a place like this, fortunately, there are resources to be drawn upon on the proverbial "rainy day," and consequenlty on the face of things, life in Peterborough appears to be about the same as usual.

A SENSATIONAL PURCHASE OF FUR GARMENTS

E. N. McWilliams Offers the Public New Goods at Less Than Wholesale Prices

With the advent of severe winter weather came simultaneously the announcement from McWilliams, the furrier, of a big purchase of well-selected furs from a wholesaler who unfortunately, for himself, but fortunately for the general public, was obliged to dispose of the stock at astonishingly low prices, making it possible for McWilliams to sell the furs retail at figures that are less than he would otherwise be compelled to pay for the furs wholesale.

If you had any idea of making a fur purchase this season it would be well to examine the stock McWilliams now carries, and you will be greatly astonished at the quality of the furs and the remarkable low cost of them as compared with previous prices.

SALISBURY, Eng., Dec. 15.—Orders were issued from the headquarters of the Canadian camp yesterday, that no leave would be granted to the men after the first of January, thus giving rise to the belief that the force will leave for the front next month.

Twelve officers who refused to return to Canada with the remainder of those unattached, in order to get commissions in the second contingent, have been given commissions in the regulars and territorials. Among them are Capt. Fred Dent, of Toronto, to the Royal Fusiliers; Capt. D. Douglas Eppes, of Toronto, and Lieut. Robinson, of London, to the Duke of Cornwall's Light Infantry; Capt. Mouch, of Kingston, to the Northumberland Fusiliers; Lieut. Watts, of Brantford, to the Royal Warwickshire Regiment; Lieut. Fletcher, of the York Rangers, to the Tenth Devons.

Some To Go To Egypt.

MONTREAL, Dec. 15.—That the Canadian contingent, or at least a portion of it is probably bound for Egypt is the information contained in a communication received here yesterday from a member of the 14th battalion, first Royal Montreal regiment. He says: "Just got word we are to leave for Egypt this week. Some excitement I can tell you."

CHOLLY DISAPPEARS.

"Oh, what has become of Cholly?" he asked.

"I wonder where he can be!"

She answered. "Daisy carried him home

As a souvenir spoor, you see."

CRUELTY TO THE BRITISH

German Prison Guards Single Them Out for Brutality

ROME, Dec. 15.—A French priest, who has returned from Minden, where a number of British prisoners were confined, has given a friend of mine an appalling account of cruelties practiced upon our captured countrymen by their German jailers. While the French prisoners were very well treated and the Russians were not so badly, the British were singled out for ill-treatment. "German soldiers," said the French priest, "kick the British prisoners in the stomach and break guns over their backs. They force them to sleep out in marshy places, so that many are now consumptive. The British are almost starved, and such have been their tortures that thirty of them have asked to be shot."

Turkey Must Go

Her Influence Over Egypt Will Have to End Says Cromer

LONDON, Dec. 15.—An interesting letter on the future of Egypt from Lord Cromer, former British Agent General and the greatest living authority on Egypt, appears in The Times. He says:—

"If, as appears to be the case, the Khedive has unwisely thrown in his lot with the Germans, his defection will probably be of no great political importance. The personal influence of his highness in Egypt is at present slight. Whatever may be the future political status of that country, Abbas Hilmy can no longer be its ruler. The artificial connections between Turkey and Egypt have long been seriously detrimental to the interests of the latter country. Egypt, as a result of the war, must be wholly and irrevocably relieved of the pernicious mortmain of Turkish sovereignty."

KITCHENER IS HIS BAPTISMAL NAME

He Resides at 30 Park Street and is the Son of a Soldier

Benjamin Kitchener Smith is the name of a late acquisition to the birth register at the City Hall. Young Kitchener made his debut into this world shortly after the war cloud broke and at a time when Kitchener, of national fame, was making his debut as chief executive of the British War Office. Benjamin Kitchen Smith was established on August 20th, or twenty-two days after war was declared between Britain and Germany. Kitchener of Khartoum was established in his present position just a few days previous.

No doubt it was this fact that inspired John C. Smith, the man who discovered Kitchener Smith to adopt the surname of one of the greatest generals that the world has ever known for the middle name of one of his offspring. It is significant to note that John C. Smith, father of the child, is a soldier. Number thirty Park Street is the home of Peterborough's Kitchener.

COMMISSIONER WILL VISIT PETERBOROUGH

Commissioner and Mrs. Richards, newly appointed heads of the Salvation Army in Canada, will visit Peterborough on Saturday and Sunday, February 27th and 28th. A public reception will be accorded the distinguished visitors. Meetings will be held in the Grand Opera House on Sunday afternoon and evening.

It will be remembered that Commissioner Richards was appointed to succeed the late Commissioner Rees who lost his life in the wreck of the Empress of Ireland, in June last.

SHALL WE HAVE ELECTIONS BY ACCLAMATION?

To the Editor of The Examiner:

Dear Sir,—I believe that it is generally thought throughout the city that the Council acted wisely when they voted $10,000 to the patriotic fund.

I would like to suggest that there be no election next year for Mayor, Aldermen, Water Commissioners, School Board, etc., but allow them to remain as they are by acclamation, thus saving to the city perhaps from five to seven hundred dollars. I should be glad if other citizens would take the same means I have taken, to express their views on the above subject

Yours truly,
H. RUSH.

AFTERMATH OF THE PATRIOTIC CAMPAIGN

And still they come. Yesterday was a gratifying day from a financial point of view, and a very good one for the Fund. Those who might think that the ability to absorb into the fund, money, ceased with the activity of Friday night, are mistaken. This institution is right on the job. In fact the door of the safety deposit vault, where the cash is immured, will remain on the jar for some time. While there is life in the organization there is hope for more subscriptions. That this hope is no barren one is easily seen.

Mr. T. E. Bradburn handed in $200 and Mr. Harold Morrow another $100. Mr. James McCurdy of Waupun, Wis., sends a nice contribution. He is an Old Boy of Peterborough, who has prospered in his American home. The gift to the fund will make Mr. McCurdy no less a good American citizen and will help the people o fthe land of his birth. Mr. E. J. Waterman, of 213 Hunter Street, gives the Fund a dresser and stand in oak finish. British bevel glass, oval, three drawers—such a piece of furniture as he sells for $13.00. Here is a chance for some housekeeper. Delivered right on the door step.

People have been more than kind. There are a whole lot of real good men who lend a hand. Mr. J. E. A. Fitzgerald sends over half a ton of coal and kindling, and tells us to charge it to the town pump and take it out in water, which, translated, means a gift to the fund. Messrs. Adamson and Dobbin, whose business as stove vendors is to make it hot for people, have the thanks of all concerned for the use of heating facilities during the campaign. They sent a good stove and men who came and wrestled with lengths of pipe all in good humour. Putting up stove pipes is a real test of patience and some control of language.

The Bell Telephone Co., through Mr. Doan, communicated the intelligence that the use of the 'phone at the rooms came as another gift Good. 'Phone 50,000 was really overworked most of the time, but stood up to the strain in fine style. It was a mighty help in carrying on the activities of the ten days.

All of the features of the campaign—that is, the publicity end of the business—such as the big coloured placard, the big thermometer, banners and such things, have been carefully put away in sweet pickle. These will be kept carefully and will presently have a historic value. On the night of December 11th, 1915, there will be a re-union of all the workers, and such a night as will develop has not been seen. Just you watch, and then trot around hoping and begging for an invitation. The principal decorations, in addition to the Chairman of the Executive, F. D. Kerr, Adjt. McElhiney and Walter Stocker will be the big banners and placards. Things will hum.

There will be a few straggling notes of the fortunes of the Fund, from time ot time, but this about closes the functions of the Publicity Committee. Sorry, after all, it is over. It was good while it lasted. The newspapers were more than helpful. They boosted, which is several degrees in advance of mere help. It was a good cause and a great success. The great Bonaparte is accused of uttering the platitude that "one newspaper is more to be feared than a thousand bayonets." But, it will be observed, while he had a passing acquaintance with such implements he certainly had no conception of the class of bayonet and the physical force behind them that now adorn the trenches of the Allies, and when thrust by British arms perforate the Germans trying to cross the Yser And so, when another patriotic or other public effort is to be made the same Publicity Committee is ready to volunteer and help push things to a final and satisfactory conclusion That their names may go down to posterity they are mentioned, being Mr. Cowan, Mr. R. M. Glover, Mr. W. Stocker and the chairman. In hoc Signo vinces.

Cobb Relates War Details

n Address to the Green Room Club New York—Simply Indescribable

NEW YORK, Dec. 14.—Two hundred members of the Green Room Club, who tendered Irvin S. Cobb, war correspondent with the German army in Belgium, a "welcome home" dinner last night, started to laugh when he was introduced as one who could talk about the humourous side of the fighting in Europe.

They continued to laugh for the first five minutes of the address, but after that, as one horror after another was described, gasps and even sobs took the place of the laughter Cobb finished his talk with the statement: "If I could really describe the war to you, I would not be writing for the newspapers. I would crowd the recording angel out of a job."

In telling his hearers about Belgium, Cobb said he was replying to many questions asked him before the dinner commenced.

"It is something you cannot describe," he said. "Think of a people 7,000,000 strong, where everything was gay with laughter at the outbreak of the war. Then picture this people reduced in four months' fighting from seven million to three million, and of these three million, picture one million as dependent on the charity of the United States tonight for their support, and then you have a faint idea of the war and Belgium.

All Gibbering Idiots.

"I came to a fort that had been blown to pieces by shells. A German told me that as his men rushed into the fort, they found it burning, and thought no living being could be in it. Then came out of a tunnel, a black man, stripped of his clothing. Behind him came 200 others, all hairless and black and naked. Some were blind, all were deaf, most of them were insane.

"He told me some were in a hospital. I said I would like to see them, and he replied: "Oh, no, you would not, for every one that lives is a gibbering idiot."

At a railroad station, bandages torn from wounded men lay four feet deep on the ground. Women, who obviously were gently bred, dropped down into that mess and slept between the arrival of trains loaded with wounded from the front. We saw nine men in the last stages of lockjaw, who had been five days in a hospital train. The greatest crime of the war is that a wounded man is of no more use. Trains loaded with German wounded lay on side tracks for days, while the road was kept open rushing fresh troops to the battle line.

"First aid bandages often stayed on a man's wound for nine days, while gangrene set in, and yet he was some distance from the base hospital for which the train had started. You could see the trains pasing, gaily decorated with flags. And you heard the young men in them singing. That was the raw material going to the mill. You could see eighteen hundred men coming back in a single hospital train, and indeed could catch the odours from the train before it came into sight. Thas was the finished product on the way back from the mill.

"I tell you every penny sent to help in that stricken territory is bread cast upon the waters. To give is the greatest honour and privilege that you who are spared can have."

GERMANY'S AIR FLEET LARGEST

WASHINGTON, Dec. 14.—The present strength in air craft of the European countries is indicated in official estimates submitted by the naval committee and made public to-day.

It shows that Austria-Hungary this month has 600 aeroplanes and eight dirigibles; Belgium, sixty aeroplanes, no dirigibles; Great Britain, 900 aeroplanes, 12 dirigibles; France, 1,400 aeroplanes, 30 dirigibles; Germany, 1,400 aeroplanes, sixty dirigibles; Italy, 300 aeroplanes, four dirigibles; Japan, 20 aeroplanes, two dirigibles; Russia, 1,000 aeroplanes, 20 dirigibles.

HOW CAN WAR CYCLIST WORK DURING WINTER

PARIS, Dec. 12.—Now that the wintry blast is upon us and there seems no prospect of the contending forces on the continent going into winter uarters, the question is how the scout, as cyclist or motorist, is to do his work. Snow, rain, sleet, frost, thaw will all range themselves in his path. This may put into use the brilliant ski corps of the great Continental armies, of whose utility so little is known up to the present.

Norway claims to be the first European army which put the ski to practical use, making every unit more or less an accomplished skieur. This was in 1850. A very few years later Switzerland inaugurated the ski as a winter sport and now claims to have the most formidable ski-ing force in the world.

France and Italy soon followed suit and with their great mountain passes corps were quickly formed to become expert in this particular branch of military science, the most notable of which is the famous Chasseurs Alpins of the French army, formed in 1908.

Germany and Austria have also added ski-corps to their armies and it is largely by the help of this contingent that communications are kept open in the Black Forest during the severe winters.

Russia, too, has a thoroughly efficient ski army, while Britain is the one European power of consequence that has had no use hitherto for a ski contingent. If, however, such a corps is needed for winter use during the present war, thousands of winter sportsmen who migrate to Switzerland annually for this very purpose, should be right there when the call comes.

As regards the use of the ski in war time that has yet to be proved, but it is absolutely indispensable in dispatch work and outpost duty during severe weather. Up to the present time the Swiss army holds the records in manoeuvres. It has covered 37 miles of Alpine territory in a day in full marching order. Some years ago a Swiss division covered 25 kilometres (15 miles) in 1 1-2 hours, including an ascent of 5,000 feet. The ski corps of France has also performed some fine mountain ascents in record times. The Russian army in Finland, covered 880 kilometres in 29 days, while in the Caucasus it has also done fine work.

The equipment of ski-corps differs but little from that of infantry except that they are more warmly clad and are provided with yellow glasses to save the eyes from prolonged exposures to the snow. The men carry spades and axes in addition to rifles to cut roads when necessary for the advance of the army. When the skier is engaged upon dispatch work and time is a first consideration, "ski-jering" is brought into play. The soldiers, attached to a horse by means of a whiffle bar, are drawn sleigh-like over the snow at a great pace. Skis can also be used as stretchers for the wounded.

REVOLTS ARE REPORTED

SARGANS, Switzerland, Dec. 15.—Frequent revolts and executions of Bohemian and Moravian soldiers, who refused to fight against the Russians and Servians are reported here. A recent instance is reported in which a battalion of the 28th Bohemian Regiment was ordered to proceed to Poland but refused. For two days the men held out against the orders of their superiors it is declared, when the ringleaders and one out of every ten soldiers were then executed.

TRAINING IN FRANCE

British Regiments Are Available When Needed—Interesting Letter From Brother of Local Resident

That a number of the British territorials are completing their training in France, where they are in reserve and available when needed is evidenced by a letter received by Mrs. G. G. Evans, 5 McGill Street, from her brother, Lance Corporal Wilfrid Martin of F. Company "Artists Rifles" of the British Expeditionary Force, written from some place in France on Nov. 19th. He says in part:

"We are still in this God-forsaken village, where we can buy nothing, not even a loaf of bread, but our supplies are sent in daily. There was great excitment to-day when two huge bags of mail arrived. You have no idea of how excited we get at receiving a parcel. tI is like being at school again.

I am amused at you thinking of sending pyjamas. I sleep in all my clothes, except boots, puttees and tunic, and put on my great coat with a blanket and Mackintosh. I have slept on nothing but straw on a concrete floor since I arrived. I shan't like to look a bed in the face and as for a sheet, well, words fail me.

I have a cold bath in the open each morning with frost on the ground. Don't think I ever felt so fit in spite of bully beef and bread and jam only.

Nov. 23, 1914.

Please send me in next parcel two dozen bachelor's buttons. Am fed up with sewing buttons on. We haven't struck the firing line and don't know that we ever shall, although we all want to have a go at the "blighters." We are still in our billets, as there is no room for us in the town. We are not being overworked. We have long route marches, dig trenches, bury horses, etc., and do all sort of things. It is all on the drill side, but we see some exciting things, especially in the air.

I have had some lovely parcels of chocolates, cigarettes, figs and potted meats, so I am fairly well off at present. The muffler you sent was an excellent idea and is nice and warm. We play bridge in the evenings and manage to be cheery and make a noise.

Cheer up, there is nothing for you to be down-hearted about.

Yours,
WILFRID.

LEAGUE BUSY WITH CHRISTMAS BELIEF WORKS

Last night the meeting of the Epworth League of George Street Church was of a consecrated nature. Those present were divided into a number of groups, each with a leader, for the purpose of discussing the topic, which was "A Character Sketch of Peter." Then a short time was spent in giving testimony. Just prior to the close of the meeting several matters of business were attended to, including the subject of relief work in connection with Christmas cheer, and the choosing of delegates for the coming Young Men's Conference. During the evening Miss S. Huycke gave a Scripture reading. Considering the very unfavourable weather there was a fairly good attendance.

Garbage Contract Becomes Effective

New 1915 Contract is Decorated With Signatures of Messrs. Mitchell and Turner

Messrs. George Mitchell and Frank Turner have attached their signatures to the contract governing the collection of refuse and garbage, throughout the city, during the year 1915. Some difficulty was experienced at first in that the contractors claimed that they omitted to take into consideration, schools, factories and churches, when tendering for the work. A recent act of the Provincial Parliament makes the collection of refuse and garbage from the above three named institutions compulsory. Sanitary Inspector Spence states that this new provision was thoroughly explained to all parties tendering. The matter was eventually straightened out, and the contract duly signed and sealed.

Frequency of Collections.

Now that the city has arranged to carry out the will of the Provincial Legislature, respecting the collection of refuse and garbage from schools, factories and churches, it might be opportune to state that the collections may be made to suit the institutions concerned. That is to say, if a church prefers to pile the ashes in a heap and have them removed in the spring, they may do so, or on the other hand the collector will call twice a week. This applies to factories and schools as well. In any case they should notify Sanitary Inspector Spence of their wishes in this respect, when arrangements will be made accordingly.

THE PROOF.

"Miss Olgirl is a very obliging woman."

"In what respect?"

SIR WILFRID DECLARES MILITARISM MUST GO

MONTREAL, Dec. 13.—Sir Wilfrid Laurier's speech at the Reform Clu' here on Saturday night was at once a plea and a vindication—an urgent plea for the preservation of the party truce, a strong vindication of the stand taken by the British Government. There must be no drawing back in the fight with German militarism for the civilization of the world.

"I was asked by someone," Sir Wilfrid said, "why should you support the Government in their policy of sending men to the front? Why should the Liberal party not remain quiet and passive, and leave all the worries to the Government? And my answer was this: 'I have no particular love for the Government, but I love my country. I love the land of my ancestors, France. I love above all the land of liberty, England, and rather than I, in my position as leader of the Liberal party, should remain passive and quiescent I would go out of public life and out of life altogether.'

"So long as there is danger at the front," Sir Wilfrid continued (his words were cheered again and again), "so long as the victory has not been won, that Belgium has not been restored to her rights, that France has not been made secure against aggression, that small nations have not the charter of their independence and security, I am for my part willing to stand by the Prime Minister of Great Britain in the position he has taken."

FREEDOM THE BRITISH KEYNOTE.

Throughout his speech Sir Wilfrid spoke with a strength and power which belied the half-bantering plaint he made when promising to speak again at the club next year — the plaint, "a man at my time of life cannot make engagements from year to year." While he frowned on any idea of making party capital out of the situation, Sir Wilfrid gave one or two words of warning. Referring to hints of conscription, he said: "Freedom is the keynote of British institutions. You find it from the bottom rung of the ladder to the top. There is freedom at every point, freedom in everything. There is no conscription in Great Britain. There never was. There never shall be. I see it is discussed in the newspapers; we have heard it discussed by eminent authorities that Great Britain will be bound to follow suit, and, like France and Germany and Italy, will have to resort to conscription.

CONSCRIPTION REPUGNANT.

"Conscription," Sir Wilfrid gravely continued, "is repugnant to the British character. The Britisher was always slow to go to war, never really preparing till he was in it,, but always managing to come out on the top of it. Conscription does not exist in Great Britain nor in the dependencies of Great Britain. And it is this freedom which, to the surprise and wonder and to the dismay of the German Emperor, of German Generals, of German professors and German diplomats, has caused this rush from every part of the British Empire to assist the Mother Country in the stupendous struggle in which she is now engaged.

"Freedom breeds loyalty; coercion always was the mother of resistance and rebellion."

NEW SITUATION FOR CANADA.

The declaration of war had created a new situation for Canada, Sir Wilfrid proceeded. The moment that Great Britain was at war Canada was at war—that was a principle which the Liberal party had proclaimed while in office. It was a principle which the Liberal party had not only proclaimed, but had endeavoured to provide for in a manner consistent with the new situation created by the development of Canada not as a colony, but as a nation within the Empire. That principle was not accepted by all. It was the occasion of a great deal of misrepresentation. It contributed largely to the defeat of 1911.

"But," Sir Wilfrid continued, "better ten times that we should stand here defeated for having had the courage to bring to the Canadian people the new duties which they had to face, rather than still be in office for having shirked a duty which was incumbent upon the administration of the day."

BRITAIN DID CANADA'S DUTY.

The truth of the principle that when Great Britain was at war Canada also was at war was demonstrated in the port of Montreal following the declaration of war. Vessels loaded with produce had to remain in port, for they were liable to seizure by the enemy, and they could not leave port until the seas had been swept by the British navy. "The duty was performed by the British navy," Sir Wilfrid continued, "which, in my conviction and in your conviction, it behoved the Canadian people to take up themselves."

SAVE CANADA BY CANADIANS.

There was another illustration of the truth of the principle in the declaration recently made by the German Ambassador at Washington. Referring to the Monroe doctrine, the German Ambassador had said that Germany might and could invade Canada. Sir Wilfrid went on: "Whatever the Monroe doctrine may mean, it is not a principle of international law. It is a matter of policy for the American Government and the American people. Whatever it may mean — and according to the interpretation put on it by an eminent authority in the United States, it is only for the American people to dictate what it means—but even if it meant everything that was claimed for it at the time the Canadian navy was under discussion, even if it meant as much as that, I do not hesitate to say, and to say it as a Canadian, that if Canada has to be saved I do not want her to be saved by the Monroe doctrine, but by the Canadian people.

"Not that if the unfortunate day came when we might have to defend ourselves against German invasion I would not gladly accept the assistance of the American people. But I do not want to ask it. I want the Canadian people to rely upon themselves. And need I tell you, gentlemen, that no nation is worthy of being a nation unless it is ready at all times to defend its own independence and to fight for it if need be.

"TIN-POT NAVY" USEFUL.

"But I do not believe that there need be cause for fear of a German invasion so long as the allied armies keep the Germans at bay, and so long as Great Britain maintains her supremacy on the seas. Yet, although there is no fear of a German invasion at the present time, although I refuse to contemplate the possibility of a defeat of the allied armies, still there is one danger from which Canada is never free—the possibility of a raid on our border States. British Columbia was trembling at the opening of the war, glad to have the small and much-despised Rainbow, glad to have a crew once more on the Rainbow and the Niobe, feeling that in this so-called 'tin-pot navy' there was security for our trade and our shores."

AUSTRALIAN NAVY HELPS.

The danger of invasion was lessened when the German corsair, the Emden, was sunk by the battleship Sydney of the Australian navy, and lessened still further by the German defeat off the Falkland Islands. As to the danger of invasion from the border States, Sir Wilfrid said he hoped and believed that the Government was wide awake to the situation and that it was taking proper precautions.

There was the question, should Canada, in the exercise of her freedom, take part in the war? "I am surprised," said Sir Wilfrid, "that such a question was ever asked. There are men among us who while they did not actually say that we should not take part in the war gave it but a half-support, and rather damned the whole question in the way they supported it if they supported it at all.

"Speaking at the Guildhall, Mr. Asquith said that if England had stood passive, her arms folded, when Belgium, poor, small Belgium, was risking her all against a powerful enemy—if Britain had remained passive she would have covered herself with dishonour. And to this sentiment we all say 'Yes.' I ask you, my fellow-countrymen, English-Canadians, Irish-Canadians, French-Canadians: Canadians, could we contemplate the possibility of remaining quiescent when the French armies and the British armies were fighting against the powerful German hosts for the freedom of France, for the freedom of Belgium and the civilization of the world? I do not hesitate to apply to Canada the words of Mr. Asquith. If Canada had remained passive and quiescent we should have covered ourselves with dishonour."

NO ELECTION COMING.

Sir Wilfrid declared that he did not see any imminence of a general election. In support of his view he quoted the proclamation published in The Canada Gazette in July dispensing with the revision of the electoral lists in the unorganised districts of Ontario and the creation of electoral divisions in Manitoba for the present year. The proclamation showed, Sir Wilfrid said, that the Governor-General had been advised by the Government that there was no immediate cause for a general election. And if in July last there was no cause for a general election, there was still less cause in December. The war has not made a case for a general election.

"LIBERALS—BE PATIENT."

"We have taken no issue with the Government," Sir Wilfrid continued. "We have supported their policy, and I say I cannot believe that the Government would seriously entertain the possibility of having an election or reversing their opinion of last summer, even if they are being pushed from behind by some urgent and misguided men. For you Liberals," Sir Wilfrid concluded, "I have now no further message than this: to be firm, courageous and patient, especially patient. The time will come when we shall have to resume consideration of our domestic problems. When that day comes our position will be all the stronger as we have been patient."

TUNNEL-BORING RECORDS BROKEN.

World's records for tunnel-boring have been established by Messrs. Foley Bros., Welch & Stewart, contractors on the C.P.R. Rogers Pass tunnel scheme. Last month, states Mr. A. C. Dennis, superintendent of construction for the contractors, 817 feet of the "pioneer" heading—the preliminary shaft running parallel to the main passage, from which operations are directed, at several points—was excavated. The American record for a month's tunnel-boring was 810 feet, and this feat was accomplished in 31 days, while there were only 30 days last month.

The maximum amount of excavation on a tunnel heading for a day was formerly 36 feet, this projection being accomplished on the Simplon tunnel through the Alps. This record was eclipsed one day last month on the tunnel through the Selkirks, when 37 feet were excavated. The world's record was beaten also for a week, 22 feet of rock being bored.

As a result of the rapid progress now being made with the tunneling operations, the contractors are now confident that they will put the Rogers Pass tunnel through several months earlier than their contract with the Canadian Pacific calls for. The five-mile, double-tracked passage through the base of Mount Macdonald is to be ready, according to the terms of the firm's agreement, by the end of 1916. At the present rate of projection it is estimated that the tunnel will be completed in the summer of 1916.

There remain 10,000 feet of the "pioneer" shaft yet to be driven, 10,640 feet having already been bored. At the west end of construction 17 feet of the preliminary shaft, and 640 feet of the main passage was excavated last month. From the eastern portal 527 feet of the former and 586 feet of the latter were projected.

Although the work has been well advanced, the hardest part of the actual boring has yet to be done. Mr. Dennis states that the next two miles through the heart of the mountain will have to be dug out of a particularly hard kind of rock.

DEFEAT IS ADMITTED

Austrians Confess Servian Campaign is a Failure

LONDON, Dec. 15.—The most striking feature of the day's official news is the candid admission by the Austrian Government of the defeat of the Austrian army in Servia, and apparently of the abandonment of its third attempt at invasion of the territory of its small Slav neighbor.

While attributing the failure to the enemy's superior force, the Austrian War Office announces plainly an extended retirement and many losses.

"New measures will consequently be taken to repel the enemy," says the Austrian statement. Apparently that means that the Austrian army directed against Servia will assume a defensive line. Against its repulse Austria balances the occupation of Belgrade as an asset to the good. An unofficial despatch to Reuter's Telegram Co. from Nish, however, reports that "the Servians, after a fierce battle have re-occupied Belgrade."

150 BAGS OF FLOUR DISTRIBUTED

By Relief Officer Miller, Also 50 Bags of Potatoes

Mr. F. W Miller, Relief Officer, reports that he has distributed one hundred and fifty bags of flour, fifty bags of potatoes and ten cords of wood. These commodities were donated by various citizens. Mr. Miller states that there is an unusual demand for charity, a condition which will be more potent before the winter is out. Every organization in the City is making heroic efforts to meet the demand for help which owes its creation indirectly to the war.

The Charity Board.

A letter was read at last night's meeting of the Charity Board from a carpenter offering to sell about seventy cords of slabs, principally maple and beech, the rest hemlock, at $4.10 per cord. The communication was received.

Citizens of Peterborough Will Be Urged To Co-operate

In a Movement That Has For Its Object the Wider Use of the National Flag—"If We Hadn't That Flag We Would Be Ruined" Said Mr. Travers—Stirring Addresses by Patriotic Citizens.

A meeting to advocate the wider use of the national flag and to consider means by which that end could be obtained, was held in the City Council Chamber last evening. The meeting culminated with the appointment of a committee to formulate a plan by which that end could be accomplished, the committee to report back at a meeting to be held on Friday evening next. The Committee is composed of Messrs. J. J. Hartley, D. Walker, W. R. Travers, Lieut.-Col. Miller, V. Eastwood, Canon J. C. Davidson, D. O'Connell, Mrs. A. P. McLean and Mrs. (Dr.) Young.

Mr. W. R. Travers, as chairman of the meeting, made a stirring appeal for a wider and more practical recognition of the national emblem. He told of the Americans, who displayed nothing but the Stars and Stripes. To-day they are displaying their national flag with the Union Jack. "If we hadn't that flag we would be ruined," said Mr. Travers with considerable emphasis.

Endorsed the Movement.

Two letters, one from Lansdowne Lodge, Sons of England, and the other from the Daughters of the Empire, endorsing the movement inaugurated by Canon Davidson, were read by His Worship Mayor Buller. "The more we encourage patriotism in this country, the better it will be for us" said the Mayor.

Rev. Canon Davidson, the originator of the movement to make wider use of the flag, especially during the present crisis, said that the movement was significant by reason of the widespread interest manifested by the citizens of Peterborough. For years he had felt, as many others had felt towards the almost entire absence of flags on public holidays and other significant occasions. Things had drifted along in this way until finally the war cloud broke. What more opportune time than now to manifest patriotism in a more practical form?

KEEP THE FLAG FLYING

"Means Great Things."

Mr. V. Eastwood said that the powerful sentiment called forth by traditional and reverential display of the flag means great things in our daily life as well as it does when displayed on the field of battle. Mr. Eastwood moved that a committee be appointed to formulate means to bring into effect the more general use of the flag in our daily lives. This was seconded by Mr. W. R. G. Higgins and unanimously endorsed by the meeting.

"Our neighbours across the line, God bless them, cover everything with Old Glory," said Lieut. Col. Miller. No matter what part of the Empire we live in, the sight of the Union Jack always thrills us. Our soldiers have followed the flag up the steepest hills and through the darkest dale. We are proud to possess a flag that is never unfurled except in honour's cause. The late Lord Roberts received the Victoria Cross for recovering a flag during a campaign that was being conducted in India. The meeting here to-night is just a nucleus of what is to follow. How often we see men pass a flag that is unfurled to the breeze without honouring it.

The Worse for Wear.

Miss H. Peck rose to endorse the sentiment of the meeting. She called attention to the tattered emblem that hung from the flagpole at the top of the Normal School.

Mr. D. Walker assured Miss Peck that the flag would come down in the morning. He thought that he was doing a patriotic thing by putting it up.

Mr. J. A. Aylmer referred to the number of American tourists to Canada who invariably brought flags with them. "How many of us ever take flags over there?" he asked.

Mr. A. F. Tomlins reminded the meeting that the lower provinces were wont to respect the flag to a much greater degree than was the case in Ontario. Children in the schools were taught the significance of the flag, and the speaker, as a boy, remembers when he would not be allowed to pass a flag without repeating the words "God Save the Queen."

Mr. R. E. Harding and Mr. F. D. Kerr also expressed their appreciation of the action instituted by Canon Davidson.

A Dual Purpose.

The Committe will be called upon to decide just what extent the flag should be displayed. It is altogether probable that they will recommend its continual use throughout the period of the war and its use on specific occasions following the war. Householders, as well as heads of public institutions will be urged to assist in the movement.

The ladies present at the meeting were Mrs. (Dr.) Young, Mrs. A. P. McLean, Miss H. Peck and Miss L. Pearce. To one of the ladies, the meeting served a dual purpose. It enabled her to listen to an interesting dissertation on the national emblem, also to continue the operation of knitting an article that may some day find its way to the scene of the present Homeric contest.

SOCIETIES REPRESENTED.

The following named societies have adopted resolutions endorsing the project: Officers of the 57th Regiment, Daughters of the Empire, the Home Guard, Sons of England, Lansdowne Lodge, the Independent Order of Oddfellows, Otonabee Lodge, and the Women's War Fund Committee.

The Daughters of the Empire submitted the following resolution in the form of a communication which was read by Mayor Buller at the meeting. "It was moved by Mrs. Vincent Eastwood and seconded by Mrs. H. Rush, that the secretary be advised to send to the Mayor of the City the statement that if a movement be inaugurated making for the further use of our flag as a National Emblem, the Daughters of the Empire promise their endorsation and co-operation."

A letter was also received from Mr. A. W. Cressman, expressing the opinion that the matter under consideration is of such importance that it is strange that it was not taken up before and a forward policy adopted.

CITY HALL PARAGRAPHS

A letter has been received from Mayor Euler, of Berlin, asking the Peterborough City Council to sign a memorial to the Legislature, to the effect that profits from public utilities, such as Hydro-Electric, be paid over to the Council. The matter has been laid over.

DRAIN COMPLETED.

The marsh drain at Windsor, over eight miles long, believed to be the longest of its kind in Ontario, has been completed at a cost of $50,000. It has an average depth of six feet.

USUAL GRANT.

A communication has been received from the Peterborough Poultry Association asking for the usual grant. This has been passed by the Finance Committee. The grant amounts to $75.

BY-LAW DEFEATED.

Winnipeg voters defeated by a majority less than one hundred the by-law to advance $40,000 to the Winnipeg Exhibition.

SALE OF DEBENTURES.

Wood, Grundy and Company have been granted an extension of the option covering the sale of Peterborough pavement debentures. Six thousand dollars worth have been sold to date. The option to sell the rest has been extended to December 31st.

NEW CITY HALL.

On New Year's Day the citizens of Sarnia will vote on a by-law for the erection of a new $60,000 City Hall. The old City Hall was destroyed by fire a few days ago.

THE VOTERS' LIST.

Complaints against the 1915 voters' list will be heard this evening in the City Council Chamber. His Honour Judge Huycke will preside. There are nineteen appeals in all.

WILL SUBMIT BY-LAW.

Mount Forest Council has decided to submit to the ratepayers a by-law authorising the expenditure of $12,000 for the adaptation of the present town electric light system to Hydro power and for the installation of new electric pumps.

"Men are always late. I have waited here since 6 o'clock for my husband to come, and it is now 7.30."

"At what hour were you to meet him?" asked the woman who had joined her.

"At 5 o'clock."

HEARTS HEAD THE SCOTTISH LEAGUE WITH A COMFORTABLE LEAD

There seems to be no stopping of the Heart of Midlothian this year, and that notwithstanding the fact that they have sent so many prominent players to fight for their King and Country. How pleasant it must be for these men to hear every week that their team is still brushing everything before them and that they top the Southern League with a comfortable lead. Hearts have only lost one game this season, and that, strange to say, by one of the last clubs considered likely to do so, namely, Dumbarton. I have no doubt when the "Sons of the Rock" visit Tynecastle on 18th March next there will be a desire for a great revenge.

Celtic Follow Well.

Four points behind, the Celts keep plodding along, and the least slip of the Hearts would let last year's champions take possession of premier place. The Parkhead men made mince meat of Queen's Park on Saturday. Surprising results were Dumabrtons' win at Kirkcaldy. Ayr United's victory at Dundee and Motherwell's big score over Falkirk. It is hard to reconcile Motherwell's win with their defeat by Hamilton last week. Ayr seems to be the surprise team of the year, and their promotion to the charmed circle is now fully justified.

Manchester Beaten.

Manchester City have been beaten for the second time this season, and that badly, by Everton. A very clever performance was that of Newcastle at Blackburn, and Bolton Wanderers are due some praise for defeating Middlesbrough by such a pronounced score. Oldham got over the biggest hurdle of the day by sharing points with Aston Villa, and thus retain their place at the top of the table.

Proud Preston.

Preston North End were in their element against Arsenal, and managed to stand up against the big guns and get home with victory. Derby County just managed to get home by the odd goal with Bury as their opponents, an the Rams are still at the top of the second division. Leeds fairly romped home against Leicester by the highest score of the day.

Reading Still Lead.

There was nothing sensational in the Southern League. Reading, the leaders, had a close struggle with Exeter. Swindon did splendidly at Millwall, and Queen's Park Rangers pleased their friends by trouncing Southend United.

Y. M. C. A. NOTES

The first session of the wrestling class taught by Mr. H. B. Cowan was held last evening, the start being made with eight young men. Mr. Cowan explained the more simple holds and set a number of exercises of wrestling. The class will meet each Monday evening through the winter months, and as much interest is being manifested in this class of work, it is expected that at least twenty-five fellows will enroll themselves.

The schedule has been drawn up for the Collegiate Bowling League, which consists of eight teams of three men each. The schedule covers the next two months and the games will be bowled four afternoons a week.

To add a little side interest and arouse the members of the Bible Club to secure new members a contest is being conducted between Mr. Wearing's and Mr. Meserve's classes to see which class will have the best attendance next Monday evening.

The postponed meeting of the Board of Directors will be held this evening at 6.30 o'clock and a special meeting of the Ministers' Association will be held with a lunch at 8 o'clock.

Boys' Department.

The Boys' Department of the Y.M.C.A. will be a real live place when the boys get their Christmas holidays. A line programme has been arranged for the boys, consisting of a checker, chess and billiard tournament. Extra games will be secured and everything done to accommodate the large number of boys who will be at the rooms morning, afternoon and evening for twelve days.

On Wednesday evening, Dec. 23rd the boys will have their Christmas tree. This is the one big night in the "Y" for the boys. A large tree is erected in the game room, beautifully decorated and covered with presents sent in by the parents for their boys.

The tennis court has been boarded in for a skating ring and if the cold weather continues we will have the rink in good shape by the first of the week.

A large turnout of the Boys' Bible Study groups is requested for this week as the boys' secretary has business of importance to bring before them.

To-night, intermediate gymnasium class at 7.30 o'clock.

Last night in the Business Boys' Basketball League the Pontiacs defeated the Tecumsehs by a score of 12 to 3.

Big Score For The Vets

The old reliables under Capt. Dobbin again proved that the old supposedly "has beens" can come back. In the game last night between the Veterans and Pirates the old boys had everything their own way from the sound of the whistle till the end of the game. The youngsters, under Bill Rew, put up a hard and plucky fight, but the Veterans were too fast for them. Every man of the Veteran team scored at least one basket, and Best and Dobbin scored almost at will. The final score was 44 to 12, with Best high man for the winners and Rew and English dividing the honours for the Pirates.

Veterans: Dobbin., r.f.; Robertson, l.f.; McCarrell, c.; Best, l.g.; Richardson, r.g. Pirates: Rew, r.f.; Brown, l.f.; English, c.; Austin, l.g.; Laing, r.g.

Sobbs—Yes. I guess it's passed by the censor.

Jim Driscoll Is Going To Be A Soldier

Jem Driscoll, the little Welshman who was for some time a claimant of the world's featherweight title, as well as being the holder of the Lonsdale belt, emblematic of the championship of Great Britain, was born in Cardiff, Wales, thirty-four years ago to-day, Dec. 15, 1886. Jem is now going to do his fighting on the battlefield, as it was reported last week that he had enlisted in the Welsh Horse Regiment which is in training at Norfolk. Jem is a veteran of the ring, and his fistic feats inspired many Paddies to enter the profession of fisticuffs, with the result that the Welsh boxers have been making a great showing of late years.

Most distinguished of the Welsh boxers, of course, is Mr. Frederick Hall Thomas, vegetarian and student of literature, who, under the alias of Freddie Welsh, has attained the light weight championship of the world. The example of Driscoll doubtless had its effect in inducing Welsh to enter the ring, but it is unlikely that Freddie will emulate Jem in joining the British Army.

Besides Driscoll and Welsh there have been several other British champions and near-champions of Welsh birth in recent years, including Bill Benyon, the bantam-weight title holder, and Percy Jones, who captured the flyweight honours.

Driscoll was not the first native of Cardiff to attain pugilistic honours. For more than a century pugilism has enjoyed popularity in that city, and it has turned out a great many scrappers. Perhaps the one best remembered by Canadian fans is Tommy West, who was born in Cardiff, in 1870, and who was long one of the ablest welters of the American ring. Tommy fought Joe Walcott, the Barbados Demon, four times, and never got worse than a draw. The first of West's sessions with the Demon was staged at a New York club in 1896. Tommy had made quite a reputation on the Pacific Coast and as a fighter in Uncle Sam's navy, but the metropolitan fans knew little of him. West went in as a substitute for another fighter who had been afflicted with cold feet at the idea of meeting the negro. The Demon smiled indulgently when the cherubic Welshman climbed into the ring, but West quickly demonstrated to Walcott and to the crowd that he wasn't a joke. The black was knocked down repeatedly, and at the end of the nineteen rounds was mightily lucky to get a draw decision. The next year West whipped Walcott and he repeated the trick in 1900. Tommy Ryan was too much for West, however. The Welshman's last appearance in the ring was in Louisville in 1901, when he was knocked out by Marvin Hart.

Jem Driscoll started scrapping in 1901. Early in his career he whipped George Dixon and other good men. He visited America in 1908, making a good showing against some of the best of American lightweights and featherweights. Driscoll's last important ring appearance was at Cardiff a couple of years ago, when he fought a twenty-round draw with Owen Moran.

Driscoll fought Freddie Welsh, his countryman, at Cardiff, in 1910, but lost on a foul. While on this side Jem outpointed Matty Baldwin and Grover Hayes and made a good showing against Leach Cross and Abe. Attell. Driscoll is rather short for a cavalryman, standing only five feet, four inches, but if he shows as much class on the battlefield as he has in the ring he should become a general in short order.

Driscoll is only one of dozens of British boxers who have enlisted and there are now very few flatic fighters left in England. Bombardier Wells is said to have offered his services, but was refused, as the families of three of his brothers who are at the front are dependent upon the Bom-

ACTIVITY IN THE CURLING WORLD

The curling season is almost here. Last night at a meeting of the skips of the Curling Club the personnel of the 24 rinks for the local competition was decided. On Monday night next a meeting of the club will be held to decide the skips and rinks for the District Cup and Tankard Competitions, and on Saturday a meeting for the balloting on the names of new members will be held.

Mr. Robt. Neill has presented to the club three splendid chandeliers which decorate and illuminate the Curling Club rooms. They are the finishing touch and the fine new rooms are open now in the evening for members of the club. The ice is making fast this weather, and if the cold spell continues curling will be in progress before many days.

CANADA LEARNING HOW

There was once a good woman who couldn't make pies, but had two kind neighbours who kept her supplied with that article of food.

One day her two neighbours got to fighting, and so badly injured one another that neither of them was able to make pies for some considerable time.

What did the pie-less one do? Go without a pie? Not much. She hunted up a cook book and found out how to make pies herself.

Canada to-day is in the position of the lady-who-couldn't-make-pies.

There are many things she does not make at home because she has been getting them so easily from Continental Europe. But now her neighbours in Europe are at war with one another and so—for some time to come—cannot supply those things.

And after the war if over—if not before—perhaps our neighbours in Europe will be coming to Canada for some of this "pie,"—importing from Canada some of the things that Canada now imports from them.

"Canada can have the "pie" — "home-made pie," and all the better for being home-made.

THE MARKETS

CHICAGO, Dec. 14.—Unexpected enlargement of United States visible total supply acted as more than an offset in wheat today for an advance due mainly to bullish cables. The market closed steady, but 1c to 1½c under Saturday night. Other cereals, too, showed net declines, corn ½c to ¾c and oats a shade to ⅛c to ⅝c. Provisions gained 5c to 10c.

WINNIPEG GRAIN MARKET.

WINNIPEG, Dec. 14.—An advance of 1½d on the Liverpool market caused a fairly strong opening in the market here today. Prices were ½d to 1c higher, and exporters were good buyers, speculators being the principal sellers.

Oats opened ⅝c higher, but weakened later. Flax opened ⅝c higher for May and advanced 1c later. Previous to closing a sharp break occurred on the big increase in the U. S. visible and the kaiser's state of health. Wheat closed ⅝c to ¾c lower, oats ⅜c lower, and flax 1⅛c to 1⅜c higher.

The cash market was quiet in all grains, No. 1 northern and lower grades being the only ones wanted. Cash wheat closed ⅛c lower.

Inspections for two days were 418 cars, as against 2030 last year, and in sight were 240.

MONTREAL GRAIN MARKET.

MONTREAL, Dec. 14.—There was a good demand from foreign buyers for Manitoba spring wheat today, and as cables were stronger at a further advance of 7½d to 10½d per quarter, the sales of 15 loads were made for December-January and January shipment. There was also some enquiry for barley, but owing to the difficulty of buying any quantity in the west exporters are not in a position to make offers. The local market for coarse grains continues quiet, the demand being only for odd car lots at steady prices. Demand for flour is quiet, and the market is without any new feature. The trade in millfeed is active and the undertone to the market is strong.

There is no change in the condition of the market for butter or cheese, business in both being rather quiet.

Eggs are active and firm.

MONTREAL LIVE STOCK.

MONTREAL, Dec. 14.—At the Montreal Stock Yards, west end market, this was Christmas market, in that the supply of cattle was much larger than usual, the number of head offered being 1300 in excess of this day week. There was a heavy fall of snow Sunday night, but the weather today was mild, and this, coupled with the general quiet condition of trade here, tended to curtail operations to some extent, consequently the market was void of its usual activity at this season of the year, but on the whole a fair amount of business was done.

Butchers' cattle, choice, $7.75 to $8; do., medium, $6 to $7.25; do., common, $5.25 to $6; canners, $4 to $5; butchers' cattle, choice cows, $6.50 to $6.75; do., medium, $5.50 to $6.25; do., bulls, $5.25 to $7; milkers, choice, each, $70 to $75; do., common and medium, each, $60 to $65; springers, $60 to $65.

Alien Has Legal Rights.

OTTAWA, Dec. 15.—An alien of an enemy nationality who goes about his business peaceably is entitled to his rights under the law, according to a judgment of Mr. Justice MacDonald, of British Columbia, a copy of which has been received here.

An Austrian named Tohay, sought to recover damages from the Crow's Nest Coal Co. for injuries owing to negligence, and the company put up the defence that as the war is on, the alien enemy was not entitled to rights which otherwise would be his.

The judge refers to the order-in-council, declaring that peaceable aliens are entitled to the protection of the law, and interprets it as meaning that it applies also to the negligence of companies.

Socialists Postpone Conference.

COPENHAGEN, Dec. 15. — (Via London.) — The peace conference summoned by the Socialist Societies of the Scandinavian countries, which was to have opened here on Dec. 6, it is learned, has been postponed until January. The official explanation is that the American delegates were unable to reach Denmark in time for the earlier date. Several Danish papers doubt whether the conference will be held as there have been protests that the holding of the gathering might develop matters not consistent with Denmark's attitude of strict neutrality.

WOUNDED FILL 1,100 HOSPITALS IN BERLIN ALONE

70 p.c. RETURN TO FIGHT

Berlin has at present about 1,100 hospitals for the wounded, the smallest accommodating 40 cases while the larger ones have from 400 to 600 beds.

In all these are said to be about 10,000 wounded in Berlin hospitals, the number being maintained fairly constant, although the individuel patients are constantly changing. A very large proportion of the wounded, it is stated, are soon discharged as again fit for duty and return to the front.

No definite figures are available but an army surgean who has had large experience both in the field and in the base and reserve hospitals estimated that about 70 per cent. of the wounded are returning or will return to duty, only 30 per cent. being permanently unfitted for military service.

A correspondent was taken through six of the larger Berlin hospitals and found there many of the wounded from a recent campaign against Warsaw and Ivangorod. These men had had a particularly trying experience. Many of them, wounded before Ivangorod for example, had been transported in waggons for two days before reaching the Russian railroads and had been another two to four days enroute over the Russian railroads before reaching the German railroads at Kattowitz, Silesia.

Thence to Berlin the transport had gone forward smoothly and comfortably in the wonderful German hospital trains to Berlin but the first part of the journey had been a protracted stage of pain and discomfort. Nevertheless they were practically all in good spirits and in most cases making rapid progress toward recovery.

Field hospitals are erected quickly. A visit was paid to a new "barrack hospital" composed of wooden, transportable barracks, each holding 30 men. In a few days this hospital to hold 1,200 had sprung up on Tempelhofer field, hot and cold water had been installed, heating service provided, a thoroughly modern operating room equipped and it was figured that in four days, if necessary, the entire hospital could be taken to pieces and placed on automobiles ready for shipment to any place required.

Little is said in the German papers about sickness in the army. There has been considerable enteric trouble but this is disappearing with the advent of cold weather. The entire army in the West had been vaccinated against typhoid, the men assigned to service in the East have in addition to be inoculated against cholera.

SAVING.

Blessed are the thrifty, for they shall save things and have them in time of need. But some people are more blessed than others, because they use more wisdom and judgment in deciding what they shall save. There are those, for instance, who recklessly spend themselves in order to save their money only to find when it is too late that their money is of no value to them. Then there are others who spend their money to save themselves. If one knows how to spend his money properly to save himself, he need never worry, for he will always be able to make more money.

WILL BE STAGGERING

SPECIAL CABLE:

PARIS, France, Dec. 16.—The great armies of France, England and Belgium are poised and ready to strike the blow which is expected to send the forces of Kaiser Wilhelm staggering backward in Belgium.

The offensive movement extending from the Belgian coast across France into Alsace, is now under way. The assaults against the German line have been extremely vigorous, but are believed to represent the efforts of the Allied commanders to feel out the German strength at various points for the general attack which is to follow. When the real blow is struck it will be of staggering force.

In Flanders the British and French lines have been advanced more than a mile at some points during the past week. German attacks upon Ypres have been repulsed with casualties to the enemy of over 20,000, according to unofficial estimates.

The Allied forces have started an offensive movement south of Ypres, which has carried them along the main highway and railroad toward Lille.

The arrival of new artillery for the French, the speedy recuperation of Belgian and the first French and the efficiency of British regulars and territorials is declared to have made possible the advance which is now being directed much more vigorously than ever before.

The executive had about fifteen hundred applications for the forty jobs.

PARIS, Dec. 15.—Telegraphing from Berne, Switzerland, the correspondent of the Havas Agency says the Cologne Gazette has published a statement to the effect that a group of Belgian bankers has agreed to pay in ten instalments the remainder of the first war contribution imposed upon Belgium. The City of Brussels has decided to pay the latest contribution amounting to 45,000,000 francs ($9,000,000) for the maintenance of the enemy's troops by additional taxes to be levied until June 15, 1915.

SILENCE AND COBWEBS.

When you have had a glimpse of a live factory running full-handed every day, fancy what it is like to have a walk over a factory that's closed because of not enough orders coming in to keep it running. The engine is rusty, the boilers moaning with cold wind; the rats running over the coal, the machines cobwebbed and the piles of unsold goods dusty and silent. Weeks ago the whistles blew for the last time, until the business picks up again. The manager posted the notice to quit. The time clock was punched by the last man out. The books were balanced and closed. The cover went over the typewriter and the caretaker swept out the place, lighted his pipe and hunched away home. Somebody tried to ring up on the telephone; no answer. Grass grew over the railway siding and the empty box car might as well be idle there as anywhere else. The men that used to work in the factory hang about the streets, smoking, waiting for odd jobs; women pinching at home; store bills unpaid; rent in arrears; business gone to the dogs; the town sad and miserable and for the present without hope, just because for some time to come it is out of work. And this is the picture of silence and cobwebs and blue ruin which the dollars of Canadians thoughtlessly spent for imported goods, has made possible, but which the dollars of Canadians selfishly spent for goods made in Canada can completely undo.

BRITISH PORTS ARE SHELLED BY GERMAN CRUISERS AND THE SITUATION IS DEVELOPING

Scarborough and Hartlepool Are Bombarded by Enemy's Ships This Morning and the British Fleet is Engaged at Several Points, the Admiralty Announces—No Results Are Given—May Be the Long-looked-for Battle in the North Sea.

IS WHOLE GERMAN FLEET OUT?

SPECIAL MORNING CABLE:

LONDON, Eng., December 16. — The British ports of Scarborough and Hartlepool on the North Sea were shelled by some German warships to-day. The Admiralty announced the attacks upon the towns and added that the British patrol flotillas have been engaged at various points.

The Admiralty announcement states in addition the fact that the home flotillas have been engaged and that the "situation is developing."

"German movements of some importance are taking place this morning in the North Sea. Scarborough and Hartlepool have been shelled and our flotillas have at various points been engaged. The situation is developing."

Scarborough is one of the most famous seaports of England. It is situated on a headland extending into the North Sea. 37 miles north east of York.

Hartlepool is 19 miles south east of Durham. It is on the south side of an almost isolated promontory in the North Sea. Hartlepool has an extensive system of docks and is a shipping centre of considerable impor-

Opening Way To Roulers

Germans Lose More Than 24,000 Men in Three Days' Fighting

DUNKIRK, Dec. 15.—With desperate energy, the German attack has been directed against Ypres, and in the end the enemy have retired to their trenches utterly exhausted, and the nature of the fighting may be judged by reports which speak of 24,000 casualties within three days over an area extending a few kilometres north and south of the town. The outcome has been an advance by the allies, and it is now reported on excellent authority that the way is clear to Roulers.

That town had not been taken up to last night, but a solid wedge has been driven into the enemy's line at this point. Details of the renewed fighting have reached me here. The Germans, as usual, opened with the bombardment of the French point, D'appui Steloi. Heavy artillery was, however, brought up, and and effective reply was given to the big German guns. The allies went forward under cover of this fire, but they encountered a determined resistance at Mooreside, a village on the railway between Ypres and Roulers.

THE NARROW UNDERSKIRT.

Despite Predictions, It Continues to Be Favored by Smart Women.

It was prophesied that the underskirt would soon drop from its secondary place, the flaring tunic be lengthened and women go back to one skirt instead of wearing two, as they do now. There is little sign of this at the present moment, for the wide tunic, as contrasted with the narrow skirt beneath, seems to delight women.

This narrow underskirt must be slashed in the middle of the back if one would walk with comfort, and it has to be short if one would walk at all. Both of these features are added, or rather incorporated on the present garment. As to the exact spot between the hips and the ankles where the flare should come, each woman judges of that for herself. Her own length of line must determine it.

Not only have tunics got this width at the hem, but so have all the modish coats. They hang away from the figure as soon as they pass the waist line, and many do not wait for that spot to bulge into space.

LITTLE MAID'S PARIS FROCK.

This little girl wears a very modern Paris frock of cinnamon colored mohair and worsted mixture, showing the long waist, low placed belt and plaited tunic above a very narrow skirt, all distinguishing features of the adult costume.

Knew It Was Wet.

Wife—My husband came home from the club last night with such a swelled head that I haven't been able to arouse him to-day.

Neighbor—Why don't you try pouring a pitcher of water over his head.

Wife—I did that very thing, but the only thing he did was to call out for an umbrella.

THE RIDDLE OF EGYPT

Theoretically Egypt is a province of Turkey and its ruler is the Viceroy of the Sultan. In reality the British Agent and Consul-General in Cairo is the representative of the British Government, which rules Egypt. Yet Egypt in form is neither a dependency of Britain, nor is it an independent State. British officers in the Egyptian army give the word of command in Turkish. Officers wear the Turkish badge on their helmets. The color party carries a Turkish ensign. The Generals receive their commissions countersigned from Constantinople. But it is all a constitutional fiction and Egyptian affairs are not seriously affected by it. Ottoman suzerainty is limited to the presence in Cairo of a Turkish High Commissioner, who does nothing but draw his pay, and this not always with strict regularity.

WOMEN OF INDIA STAND BY EMPIRE

Poor and Rich Gladly Sacrifice Their Men, Money and Religious Principles

The part that the ladies of India are taking in the present war is important, writes Saint Nihil Singh, an Indian gentleman, in a London journal. The Ranis are gladly giving their husbands, sons, brothers, and other male relatives to lead the Indian contingents in the firing line. Ladies of nobility and wealth are parting from scions of their families who, as members of the Imperial Cadet Corps or otherwise, are seeing action on the Continent. Indian women of humbler station likewise are offering their men-folk on the altar of the Empire. Those who for one reason or another cannot contribute fighters are helping to fill the war-chest and give subscriptions to the relief funds, and organize philanthropic associations to aid and comfort the soldiers ill or wounded in action, and ameliorate the misery and hardships of the relatives they leave behind them.

To a great many of India's soldiers the crossing of the "black water" means the violation of their most cherished principles. The Hindu religion, as it is interpreted by the present-day priests and law-givers, the Brahmans, positively forbids its followers to leave the shores of Ind. All the canons of caste and all the dictates of custom that have been followed by the Hindus for age upon age are opposed to permitting them to set out on voyages. Of late years, many men and a few women from India have outraged these prejudices by going abroad, but still the sentiment against voyages is cherished by the majority of the Hindus. The women especially cling to these conventional notions. Therefore it could not have been an easy thing for the women of India to let their men-folk cross the oceans to Europe.

But the women of India are taught, from the cradle upwards, to obey the call of duty without hesitancy or murmur. They fulfil their obligations, no matter how dear it may cost them in trouble and agony to do so, not only without complaint, but, what is more, without any ado. On the present occasion the Indian ladies have responded to the call of the Empire with alacrity and enthusiasm. They have repressed their affections and their prejudices alike, and sent their men to fight the battles of their King-Emperor in distant Europe.

VALUE OF OLD SOLDIER

He Can Give Cohesion to a Squad of Raw Recruits

If you have once been thoroughly drilled, you will never forget your drill. I proved the truth of that when I stood up the other day in a line of two hundred men, says a writer in London "Sketch." I had not "fallen in" for twenty years—or, very nearly twenty years. It all came back to me, as lightly says, in a second. I found that I could wheel, and right turn, and dress by the right as easily and naturally as ever. But the men who had never been drilled, although they were men of education and, indeed, exceptional intelligence, gave themselves away at once. "On the word 'Dismiss,' you will turn to the right, wait a moment, and then break off quietly." Numbers of them made the old mistake of turning to the left! Of course, it didn't matter. On the contrary, it was a useful mistake, showing at once the necessity of drill. That is why the "old soldier" of any sort is useful at a time like this. He can keep the rank-and-file together to begin with, and later he can help the drill-sergeant by taking little squads of newcomers and putting them through their first paces.

Using mirrors that are invisible to the audience a German motion picture apparatus reflects the entire contour of the players in a picture, giving a life-like appearance.

HIS HEALTH IN A TERRIBLE STATE

HAGERSVILLE, ONT., AUG. 26th 1913.

"About two years ago, I found my health in a very bad state. My Kidneys were not doing their work and I was all run down in condition. I felt the need of some good remedy and having seen "Fruit-a-tives" advertised, I decided to try them. Their effect, I found more than satisfactory.

Their action was mild and the result all that could be expected.

My Kidneys resumed their normal action after I had taken upwards of a dozen boxes, and I regained my old-time vitality. Today, I am enjoying the best health I have ever had".

B. A. KELLY

"Fruit-a-tives" is the greatest Kidney Remedy in the world. It acts on the bowels and skin as well as on the kidneys, and thereby soothes and cures any Kidney sorgness.

"Fruit-a-tives" is sold by all dealers at 50c. a box, 6 for $2.50, trial size 25c. or will be sent on receipt of price by Fruit-a-tives Limited, Ottawa.

The Red Sea.

In the Red Sea reefs of bright pink coral are clearly to be seen. Much of the rocky bed of this sea is the work of the coral insect. But probably the true reason for the name of the Red Sea is because along its eastern shore lies ancient Edom. This word signifies "red." It was given to the region not from the color of its sandstone hills, but from its people. These are the descendants of him who came in faint and weary from hunting and said to his brother, "Feed me, I pray thee, with that same red pottage, for I am faint"; therefore was his name called Edom.

The Youngster Hushed.

When the great French chemist Chevreul attained his hundredth birthday he was entertained at a public dinner, at which his son, a high official in the department of justice, sixty-seven years old, was also present. The old man made a speech and in telling an anecdote made a slight slip, which his son corrected. Old Chevreul turned around quickly and said in a sharp tone, "Hush, youngster, when I am talking." And the "youngster" held his tongue.

Couldn't Forget It.

"Saturday night some miscreant lugged off a whole cord of my wood, and somehow I can't forget about it!" declared Silas.

"Have you tried to forget it?" inquired his friend.

"Yes. Sunday morning I went to church hoping I could get it off my mind, and before I had been there five minutes the choir started in singing 'The Lost Chord,' so I got out!"

The Drummer of Airlie.

The narrow escape from death of the Earl of Airlie, who was nearly run over by a train in Johannesburg only two days before he attained his majority means that the ghost of Cortachy Castle, "the drummer of the Airlies," has been robbed of a chance of giving his supernatural warning.

According to the legend of Cortachy Castle, which is in Forfarshire, the death of an Earl or Countess of Airlie is herald by the faint sound of drumming, sometimes accompanied by soft music up and down the corridors of the castle.

There are many stories of the origin of the Airlie ghost, but the true version, according to the family records, is also the most gruesome.

Hundreds of years ago one of the Earls of Airlie, a man of black passions, quarrelled with a friend, who, anxious for reconciliation, sent a drummer boy with a message to Cortachy Castle. But the Earl of Airlie not only flouted his friends advances, but ordered the drummer boy to be fastened into his own drum and flung from the battlements of the castle.

The drummer spent his last moments in putting a comprehensive curse on the Airlie family, and when the wicked earl was on his death-bed a few years later a faint drumming was heard round the castle.

Ever since the sound of the drum has heralded the death of an Earl of Airlie.

There were two well-authenticated cases of death following close on the sound of the drum during the last century; and old retainers of the family declared that they heard the drummer just before the late earl was killed in the South African war.

Burman Prisons Better.

The strict discipline and dietary of prison life in Burma seems to act as a pick-me-up upon those who have the misfortune to go there. Evidence of this is to be obtained from the last report on prison administration as the death rate, which for years past has been notoriously bad, showed a satisfactory improvement last year. Nevertheless the rate of 21.70 per thousand recorded in the Rangoon jail is abnormal, while the average is as high as 16.20. The cause of this is the drug habit, which appears to have gained a more serious hold upon Presidency cities, and strange to say there seems to be a close connection between the habit and the rainfall. The more rain the greater the temptation there seems to be for the average Burman to obtain forgetfulness from the use of drugs until the sun shines again.

Her Awful Threat.

A youngster who already had eaten more cheese than was good for her was greatly injured when the plate was placed beyond her reach.

"All right for you, mother!" she cried. "When I get to be a woman I'm going to sit up all night and eat cheese and bananas, and"—she shook a small, warning finger—"I'm going to lick my plate!"

No Chance.

"I think it's wrong for a married man to gamble."

"It's worse than wrong; it's idiotic. His wife gives him fits if he loses and confiscates the proceeds if he wins."

Cured Fifteen Years Ago of Piles and Eczema

By Using Dr. Chase's Ointment—Certifies That the Cure Was Permanent.

Some people have tried so many doctors and so many treatments in their search for cure for piles and eczema that they find it difficult to believe there is an actual cure.

The strong point about Dr. Chase's Ointment is that it not only brings relief promptly, but brings about actual and lasting cure.

MR. KETCHESON

In 1897 Mr. Ketcheson, 88 Douro street, Peterboro', Ont., wrote as follows:—"I was troubled for thirty years with itching piles and eczema. I could not sleep at night, and when I got warm the itching was terrible. Eczema covered my legs down to the knees, perfectly raw. I have tried every preparation I could hear of. Seeing Dr. Chase's Ointment advertised, I procured a box, and this Ointment effected a complete cure."

On Sept. 28, 1912, Mr. Ketcheson wrote as follows:—"I received a letter from you to-day, saying that you found on file a statement made by me 15 years ago. I have always given Dr. Chase's Ointment a good name since it cured me, and shall tell you how I came to use it.

"I had suffered for many years from eczema and piles, and had tried doctors and everything I could hear of in vain. Reading about Dr. Chase's Ointment, I purchased it at once, and was soon completely cured. That was fifteen years ago, so there can be no doubt of the cure being a permanent one. I have met a great many people who have been cured by Dr. Chase's Ointment."

GERMANY'S CHANGED OPINION.

To the Editor, New York World,—

The World asks: "How comes it, then, that during the last two months German opinion has been completely swung to the thgory that Britain is responsible?"

The best answer is in Sir John French's report, in which he says: "It took five days' continuous hard fighting to convince the Germans that they must turn their backs on Paris."

Had the Crown Prince been allowed to continue his march to Paris and proclaim himself King of France there would not have been any "hatred" of Britain or any stupid, cruel war. But after five months of fighting the German army has not arrived at a single point laid out for it on the great German war maps, and one of its principal obstructions has been the British army.—W. F. Williams.

WIT AND WISDOM.

Happiness cannot be counterfeited; the real thing is too easily recognized.

A married man has many advantages over a bachelor and his wife seldom gives him a chance to forget them.

VITAL FORCE

Disease germs are on every hand. They are in the very air we breathe. A system "run down" is a prey for them. One must have vital force to withstand them. Vital force depends on digestion—on whether or not food nourishes—on the quality of blood coursing through the body.

DR. PIERCE'S
Golden Medical Discovery

Strengthens the weak stomach. Gives good digestion. Enlivens the sluggish liver. Feeds the starved nerves. Again full health and strength return. A general upbuilding enables the heart to pump like an engine running in oil. The vital force is once more established to full power.

Year in and year out for over forty years this great health-restoring remedy has been spreading throughout the entire world—because of its ability to make the sick well and the weak strong. Don't despair of "being your old self again." Give this vegetable remedy a trial—Today—Now. You will soon feel "like new again." Sold in liquid or tablet form by Druggists or trial box for 50c by mail. Write Dr. R. V. Pierce, Buffalo, N. Y.

WHAT THE EYES TELL.

If you would guess something of the real nature of any one then study the eyes.

The eyes should be distant from one another the length of one eye. If they are wide apart it is a sign of slowness of understanding; if nearer together, of slyness.

Dark, sparkling eyes, with a serious mouth, show taste, refinement and good judgment.

Another token of these same qualities is to have the eyelids sharply cut, shading at least half the upper part of the eye.

Half closed eyes betoken natural acuteness, but a lack of real sincerity.

Persons of ability and prudence usually have slow moving eyes. They very often possess gray eyes.

Blue eyes are a sign of being of an enthusiastic turn of mind.

Eyes with long corners and thick lids that cover half the pupil invariably show a person of talent.

USEFUL SHELVES.

In Kitchen and Cellar They Are Everyday Essentials.

In the kitchen a wall shelf is convenient for the clock or a neat row of spice boxes. Quaint little delft china receptacles come on shelves built especially to accommodate them, and these are both useful and ornamental in a blue and white kitchen.

No cellar is complete without a hanging shelf swung on chains or wooden supports from the rafters. Safely out of the way of mice, such a shelf is convenient for preserves or fruit or for storing large bundles. In the cellarway there is room for an additional shelf to hold the necessary bottles of blue, ammonia and the like, and outside the kitchen door a series of shelves will be found convenient for clothesline, buckets and the like. If these shelves can be made into a closet with a door all the better.

CHOICE OF SHOES.

The woman who desires to look smart and correct is fastidious about her gloves and boots. Gloves with rather wide stitching on the back are liked just now. White gloves should not be worn before 2 o'clock in the afternoon. Buttoned boots with curved heels and tops of contrasting kid are fashion's choice for town wear.

lope and black patent leather. The combination of sandal straps and buttons is very dressy, the buttons insuring a perfect fit across the instep. Finishing the bracelet strap around the ankle are small buckles in special design with same on toe. Accompanying the shoes are silk stockings exactly the shade of the antelope leather.

Lingerie Trimmings.

Laces have large use for tunics, flounces, capes, boleros and basques. Margots and novelty net tops, chantilles, metals and plain nets are used.

Embroideries are chiefly in organdie and crape edgings, baby sets, baby flouncings, veinings, beadings and similar staples.

PERFUMED GLOVES.

A dainty old fashion was that of perfumed gloves. Here is an old recipe for giving a subtle and sweet odor to one's gloves if one likes to use it:

Mix half an ounce of essence of roses, a dram each of oil of cloves and mace and a quarter of an ounce of frankincense.

Place the mixture in tissue paper between the gloves, then put a heavy weight upon them.

Leave the gloves under this weight for a day or two until they are permeated with the fragrance. This will cling to them until they are entirely worn out.

After taking off the gloves they should be shaken, stretched and put where they lie flat.

A writer lounging chair or a reclining chair with a foot rest would be the nicest kind of a place in which to confess.

Suffered Intense Pain in Her Back.

Could Hardly Do Her Housework.

If a pain attacks you in the back "stop and think" what it is and what causes it.

If the kidneys are at fault—and in a large majority of cases of pain in the back they are—doctor them at once, and doctor them persistently, as it is impossible to have a well strong back unless the kidneys perform their functions properly.

Doan's Kidney Pills cure all forms of kidney trouble, and cure them to stay cured.

Mrs. H. F. Jacob, Lavant Station, Ont., writes: "I take pleasure in telling you how much good your medicine has done me. I had suffered from intense pains in my back, and was so bad I could hardly do my housework. My kidneys were also bothering me a great deal. I tried several kinds of patent medicines, and was almost discouraged, and was looking for some other kind of medicine to try when I noticed your advertisement of Doan's Kidney Pills, so I thought it could not hurt to try them. I noticed a great difference when I had used one box, and to my great relief when I had used three boxes I was entirely cured, and I have not been bothered since. I will not hesitate to recommend them to all I know."

Doan's Kidney Pills are 50c a box, or 3 boxes for $1.25, at all dealers or mailed direct on receipt of price by The T. Milburn Co., Limited, Toronto, Ont. When ordering direct specify "Doan's."

Dear Mr. Editor:—

Thanks for the privilege of appealing through your columns on behalf of the Hospital for Sick Children. The Hospital takes care of sick and deformed children, not only in Toronto, but in the Province, outside of the city.

This coming year, of all the years in the Hospital's history, has a more serious outlook, as regards funds for maintenance, than any year that has passed its calendar.

So many calls are being made on the purses of the generous people of Toronto and Ontario, to help the soldiers of the Empire, that as I make my daily rounds through the wards of the Hospital, and see the suffering children in our cots and beds, the thought strikes me as to whether the people will as of old, with all the demands made upon them, answer our appeal and help to maintain the institution that is fighting in the never-ending battle with disease and death, in its endeavor to save the stricken little ones in the child-life of Ontario.

Last year there were 894 in-patients from 210 places outside of Toronto, and in the past twenty years there have been 7,000 from places in the Province other than Toronto.

It costs us $2.34 per patient per day for maintenance. The municipalities pay for patients $1 per patient per day; the Government allows 30 cents per patient per day; so, deducting $1.20 from $2.34, it leaves the Hospital with $1.14 to pay out of subscriptions it receives from the people of Toronto and the Province. The shortage last year ran to $15,000.

Since 1880 about 1,000 cases of club feet, bow legs and knock knees have been treated, and of these 900 had perfect correction. Nearly all these were from different parts of the Province outside of the city of Toronto.

Remember that every year is a war year with the Hospital; every day is a day of battle; every minute the Hospital needs money, not for its own sake, but for the children's sake. The Hospital is the battle-ground where the Armies of Life have grappled with the Hosts of Death, and the life or death of thousands of little children is the issue that is settled in that war. Will you let the Hospital be driven from the field of its battle to save the lives of little children for the lack of money you can give and never miss?

Every dollar may prove itself a dreadnought in the battle against death, a flagship in the fleet that fights for the lives of little children.

Remember that the door of the Hospital's mercy is the door of hope, and your dollar, kind reader, may be the key that opens the door for somebody's child.

Will you send a dollar, or more if you can, to Douglas Davidson, Secretary-Treasurer, or

J. ROSS ROBERTSON,
Chairman of the Board of Trustees, Toronto.

WHOOPING COUGH.

Mrs. Charles Lovell, Agassiz, B. C., writes: "Seven of our nine children had whooping cough the same winter and we attribute their cure to Dr Chase's Syrup of Linseed and Turpentine. We always have it in the house, and recommend it as the king of all medicines. I was formerly completely cured of protruding piles by using Dr. Chase's Ointment."

"These pies look very flat this morning," said the proprietor of the lunch counter.

"Yes, sir," replied the boy attendant. "I was swattin' flies on 'em this mornin', sir."—Yonkers Statesman.

THE DAUNTLESS THREE OF "L" BATTERY

Sergt.-Major Darrill, Gunner Darbyshire and Driver Osborne, of L Battery, Royal Artillery, have been recommended for the Victoria Cross.

Orders had come to Battery L
To hold the ridge and to hold it well—
To cover the march across the plain
Of troops retiring on Compiegne;
The simple orders they received
Were to guard the way till they were relieved
Protecting the rear with their trusty guns
From the coming swoop of the myriad Huns.

The night wore on, and the early day
Opened in mist that was dense and grey;
All was silence, and none could see
What the movements of troops might be.
The men imagined their task was o'er,
And waited the order to march once more.
But signalling plans, it seems, went wrong,
And never a message came along.

Higher and higher the sun arose;
The mist is melting, it slowly goes,
The beams of the sun its vapours dispel—
The new scene surprises Battery L!
For there, on the frowning hills around,
Masses of Germans cover the ground;
The British and French had got away well,
But they'd somehow forgotten Battery L.

From the laughing army over the way,
Ten guns and two Maxims come into play;
The first cannonade is direct and dire,
The Battery's horses fall to the fire.
'Tis a murdering thing to suddenly know,
Instead of a friend, you face a foe:
But the Battery, losing horse and man,
Must stay where it is, and do what it can!

Its horses are slain, and it cannot move
Its guns in retreat by labour of love;
Of the guns themselves there are only three
That the men can train on the enemy.
Only three guns the duel to begin—
The foe have ten, with two Maxims thrown in!
It is fearful odds, and they know it well,
But there's no complaint from Battery L.

Just as at Woolwich the guns are served;
Though whistling shot and shells that screech
Mow down the gunners at the breech.
Officers served the guns with the men—
Every rank was equal then:
And when one fell, in a fraction of space,
Up stepped another to take his place.

They fought like heroes, they fought like gods.
But ten to three are terrible odds:
And, spite of all that valour could do,
Of three guns the enemy silenced two
Two guns gone from a poor little three!—
Well, that's when an Englishman's fine to see.
And, of all the tales our histories tell,
In front will be that of Battery L.

One gun firing, and that the last!
The men who serve it are falling fast;
Glad in grim death, before they go,
To heap high ruin upon the foe;
The aim is true, and the range is right
The Germans are in a pitiful plight.
But little they guess that across the plain,
Only three Englishmen remain!

Darrell, and Osborne, and Darbyshire!
They fought for a day, now ceased to fire
Till killed or retreated were all the Huns,
Leaving to us ten silent guns;
And when help came to that marvellous band—
Three wounded men who could scarcely stand—
A wonderful hush on the regiments fell,
And they stood and saluted Battery L!
—From "John Bull."

Radway's Ready Relief

Chas. H. Billings, of 246 W. 15th St., writes: "For years I have been suffering from asthma and bronchitis. A week ago I purchased a bottle of Radway's Ready Relief and have taken a teaspoonful in water before retiring each night. The relief I have experienced is marvellous. I most heartily indorse R. R. R."

CURES ASTHMA

The specifics for this disease are Ready Relief, the Resolvent and Radway's Pills. The Relief must be rubbed on the chest and throat until a burning sensation is produced, and the Pills must be taken frequently, to keep the bowels thoroughly open. The Resolvent must be given at short intervals, in small doses, and a dessertspoonful on retiring is best. Give a teaspoonful of the Resolvent whenever a paroxysm occurs. RADWAY & CO.

HEARING IS RESTORED TO DEAF

Without Mechanical or Artificial Hearing Devices. Deaf Hear With Their Own Ears. A Wonderful English Discovery.

Thousands of people suffer from catarrhal deafness or poor hearing, who having tried specialists, advertised treatments, artificial ear drums, ear 'phones, electric vibrators and various mechanical appliances without success have at last resigned themselves to a "world of silence," thinking that nothing can ever restore to them their normal hearing. Yet their case is not hopeless. A remarkable scientific treatment discovered a little more than a year ago in England is making people hear after years of deafness and is also unequalled for quickly stopping the distressing head noises that are so often the companions of defective hearing. This discovery is called Parmint and has attracted widespread notice throughout Europe where reports of the remarkable results it has given to deaf people have come in by the hundred.

The effect of Parmint it seems is by tonic action to produce a stimulus necessary to reduce all inflammation, swelling, enlargement or thickening of the organs of hearing and to stimulate the entire auditory tract.

Parmint is now being sold by many leading druggists in Peterborough and vicinity and a speedy trial is urged upon all who suffer from catarrhal deafness or head-noises in any degree. Ask the druggist for 1 oz. of Parmint (Double Strength) and take it home and mix with ½ pint of hot water and 4 oz. of granulated sugar until dissolved. Take one tablespoonful four times a day and you should soon find a remarkable improvement in your hearing.

Important: In ordering Parmint always specify that you want double strength; your druggist has it or he can get it for you; if not, send 75c to the International Laboratories, 74 St. Antoine St., Montreal, P.Q., who make a specialty of it.

Fighter Sam McVey Tells a Wonder Tale

NEW YORK, Dec. 11.—Sam McVey, the coloured heavyweight, well known in Paris and points east, arrived in America with a wondrous tale to tell which was dragged out of him despite Sam's well-known hatred of publicity. Sam has sailed from Australia and had made the trip via Colombo, Ceylon, the Gulf of Aden, the Persian Gulf, Mozambique, Lorenzo Marques, Portuguese East Africa, and a lot of other places that he either hadn't heard the name of or couldn't pronounce if he had heard it.

On 12th July McVey left Melbourne on the North German Lloyd steamship Zietan, bound for Britain.

"There were some conglomeration aboard that craft," said McVey on landing. "There was, first, myself and thirteen other Americans, about thirty-odd Englishmen — and they suah were odd—and some Roosians and Frenchmen and Roumanians and jest common mongrels that I didn't recognize.

"I wanted to get to London to get a chance to show that big cup of whe jelly, Jack Johnson, what a real fighter is, for my manager said he thought he could fix up a match, but I didn't know that these here kings were fixing up a war—I didn't know it, nohow.

"Well, one morning we got a wireless that there was a suah enough war broke loose, and there was a whole flock of British fighting boats a-hunting for our ship, the German boat Zietan.

"Ooh, I dont' mind this fighting on dry land, where you can jump out of the ring or throw up the sponge when you've got enough or stall around until the end of the round, but I could just see what round two would do to our boat if any of those scrappin' Britishers should get us. Lots a good it would do to throw up a sponge way out there, a million miles from home and mammy. So I agreed with the bosun of our ship when he decided that sidesteppin' and coverin' up was the better part of valour.

"Then we backed up and hustled south and then we doded around some more. Lordee. I dunno where all we went. The captain told us that we were all under martial law and that anybody what went around lookin' for trouble wouldn't amount to nothing moah than a good fish dinner about a minute after he started a rough house.

"One day some time after that we met up with a German warship, the Koenigsberg, and while we were with her they put a new suit of clothes on the Zietan, the same colour as a British India boat.

"Those Germans on the Koenigsberg were certainly some fluent talkers; they didn't mind what they said. They told us Germany was beating the life out of everybody in sight; she had this here battle royal won two minutes after the bell rang. She had squashed France, chased the Russians up the North Pole, had Britain leaning against the ropes, and was just about ready to make a mouthful of Patagonia and Spitzenberg.

"Then we struck a dinky little place with a name so big they can't lay it out flat on the island. You can take it from me, that Mozambique is no nice place. There's fever, and leprosy, and no cultured coloured society.

"I got to Lisbon about three weeks ago and everybody that wants it can have my part of the town. Those folks over there don't act civilized. But I got out all right and went to London, and then came home."

Asked what he thought of the African coloured elite and what they thought of him, he replied:

"They runs mostly to featherweights, jest little shrimps. But what they'd pass me all they'd say was 'humph.' A man told me that one of them said if he could get me up in Africa some place he could sell me for two elephant tusks and a bunch of ostrich feathers. I told him I wasn't going to investigate that."

DISFIGURING ECZEMA ITCHED AWFULLY

Rash in Patches. Came on Like Blisters. Could Hardly Sleep or Keep from Scratching. Cuticura Soap and Ointment Healed.

Germania, Ont.—"My eczema broke out with a rash just in patches about an inch long. It came out like little blisters with water in them and got a little larger and then they broke and the water-like mass ran out. The eczema was red and like a running sore, then formed a thick scab. It caused disfigurement for the time being. The sores itched awfully and even pained down to my throat. I could hardly sleep or keep from scratching them. When the scab came off it left a scar.

"I used some salve but it didn't do much good. Then two more sores broke out in the same way and I at once started to use Cuticura Soap and Ointment. I applied the Ointment to the sores and washed them with the Cuticura Soap and hot water. Cuticura Soap and Ointment cured me in two weeks without leaving any disfigurement." 'PHONE FOR EACH KANSAS FAMILY AUTO FOR EACH 7

TOPEKA, Kan., Dec. 14.—Kansas has a telephone for every home and a motor car for every seventh home within its borders. It has rural mail service complete for ninety of the 105 counties, so that 94 per cent. of the farmers get their mail at their door each day. The per capita wealth of the State is a little over $1,600.

The Kansas telephone companies have just filed their annual reports with the Public Utilities Commission. This is the first time that Kansas has had any inkling as to the exact number of telephones there are in the State, as it was the first year that the companies were required to file the reports showing the exact number of telephones each company had in use June 30, 1914. There are a few more than 600 telephone companies, and they have a total of a little more than 225,000 telephones in the homes and business houses of the State. More than one-half of these telephones are in the country districts.

One Phone to Each Five Persons.

The total population of the State March 1 was 1,672,106, so that there is a telephone for each five persons within the State. It is usually estimated that the average family consists of five persons, so here is a telephone for every family. Of course, this is not literally true, as there are many homes without telephones, but there are a few with two phones and many business houses have three to half a dozen lines.

The companies figure the telephones on the actual number of stations, and if a home or business house has an extension set with two or three instruments, but only one line connecting all of them, it is listed as one station.

A firm with a private branch exchange may have 100 instruments, but only three trunk lines, and it is credited with three telephones. Each subscriber on a party line is listed as a separate telephone.

Mutual Lines Prosper.

It is asserted by the Kansas Independent Telephone Association that no other State has so universal telephon eservice as has Kansas. A large majority of the 600 companies are mutual lines in the rual districts. Some of the mutual companies have several thousand subscribers and complete telephone equipment, even to reasonably extensive toll lines.

The service varies from the most up-to-date equipment to the oldest type of instruments connected with barbed wires used for fencing. Some of the ranches in the southwestern corner of the State have telephone plants of their own and use one of the barbed wires of the ranch fences and the employees can get headquarters in almost any field.

One Auto to Every 34 Persons.

Thus far in the fiscal year there have been 47,390 motor cars licensed in Kansas. This, of course, includes several hundred commercial trucks used in the cities, but most of the cars are family vehicles. Taking the same population figures as used in figuring the per capita telephones, it is found that there is a motor car in Kansas for every thirty-four persons. This is a little better than one car for every seven families, but if the commercial cars were entirely eliminated it is estimated that the per capita motor car distribution would be just one for each seven families.

Kansas seems likely to cut down this per capita and have one motor car for each six families before the end of the present fiscal year, June 30, 1915. The motor car licenses are being recorded at the rate of nearly 100 a day, and have been during September and October. In one western county sixteen cars were licensed in one day by farmers. All but two of these cars are listed at more than $1,000 each.

Farmers who have sold their wheat are investing in motor cars, and those who haven't sold their wheat are giving chattel mortgages on the crop to buy cars. Checking the list of new licenses shows that 93 per cent. of the cars are bought by farmers.

TO DARKEN HAIR APPLY SAGE TEA

Look Young! Bring Back its Natural Colour, Gloss and Thickness

Common garden sage brewed into a heavy tea with sulphur and alcohol added, will turn grey, streaked and faded hair beautifully dark and luxuriant, remove every bit of dandruff, stop scalp itching and falling hair. Just a few applications will prove a revelation if your hair is fading, grey or dry, scraggly and thin. Mixing the Sage Tea and Sulphur recipe at home, though, is troublesome. An easier way is to get the ready-to-use tonic, costing about 50 cents a large bottle at drug stores, known as "Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound," thus avoiding a lot of muss.

While wispy, grey, faded hair is not sinful, we all desire to retain our youthful appearance and attractiveness. By darkening your hair with Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur, no one can tell, because it does so naturally, so evenly. You just dampen a sponge or soft brush with it and draw this through your hair, taking one small strand at a time; by morning all grey hairs have disappeared, and, after another application or two, your hair becomes beautifully dark, glossy, soft and luxuriant.

These are evil days for the rich men, said George Ade, at a luncheon at the Chicago Athletic Club. "I'd rather be a pickpocket than an interlocking director—there's more honour in it.

"They say that a cannibal king recently sent post haste for his doctor.

"'Good gracious, man,' the doctor said, 'you're in a dreadful state: what have you been eating?'

"'Nothing,' groaned the sick man, 'except a slice of that multi-millionaire whose yacht was wrecked on the Cocoanut Reef.'

"'Merciful powers!' the doctor replied, 'And I told you under no circumstances to eat anything rich. George, get the saw and axes. We must operate at once.'"

To Have Smooth, White, Soft Skin All Winter

Does your skin chap or roughen easily in this weather, or become unduly red or blotchy? Let me tell you a quick, easy way to overcome the trouble and keep your complexion beautifully white, smooth and soft the winter long. Just get an ounce of ordinary mercolized wax at the nearest druggstore and use a little before retiring, as you would cold cream. Upon arising, remove the coating with sudsy water. The wax, through some peculiar attribute, flecks off the rough, discoloured or blemished skin. The worn-out cuticle comes off just like dandruff on a diseased scalp, only in almost invisible particles. Mercolized wax simply hastens Nature's work. Used as required, it keeps the face constantly free from devitalized scarf skin and only the healthy, young-looking skin is in evidence. It's the best treatment known for weatherbeaten, aged, muddy, freckled, pimpled and all unbeautiful complexions.

Some skins wrinkle easily in winter. There's an excellent remedy in a harmless wash lotion made by dissolving 1 oz. powdered saxolite in ½ pint witch hazel. This will quickly eradicate every line.—The Woman Beautiful.

BEAUTY OF THE HUDSON.

Is Picturesque Scenery Far Surpasses That of the Rhine.

The Hudson river is very remarkable in several respects. In the first place, for 150 miles of its length it is not a true river but a fiord. From Albany to the ocean its rock bottom, with the exception of a few islands, is below sea level. How far below, it is not accurately known. Opposite Storm King mountain engineers bored a thousand feet down into the dirt and sand that fill the gorge under the water and did not find rock bottom. The shore line at Albany is at practically the same elevation as the shore line at New York, and the tide rises at Albany two and eight-tenths feet. The upward and downward flowing of the tide, of which Hudson took advantage in his voyage, had long been noticed by the Indians, who spoke of the river with wonder as the stream that flowed both ways.

The river is unsurpassed for its great natural beauty. The distinguished German surgeon, Dr. Adolph Lorens, in 1902 declared it more beautiful than the Rhine, which depends on the castles on its banks for its main charm. Primarily, the beauty of the Hudson is due to the extraordinary range of its geological history. From its source to the sea it is an epitome of creation. It rises in the Adirondack mountains, which tower to a great height. The famous Highlands of the Hudson, between which Hudson sailed 300 years ago, are of the same Archaean rocks and were once a group of islands. The Catskills are more modern and the Palisades still younger. The latter rising about 300 to 500 feet above the water's edge, were once a fiery molten mass and their columnar shape is due to the manner in which the mass cooled off.

These facts indicate what a storehouse for fascinating research the Hudson valley is for the person, young or old, who will study it with the mind as well as with the eye.—Edith Townsend Kaufmann in Leslie's.

Where Popys Was Buried.

The church of St. Olave's, in Hart street, London, is one of the eight that escaped the great fire of 1666, as well as one of the most ancient of London. It is a small building with a tower that is surmounted by a vane in the form of a crown which is said to commemorate Queen Elizabeth's visit in 1564 to give thanks for her release from imprisonment in the Tower of London and make a present of silken ropes for the bells. One of the most interesting associations is the fact of its being the burial place of the great diarist, Samuel Pepys.

DOES WILHELM LIKE HIS JOB?

What do you think of it, Kaiser?
Are things as you planned they'd be?
Or have you become any wiser,
Seeing your wild hordes flee
You did not dream little Belgium
Would stand 'gainst your brutal force,
While those whom the world called soldiers and men,
Your own army, now turn with remorse.

Little you thought that all nations
Will put faith in the great God above,
Could assemble the true condemnation
Your own worthless power to prove.
No might ever stood 'gainst High Heaven.

OUR DAILY SHORT STORY

Some Private Inquiries

A Cause For a Cause For Divorce.

By MARIE BELOSOFF.

There were compliments, congratulations and showers of rice and slippers when Livingston Perry and Marjory Manning were wed. Some people actually said it was a love match and that the honeymoon would last for years. Only some people said that, however. Others knew it to be simply a fashionable wedding.

In this case the skeptical ones soon had reason to say, "I told you so!" There were various little things that brought it about, but the principal one was that after three months of extremely conventional politeness Mr. and Mrs. Perry discovered that they were not suited to each other.

Both were full of opinion, and both were stubborn. Both were extravagant. Both felt the loss of personal freedom. Feeling thus, it was easy to find fault, and fault finding soon led to more serious things.

They declared an armed truce for another three months, and then each decided that separation was inevitable. Still, husbands and wives cannot very well separate without some reasonable excuse to give to their friends.

Marjory couldn't think of one, and Livingston was in the same predicament.

On the same day and almost at the same hour a bright thought struck this unhappy couple simultaneously. It was to hire somebody to investigate and find the valid excuses that were needed.

They had known each other for a year and a half previous to marriage, but, after all, that was nothing. Formality had prevented each one from even knowing what relatives the other had outside of Marjory's matchmaking mamma and Livingston's rather indifferent father. Her hand had been kissed, a declaration of love made, the engagement announced and that was the whole story of their lovemaking.

There must have been something in the blood each to give the other the advantage sought for. The way to discover it was through a private inquiry agency—"inquiries made, the past investigated; secret, honorable, experienced agents, terms reasonable."

"Why, of course," thought Marjory. "Easiest thing in the world," thought Livingston. It didn't so happen that both husband and wife called for the services of the same agency, but the investigators began to work at about the same time. And while they were investigating there was a continuation of the truce between husband and wife.

It was the calm before the storm. They were so placid and pliable that at times, many times during each day, they seemed to have reached the point where they appreciated each other.

Some of their dearest friends almost feared that the couple wouldn't separate after all, and thus another choice subject for brilliant conversation would be lost to society.

After about four weeks an official looking letter was delivered to the husband at his club. He had been waiting for just such a letter, and he was so anxious to see its contents that he glanced only carelessly at the superscription.

His first surprise came a moment later when he saw the words "Dear Madam" swimming before his eyes. Now, he was not a "dear madam." Yet he went right on and read that private inquiry report to the end.

"We find that your husband was known to have a very bad temper as far back as twenty years ago," wrote the investigator. "People who know him best are a unit in agreeing that he is very selfish by nature and hopelessly tenacious of his opinions.

"His overbearing disposition," continued the report, "has alienated many friends and several relatives. In one instance, during his bachelorhood days, he nearly threw a dish at his cook and would have inflicted serious injury had he made good his threat, as there is every reason to believe he might have done.

"We have it from his ex-valet that he arose several times at midnight to wander around his room or smoke cigarettes, as if greatly worried. This should be a strong point for a good lawyer to work up."

Livingston Perry felt rather flat when he had read so far. It struck him that, as seen by others, he was hardly what could be called an exciting character.

"Smokes fifteen cent cigars, drinks the most expensive wines, pays his club dues, owes no cab hire and unfortunately has not even a tailor bill over six months old. Still, this might be shown to prove extravagance," was the next thrilling remark. Then he whistled. He had at last struck an exciting paragraph. It was: "A few weeks ago he was seen in his club poring earnestly over a work on toxicology. We are sure that in this discovery we have furnished you with a terribly strong point. Your lawyer will know at once what to do with this."

Livingston Perry did not know whether to laugh or swear when he remembered that he had tried to read the book to oblige the author, his college friend, Dr. Grayson.

"We have, dear madam," ended the report, "made our investigation in the most thorough manner and have not a doubt that a court can be found that will give you a divorce on the grounds we have furnished if they are properly elaborated. Your check for $300 will greatly oblige."

Livingston Perry thrust the precious document into his pocket and decided that he was indignant and justly incensed. But as he walked slowly homeward he felt an emotion that, curiously enough, was much more sorrow than anger—sorrow that Marjory should wish to get rid of him. He quite forgot for the moment that he wished to get rid of her.

The official envelope that was left at the house the very same day was plainly directed to Mr. Livingston Perry. Now, Marjory Perry had no excuse whatever to open it, for she saw plainly how it was addressed. But she opened it nevertheless, and to her surprise she felt a jealous pang.

She hesitated over it for half an hour, but finally decided to inspect the contents. It began "Dear Sir." She caught her breath as she read on:

"We have made a faithful investigation of your wife's career for the last ten years and have got one of the finest cases we ever worked up. Nothing whatever is lacking to make it complete. We can furnish you with proofs of her flirtation at the age of fifteen with a schoolfellow.

"At sixteen she is said to have been infatuated with her music teacher. At seventeen she announced that she would marry a foreign title or never wed, as we can prove by witnesses.

"From her eighteenth year," continued the report, "she has been noted for extravagances. Some of her hats cost $100, and she bought one last week that cost $75.

"As early as her sixth year her terrible temper appeared. At that age she is known to have threatened to set fire to the house. It can be shown by three different servants that she once tried to send the butler to buy a gun, although she was barely seven then."

The investigator then leaped lightly from her childhood to her girlhood again and wrote: "She has repeatedly been heard to say that no husband could rule her and that she would have her way about things or make things red hot for a mile square. She has also been heard to say that all bullying husbands should be drowned.

"When you first came on the scene and began paying your addresses to her she pronounced you a ninny. The butler will make affidavit to this. It was her mother that brought about the match. She told the daughter that she could run away afterward if she didn't like your antics. Her maid will make two or more affidavits to this.

"We have also learned the important fact that she looked a long while into a gunsmith's window only a month ago, and there was a dangerous gleam in her eyes as she turned away. This point has a value this any Yale lawyer will see at once. Any judge will charge the jury that this is a highly significant circumstance."

When Mrs. Perry had reached the end of this report she spread it out on the table without trying to conceal it, though it was not hers and had been feloniously opened by her. To her surprise and indignation one, two, three tears rolled down on her pretty little nose.

"Marjory, what does this mean?" demanded Livingston as he entered the room and placed the letter in her hands.

"And, Livingston, what does this mean?" she demanded as she pointed to the sheets on the table.

Five minutes were spent in exchanging and reading reports.

Then Livingston Perry said: "Marjory, I'm going out to horsewhip the scoundrel who slandered you this way! I owe it to myself as your husband!"

"I wish I were a man as big and strong as you," responded Marjory.

"Why?" demanded Mr. Perry, taken aback.

"Because—because," said she, "I'd like to do the same thing to the man who made the report about you."

And people are still commenting on how long that honeymoon has lasted and saying that neither could have done better by looking the whole world over.

Couched Shadow Work.

The couched shadow work is among the new things in embroidery. It is very simply done, but is not quick work. In this new adaptation of couching the background is embroidered and the pattern left in the material with just enough embroidery stitches to give it form. A couching cord is used for the work. This cord is really just a padding. It is basted in rows across the entire surface by a short stitch on top and along one underneath. After the cord is basted the background is worked with a twisted cotton of any desired color. The rows of cord are then covered with satin stitch, the stitches taken at right angles to the cord. While the stitches are not packed tightly together, yet they completely cover the cord. The stitches of one row are interlocked with those of the next, so that there will be no break between the rows of cord. After the background is embroidered the design is outlined and the couching cord, which shows, is held in place by a couching stitch.

Emergency Table.

An emergency table in a sickroom can easily be arranged where there is a sewing machine that has a drop head. Open the machine and push the leaf over the bed and it serves as a convenient table for the person therein. A square of rubber cloth under a white cover will protect the wood from hot dishes or glasses and make it look attractive.

A Sanitary Precaution.

Household galvanized ware, such as coal buckets, trash and garbage cans, freezer buckets and ice pans, should be boiled out once a week with any of the good washing powders and water, not only as a sanitary precaution, but as a means to add to the length of their usefulness.

DAMASK TABLECLOTHS.

Old Ones May Be Used in Making Fancy Articles.

Old damask tablecloths may have their usefulness extended. One housekeeper did it in the following way: She saw that the design was an ideal one for a picture holder, pillow cover, table cover and other things. She first made a picture frame, thinking that she would trace the damask design to the material, pad it and work it the usual way, but she finally decided that it would be easier to work right over the damask, thus saving time, insuring accuracy and furnishing the padding at the same time.

So she basted the damask design on a piece of light colored satin, covered the roses and leaves with the usual colors with the embroidery stitch, following the pattern as carefully as a stamped one.

When all the damask design was covered she cut off the exposed damask carefully. The satin then presented an exquisite wreath of roses standing out distinctly. As an experiment she made a tiny edge of buttonhole stitch around the entire outline, not catching up the satin. This would only be necessary when it is difficult to cut the damask as close as desired. The work was then mounted on a circular cardboard, and the result was a handsome frame.

Transfer a damask pattern to almost any cushion material and you will have a dainty cushion and one that isn't the model of your neighbor's. There is no limit to the uses and combinations arising from this method. Never throw away tray cloths, napkins or tablecloths of damask, no matter how much they are worn.

Studied Insult.

"I wish," said the waiter who had been serving the man with the grim face and the pert looking girl, "I could think of some way to get even with that fellow. He complained about everything I put on the table and growled about every move I made."

"What did his bill amount to?"

"A dollar and ninety cents."

"And how much money did he hand you?"

"A two dollar bill."

"It's easy. Have it in two nickels when you return his change."—Chicago Herald.

Legend of a Lake.

Avernus is the lake in the neighborhood of Naples where the waters are so unwholesome that birds never fly near its banks. In ancient times it was thought to be the entrance to hades and where Ulysses descended to the lower regions.

A Financial Shock.

A man went to a local bank with a check which there was no cash or deposit to meet. When the paying teller declined to respond the applicant loudly demanded to see the cashier.

"We have no 'cash here' for you," quietly responded the teller.

The man with the check saw the point. He moved in circles till he found his way out, tobogganed down the front steps and was led a block by a policeman before sufficiently recovered to make explanation.

PIMPLES
APPEARED ON HIS FACE AND HANDS.

The primary cause of pimples arises from the blood not being in a good condition. When the blood becomes impure you will find that pimples will break out all over the body, but more particularly on the forehead, nose and chin, and although they are not a dangerous trouble, they make you appear unsightly both to your friends and yourself. What you need, when these pimples break out, is to get a real good blood purifying medicine such as Burdock Blood Bitters. One that will build up the system by cleansing the blood of all the impurities and poisons which cause the skin to break out in these eruptions.

Mr. F. A. McKenzie, Portage La Prairie, Man., writes: "Last summer I was all run down and unfit for work of any kind. All kinds of food seemed distasteful to me. Pimples appeared on my face and hands, and I seemed to grow worse every day. One day a friend advised me to try Burdock Blood Bitters. Half-heartedly I did so, and the results obtained were marvellous. I regained my health, I took on flesh, and in a short time the pimples and skin eruptions disappeared entirely; thanks to the healing powers of B.B.B. I freely recommend it to all sufferers."

Cossacks Tried To Get Kaiser

Made Captives Of Many German Officers With Upturned Moustaches

COLOGNE, Dec. 14.—The Kolnische Zeitung prints the following article regarding efforts made to capture the German Emperor at the time of his reported trip to the eastern fields:

"Emperor William is said to have paid a visit recently to the Austrian arena of war. The rumour spread among the Cossacks who were advancing in the vicinity of Lyck that the Emperor was near that town, and they decided to capture him. The London Daily Telegraph relates that a regular competition resulted among them at this hunt for the German Emperor and that one day a corporal of the Cossacks arrived at the Russian camp with a prisoner whom he designated as 'Wilhelm.' However, the corporal was sadly disappointed, for although the prisoner showed a certain resemblance to the German Emperor, he proved to a lieutenant of the uhlans. This semblance, according to the English newspaper, was in his mustache.

The Cossack, however, would not be discouraged and the following morning returned with two prisoners and exclaimed, "I am positive that one of the two is Wilhelm. The Russian army chiefs perceived that the unsuccessful hunt for the German Emperor was likely to overthrow the whole Russian tactics and strategy and gave instructions that 'Wilhelm is not to be captured,' and thus the hunt for Wilhelm was abandoned.'

3 BOXES CURED PSORIASIS.

Mrs. Nettie Massey, Consecon, Ont., writes: "Three doctors described my trouble as psoriasis, and one said I could never be cured. The disease spread all over me, even on my face and head and the itching and burning was hard to bear. I used eight boxes of Dr. Chase's Ointment and am entirely cured—not a sign of a sore to be seen. I can hardly praise this Ointment enough."

THE LATEST DONATIONS

The following subscriptions to the Belgian Relief Fund have been received by the Board of Trade through the several subscription lists posted up in the local banks. An interesting feature of the subscriptions is the fact that Mr. R. S. Sutton, a gentleman residing at Ida, has given a donation to this fund each time he has been in the city of late. His first subscription was $2.00, the second $2.00, and when he called last Saturday he supplemented these gifts with a further one of $6.00. Mr. Sutton will be remembered as a man whose heart is "right there." This is one instance among so many of the generosity, patriotism and large heartedness of Canadians. Others are found in the list below and in those heretofore published.

Miss A. Armstrong	2.00
Sun Life Assurance Co. (staff)	33.50
Total	$403.40

The office staff in the Sun Life Assurance Company's office have been in the habit of donating presents each to the others, and this year decided that the money that would be spent in this way would be used to better purpose if given to the Belgians. This excellent idea has been carried out and increases the fund by the substantial sum of $33.50. This money besides creating as much happiness in the donors as if used in the ordinary way, will bring pleasure and help to some fellow-men in far off Belgium and help to create the world peace and friendship that must come when the war is over.

The committee desires to thank all who have subscribed to this fund, and as the proceeds are to be sent in a few days, wishes all new subscriptions to be left with the banks as soon as possible.

It is the desire of the committee to raise the amount to an even $500 within the next few days.

INVENTOR OF BOTTLED BEER.

"Bass and Worthington in bottle." Familiar enough. But can you name the inventor of bottled beer? If we are to rely on the old historian the distinction belongs to Alexander Nowell, who became dean of St. Paul's in 1560. He was also master of Westminster School, founded in the same year, and—of far more importance in the history of bottled beer — an enthusiastic angler. For it is recorded that "whilst Nowell was catching of fishes Bishop Bonner was catching of Nowell, and certainly would have sent him to the shambles had not a good London merchant conveyed him away upon the seas." That, of course, was in the reign of Queen Mary.

Nowell returned to England on Elisabeth's accession. Again with rod and line he sought the banks of the Thames, and remembered how this night he had left his modest meal—including some beer in a bottle—safe in the hollow of a tree. It was a startling recovery. For Nowell found "no bottle, but a gun, such the sound at the opening thereof; and this believed (casualty is the mother of more invention than industry) the original of bottled ale in England.

MAY BE LOOKED FOR DASH

"The situation is still developing." It may be expected that direct news of the engagement will be withheld until some decision has been reached.

The brief announcement from the British Admiralty may mean that the Germans have made their long expected dash from Kiel against the British coast. The reference to "German movement of some importance" would seem to indicate that the attack which has resulted in the shelling of Scarborough and Hartlepool is in some considerable force.

A German vessel has once before succeeded in dropping shells upon the English coast, but this was an isolated effort without any support.

It is obvious however that the present engagement is over an extended area. Scarborough and Hartlepool are 42 miles apart. The Admiralty statement also declares that British ships have been engaged at various points. That the engagement is probably developing into a big sea battle is indicated by the Admiralty's terse statement that the "situation is developing."

Whether the German attack is to be confined to the shelling of the two towns and the engaging of the British fleet, is yet to be seen.

The German plans for the invasion of England have long been reported to include a dash across the North Sea by the fleet escorting transports. While the fleet was engaged with the British the plans of the Germans provided for a dash towards the British coast by the transports which would be beached, and men, guns and horses tumbled into the sea to scramble ashore.

The Admiralty statement gives no hint of the number of German vessels which braved the mine fields in North Sea and made their way through the British patrol to a point close enough to shell the two ports.

There is now a great demand here for further information as to the amount of the damage that may have been done at Scarborough and Hartlepool. As the Admiralty states specifically however the situation is still developing.

LONDON, December 16—A news agency despatch from Madrid to-day declares that trustworthy information has been received that the Kaiser is suffering from diphtheria. Although his condition is improved grave anxiety is still felt.

WOOD CROSS-GRAINED.

Defective Timber Is Cause of Accident Says Coroner's Jury.

COOKSVILLE, Dec. 15. — The inquest into the death of the four riveters who were killed by the collapse of a scaffold here on Saturday, was concluded last evening before Coroner Dr. Sutton, the jury finding that a defective piece of timber was responsible for the accident. The verdict was as follows:

"That Andrew Webster, John Bowlby, George Warner and Hugh McKenna came to their death from a defective piece of timber on the scaffolding on which they were working, which broke and caused the men to fall to the ground. We find the company in charge of the work, the Toronto Structural Steel Co., liable for failing to furnish a proper plan and suitable material for the scaffolding."

Giving expert evidence regarding the safety of the structure, Mr. Fuller of the city architect's department produced a piece of wood to prove that some of the timber used was cross-grained, and therefore unsuitable for the purpose. Consequently he did not believe the scaffold had been safe.

GARLIC FOR FLAVORING.

In the Hands of an Experienced Cook It Achieves Wonders.

The indescribable flavors of some dishes served in French and Italian cooking are often due to the soupcon of garlic used by the chef. A soupcon—just a hint or an expression; that is it—and you have learned the art of employing garlic in your savory productions.

In the hands of an experienced cook, without doubt, garlic is a decided asset of value in the kitchen, for its intangible savor lends an air of distinction to most dishes of fish, flesh and fowl. A properly made salad in which there is a lingering, evasive suspicion of garlic left on the sides of the bowl is far superior to the plain or the onion flavored dish of green stuff.

A steak which is lightly touched once, and only once, mind, with the clove, all over the lean, bone and fat, will be found excellent when served with maitre d'hotel butter after a short, sharp grilling on a bright, clear fire.

Poultry will be found good if smeared lightly with garlic before roasting, while the ordinary joint of meat can be transformed into a decidedly toothsome dish with the aid of just the soupcon.

Tastelessness in cookery may become a thing of the past when garlic has acquired a more universal use in the hands of the wise.

HER RIDE ACROSS TWO CONTINENTS ON RUSSIAN TRAIN

English Woman Travelled From Siberia to Petregrad in Company With Men Called to Colours

MANY THINGS STRANGE TO THE WESTERN EYE

LONDON, Nov. 27.—A woman writing in the Morning Post tells an interesting story of her long ride across two continents on a Russian train. Her journey began at Stretensk, on the Amur, in Siberia, on Aug. 19, and ended at Petrograd, on September 2. Her story in part follows:

(By Mary Grant.)

Only the military trains were running. The first night I spent in a carriage with four women, two men, a baby, and my own little dog. Every crack was hermetically sealed; the two men smoked, and no one seemed on the verge of suffocation save my unlucky self. There is neither sleeping car nor restaurant. Every traveller takes his own bedding. The first class, except in moments of great stress, allows only two persons to each compartment. For food we had to stop quite frequently.

At some stations there was a buffet, and little tables set out where the first and second class passengers could sit down, but oftener, especially in the east we all dashed out, and at little stalls presided over by women with shawled heads and sturdy bare feet brought what we wanted, took it back with us into the carriage and there ate it. It was an exceedingly economical arrangement. Roast chickens could be bought for 25 kopecks (about 12 cents.) I have bought very excellent little pasties for 10 kopeks; rapchicks, a delicious little bird a little larger than a partridge, roasted and ready for the table, costs 20 kopecks, and a fish equally palatable, smoked and eaten raw could be had for the same sum. Milk, if a bottle were provided, could be had for 5 kopecks a quart, and hard boiled eggs were there in any quantity, two and sometimes three for five kopecks. A soldier bought much more cheaply. Enough meat to last a man a day could be had for 5 kopecks.

A Tea Party

The moment the train stopped, out tumbled the soldiers, crowds and crowds of them, and raced some for the provision stands and some for the large boilers full of boiling water that are a feature on every Russian station on the overland line. Tea is a necessity to the Russian. I fell into line and provided myself with two kettles, Russian fashion. The tea is made strong in the one and water added to it from the other. The boilers are always enclosed in a building and the spouts for the boiling water, a row of two, three and sometimes four, come out through the walls, and beside every spout is an iron handle, which, being pulled, brings the boiling water rushing out of the spout.

All classes mingle at these hot water spouts. I have seen the Captain of a battleship, in full uniform, carrying his little kettle to get it filled at the common supply. Afterwards he made his own coffee and generally gave me a cup. Indeed, I was overwhelmed with provisions.

The commander of the sotniak of Cossacks, a big, fair man, with a slash across his forehead got from a Chinese sword, always filled my kettles for me, and from him, from the Hussar captain and his comely wife, and from the naval officer, I was always receiving presents — chickens, smoked fish, very greasy in a sheet of paper, raspberries and blueberries, to say nothing of cucumbers, which were rained upon me because I had once or twice bought them at a kopeck apiece, and public opinion considered I was being done.

"Madam, madam, it is too dear," the Cossack would say, shaking his head over such extravagance.

A Great Officer, But—

The train went steadily on day by day, out of the densely wooded mountains, where are bears in the forests and sturgeon and salmon in the rivers, round by the great expanse of water that is Lake Baikal, all along the southern shores of that mighty water, by the great Angara, till we reached Irkutsk, the capital of Eastern Siberia, and had to change trains. And lo! the new train was fuller than ever, and had it not been for the kindness of the naval officer I should never have been allowed upon it.

All my other friends laughed, and said he was a very great officer indeed, and could do as he pleased; but he could not, for presently the train officials came and looked with envious eyes on the spare bed in the compartment he had for me. And then they approached me.

There was a doctor in the hospital section of the train who had not had a bed for a week. Would I allow him to sleep in my compartment?

The doctor came that afternoon, and after him came a train official, and after him a university professor from a Siberian university who was hunting radium. Every available inch of space was made use of.

After Irkutsk came the great steppes. Sometimes there were lakes, often rivers, and oftenest of all great plains. Far as the eye could see rolled the extent of green under the clear blue sky; often we saw herds of cattle and mobs of horses, and again and again companies of soldiers, and yet so vast is the country the sensation left upon the stranger is of emptiness, of a rich and fertile land crying out for inhabitants.

News! news! how we cried out for news; and how little, how very little there was to be had! My friends always remembered that I, too, must be keen and that Russian was a sealed book to me, so it was translated into French. Sometimes they shook their heads. The Germans had captured two small towns on the Russian border and exacted £20,000 apiece ransom.

"Very well," said the Cossack with a grim smile. "They have set the tune. Now we know what to ask Madam, do you know a good hotel in Berlin?"

"Why?" I asked, surprised.

"I telegraphed for a room to be reserved," said he. "We do not stop till we reach Berlin."

And then he spoke of how the Irish had put off all internal quarrels till after the war.

"It is grand," said he. "All the world will say it is superb. The Germans did not expect that. But we understand, for is not Russia a united nation to-day?"

Suggested "Tipperary."

We picked up more carriages as we went across the steppes and the soldiers came singing songs with a mournful wail in the refrain, something the same sort of yearning that is heard in "Tipperary." But they smiled and looked cheerful enough, only the women leaned against the trucks and sobbed their hearts out, and here and there a man might be seen clad in the khaki-coloured shirt of the soldier carrying his child that could quite well have walked, only he might never hold his little son in his arms again.

We were to take a week from Irkutsh to Cheliabynsk in the train, and it seemed to me we should never arrive.

"Cheliabynsk will never come," I said impatiently to the hussar officer, and his smiling face grew grave for a moment. "Ah, madam, it comes, it comes," said he.

The Cossack had come from Kobdo, and was full of a prophecy made by a great lama there.

"Three emperors," said the lama, "would fight. One would be overwhelmed and utterly destroyed; the other would lost immense sums of money, and the third would have great glory. The Czar, madam, the Czar, of course, is the third."

He was from the Baltic provinces, heart and soul with the Poles. He did not even call himself a Russian, but Russia is united now.

Cheliabynsk at Last.

Another thing that struck me was the friendly relations of the officers and those under them. As the only representative of their western ally on the train I was something of a curiosity, and some of the more daring liked to make excuse to look at me. If by chance they knew a little French they spoke to me, helped out by the officers if their vocabulary ran short.

"Madam, madam," said an old non-commissioned officer, "would you be so good as to tell me how to pronounce the English 'zee'? I teach myself French; now I teach myself English."

Well, they had all been good to me, so I took him in hand and we wrestled with the difficulties of the Eng-lish "the."

We arived at Cheliabynsk at last, and the men rushed in great companies to the bath houses, and it semed that all that long military train indulged in the luxury of a Russian bath. In all that long, long journey, in all that crowded, excited humanity, I saw but one drunken man, and he was an official charged with the welfare of the cars, and his falling away from grace was much deplored by those around him. My first contact with Russian soldiers has left me with a sense of their wonderful fitness, their confidence, their cheerfulness, their amazing numbers, and their extraordinary sobriety.

A Big Naval Battle Is Now In Progress

ENGLISH COAST CITIES ARE SHELLED

Nine Are Reported to be Killed at Hartlepool

THE BRITISH FLEET IS ENGAGED IN NORTH SEA WITH THE RAIDING GERMAN CRUISERS

Action Began Off Hartlepool and Unofficial Report Says That Two German Cruisiers Were Sent to the Bottom--British Hydro Aeroplanes Are Patrolling the Coast to Prevent Further Attacks in Case of Any of the German Ships Disengage Themselves From the Battle

BRITISH DESTROYERS ATTACKED INVADERS

LONDON, Eng., December 16. --- A sea battle is in progress this afternoon in the North Sea with the German cruisers which bombarded Hartlepool, and a portion of the British fleet.

Sea planes are patrolling the Northumberland coast to guard against another attack upon the English cities by the German ships which might succeed in disengaging themselves from the battle.

The fight started off Hartlepool.

The latest reports merely stated that the battle was proceeding. No details could be obtained owing to a censorship which has been established. Rumours of losses on both sides were widely circulated but were without confirmation up to the present time.

The roar of naval guns shook Hartlepool, which has been badly damaged by the German bombardment, during which nine persons are reported to have been killed and many injured.

LONDON, December 16. --- Nine persons are reported killed and several injured in the bombardment of Hartlepool. The first word bringing details of the attack by the German cruisers on this town declared that the post office had been struck by a shell.

DESTROYERS ATTACK.

LONDON, Dec. 16.—Four British destroyers attacked the German cruisers which bombarded Hartlepool to-day, after fifty shells had been fired upon the town and great damage inflicted.

The destroyers assaulted the Germans as they were starting to draw off. Details of the naval engagement are lacking owing to the censorship which has been established on all telephone and telegraph lines.

LONDON, Dec. 16.—Reports were circulated here late this afternoon that the British fleet which went in pursuit of the German vessels engaged in the bombardment of English coast cities, had succeeded in sinking two of the enemy's ships. There were also reports that the British fleet had suffered some damage.

The press bureau would not confirm either these or scores of other rumours in circulation here.

The Admiralty has commandeered all telegraph lines from London to the east coast cities and it is impossible to get messages through.

LONDON, Dec. 16.—One person is reported to have been killed at Whitby. In addition to the historic Abbey, partially destroyed, a number of houses were demolished.

About fifty shells were fired on each of the three towns of Scarborough, Whitby and Hartlepool.

LONDON, Dec. 16.—At least one person is known killed by the German bombardment at Scarborough. Refugees at Hull stated that a woman clerk in a store was killed while attending to her duties behind the counter.

Lloyd's agent at West Hartlepool reported that the bombardment of Hartlepool lasted from 8.20 to 8.45.

Considerable damage was done to the property, he said.

The German raid is believed to have started from Cuxhaven or Wilhelmshaven, the German naval bases, south of the Kiel Canal, and about 310 miles from the British coast.

LONDON, Dec. 16.—At Hartlepool a shell crashed through a window of Lloyds bank. It exploded, wrecking the interior and causing great damage.

In the engagement between the fortress at West Hartlepool and the German cruisers great damage was done to the town, bursting shells blew great craters in the streets.

THOUGHT THEY WERE BRITISH.

The refugees from Scarborough declared that when they first heard the firing off the shore they thought it was simply British battleships practicing. No attention was paid to the cannonade. Then a house was struck by a shell and crumbled into a heap of ruins. A few moments later the Balmoral Hotel, was struck, and immediately took fire. Shells began to arrive close together by this time. Other house and buildings were struck and burst into flames.

LONDON, Eng., Dec. 16.—A statement from the War Office, supplementing an earlier announcement from the Admiralty this afternoon says: "The fortress commander at West Hartlepool reports that the German war vessels engaged the fortress between 8 and 9 o'clock this morning. They were driven off.

"A small German vessel also opened fire on Scarborough and Whitby."

The report form the War Office does not agree with the stories told by refugees from Scarborough. They declare four German cruisers participated in the bombardment of the town.

From Whitby it is also stated two cruisers were engaged instead of one, and that the historic Abbey there was partially destroyed.

GERMANS IN WESTENDE SHELLED BY SHIPS OF THE BRITISH FLEET

Greatest Activity Evident in the Western War Zone the Official Paris Communique Reports---Belgian Troops Repulsed a Counter Attack by the Germans.

SPECIAL CABLE:

PARIS, France, Dec. 16.—A violent bombardment of Westende by the British warships, seeking to drive back its German occupants, was reported in to-day's official communique. The statement indicated the greatest activity in the western war ozone. It was asserted that the Belgian troops had repulsed a counter attack by the Germans and had occupied farms along the left bank of the Yser. In the regions of Arras, the Aisne and Campagne an artillery duel was continuously in progress, the French obtaining an advantage at several points. In the Woevre region the French are declared to have repulsed several attacks.

HULL, Dec. 16.—The latest refugee to reach Hull from Scarborough this afternoon said he saw three persons killed by bursting German shells. His own home was not damaged, but houses of his neighbours, only two doors away, were demolished. The bombardment lasted half an hour.

900 ENROLLED IN HOME GUARD

New Badges Will Be Given Out To-morrow Night

The Peterborough Civilian Rifle Association Home Guard are making rapid progress towards the completion of organization and have now a muster roll of over 900 men. The executive and officers are actively arranging details for future work.

It is of the utmost importance that all members be present, to-morrow, Thursday night, at the Armouries, to receive the new badges which are very appropriate and well designed. Arrangements have been made that both galleries at the Armouries shall be open for the use of the ladies who are interested in the Home Guard movement. Entrance to the east gallery at the northeast corner of the building, and to the west gallery on the northwest or northeast corners, of the Armouries.

What Will The Auto Fee Be?

Local auto owners are anxious for the new year to come to see what is going to be done in the way of setting the licenses on autos according to the horse power of the machine. The proposed plan is to charge for any auto 20-horse power or under $10 per head and a dollar for each additional horse-power. This will mean that a man having a six-cylinder 60 horse power auto would have to pay $50 per year. It is estimated that the income in this way would be nearly half a million in excess of the income now derived, the increase to be used for the development and maintenance of good roads.

May Appeal Gambling Case

Chief of Police Thompson has applied to the City Council for permission to appeal against the decision of Magistrate Dumble who dismissed a case of "gambling in a public place" heard a short time ago. In the charge in question several local young men were accused of "gambling in a public place." The gambling admittedly took place in a local Chinese restaurant, and without the consent of the proprietor, who called the police in to stop it. The Magistrate ruled, however, that the restaurant was not a public place within the meaning of the act and dismissed the charges. Mr. G. N. Gordon appeared for the defendants.

MINSTREL SHOW AT THE CONSERVATORY

There will be a big crowd in attendance at the performance by Asa Huycke's Minstrels in the Conservatory of Music Hall under the auspices of the Peterborough Hockey Club to-night. Much interest has been taken in the appearance of Mr. Huycke's entertainers and in view of the worthy object for which the entertainment is being given, there should be liberal patronage. The programme to be given will be a choice one in every respect. The entertainment will begin at 8 o'clock sharp.

Committee Will Seek Contracts

At last night's meeting of the Board of Trade, Mr. J. W. Worth of the Bonner-Worth Company, rose to say that "he strongly deprecated" the letter written by Mr. J. H. Burnham, that appeared in the public press a few days ago. The letter referred to the mobilization of troops in Peterborough and the activity which he credited to the local authorities, in an alleged attempt to exploit Peterborough's claims for recognition.

Mayor Buller explained that he had communicated with the Militia Department and received a reply to the effect that Peterborough would receive consideration in event of additional mobilization camps being selected.

A committee composed of Messrs. J. Hamilton, R. Fair, W. C. Ackerman, W. S. Dodd, A. F. Tomlins, J. J. Duffus and B. D. Hall were selected to deal with the matter of procuring war contracts for Peterborough manufacturers.

Great Damage in Scarborough By A Rain of German Shells

TO-DAY'S NEWS BIG FEATURE OF THE WAR

TO-BE OFFICIAL STATEMENT

This morning's news of the shelling of three English coastal towns came with the unexpectedness of a bolt from the blue. A report from Scarborough says no attention was paid to the first detonations. It was not until a house was hit and a gaping hole left in it, and not until other shells began to fall that the enemy was recognized. One can imagine the surprise of these townspeople when the bombardment began, but we actually know that the cabled bulletins caused intense surprise and considerable anxiety right here in Peterborough.

The unexpected had happened. Had it been an Zeppelin raid, the public would probably have said, "At last," and expressed curiosity as to the results. The Kaiser's high-flying 'doves' have been threatening an inroad so long that their arrival might almost be a relief. But the public mind seemed to imagine the German fleet ringed by British warships and French, too. They might amuse themselves around the Kiel base, but that cruisers would shell the east coast of England—most of us felt that it simply could not be done. However, not to enter into a dissertation upon naval tactics offering an explanation as to how vessels could elude the British scout vessels, it is sufficient to remark that their activities were officially confirmed.

Only last night, Mr. Walt Stocker was relating to an Examiner reporter an account of the defensive precautions which had been taken in the vicinity of his home town, Scarborough. In the event of an invasion, he had said, it would be possible to assemble several hundred thousand men in an hour or two at that point. The possibility of an attack was not remote, and yet at that time, or shortly after, Scarborough was under fire. This morning Mr. Stocker was one of the most anxious men in the city. A lady whose home was in Hartlepool, and who has many friends there, came to the Examiner office for information, and upon receiving confirmation of the bulletins outside, broke down as the result of the alarm she felt over the possible injury to those friends.

Chinamen In Police Court

One Was Mentally Decayed The Other Was Apprehended For Riding On Sidewalk

It is some time since any of the local Chinamen have been mixed up in any Police Court happenings, but yesterday morning one of them was brought to the Police Station by others of the same nationality, who complained that he showed signs of being mentally unbalanced. It seems that the crazy Oriental showed a disposition to make mince meat of every one in the Dominion Cafe. He was released later and will be sent away. He comes from Owen Sound.

This morning Harry Mark, also a Chinaman, came before the Magistrate, charged with riding on the sidewalk. He pleaded guilty, and was fined $2 and costs, amounting to $5.35. With Oriental discreetness Harry gave a false name when apprehended. He was easily located, however, and had to produce the cash this morning.

Refugees Report That Churches Were Partially Destroyed, Railway Platforms Injured and Numerous Buildings Damaged in the Bombardment Which Caused Wild Excitement in the Town--Between Forty and Fifty Shells Fell in Scarborough.

HARTLEPOOL AND WHITBY BOMBARDED

SPECIAL CABLE:

HULL, Eng., Dec. 16.—Three churches are reported to have been partially destroyed, gas works set on fire, two railway platforms destroyed, and numerous buildings damaged, when four German cruisers bombarded Scarborough, a famous seaside resort of England, to-day.

Thrown into a panic by the shells which crashed into the town from the warships, people poured from their homes and hurried to the railway stations, taking trains for Hull and other towns. The early morning train reaching here brought many refugees. They brought stories of great damage done to the town. Between forty and fifty shells fell in Scarborough. The three churches were among the first buildings struck.

The Germans also directed their aim upon the railroad station, but only succeeded in causing comparatively slight damage there in the destruction of the two platforms.

As the German gunners got the range, other buildings were damaged, and the entire town thrown into the wildest confusion.

The German cruisers approached startlingly close to the coast line. With the firing of their first shots, they seemed to get the range immediately, and then rained shells into all sections of the town.

The bombardment began at 7:56a.m. The train which arrived at Hull was just leaving the station as the shells began to fall.

Practically the entire population of the town had rushed into the streets, and those nearest the station rushed aboard the train for safety.

Immediately after the first word of the bombardment reached Hull by 'phone, the censors assumed control.

REFUGEES ARRIVE AT HULL.

HULL, Eng., Dec. 16.—Refugees from the bombarded seaport of Scarborough have arrived here. They report that great damage was done by the shells fired upon the town by the German cruisers.

Several buildings were damaged and a considerable portion of the population immediately fled from the city taking trains for Hull.

The first morning train from Scarborough brought many refugees here. The bombardment was very heavy, they said.

The greatest damage was done to property.

THE CHRISTMAS PROBLEM SOLVED

Peterborough Hardware Co. Offer An Almost Unlimited Variety of Beautiful, Useful Christmas Presents

As Christmas approaches the realization of pleasant but bewilderingly numerous duties not yet discharged, and many Yuletide obligations as yet unmet, is apt to take possession of one and leave the brain in a mild panic at the magnitude of the thing. And as Christmas Day draws nearer it is always comforting to turn, during the course of your shopping, into some place of business where there are beautiful, useful and reasonably priced presents that need no outside recommendation to your good taste.

If you are perplexed over the Christmas giving question, the interior of the Peterborough Hardware is recommended for your inspection. There will be found real presents, splendid useful gifts for almost every member of the family and every friend.

A present in silver is always acceptable, and in this department the Peterborough Hardware Company offers a remarkable variety of excellent articles at a large range of prices. The silver is of the famous 1847 Rogers Bros. type — the silver plate that wears—and is not only indescribably ornamental in appearance but is guaranteed to be serviceable as well.

In silver there are various attractive designs in casseroles, crumb sets, percolators, serving trays, coffee machines, chafing dishes, manicure sets, vases, etc. Any one of these appeals to the purchaser for its beauty and its usefulness, and the warm reception it is certain to receive from whoever happens to be the lucky recipient.

In electric conveniences a complete stock of electric toasters, tea and coffee pots, irons, electric stoves, etc. For some no gift could be more suitable than one of the electric time and money-savers.

Then, too, the sleighs, skates, tools, knives, hockey sticks, rifles, shot guns, razors, military brushes, shaving sets, and brass jardiniers, pedestals, fire sets, etc.

Your Christmas shopping cannot be in any sense complete unless you have inspected the almost unlimited range of gifts in the Peterborough Hardware Store.

WEDNESDAY DEC. 16, 1914

THE CHRISTMAS TRUCE.

The appeal of His Holiness, Pope Benedict XV., to the warring nations to call a truce to fighting during the sacred season of Christmas, has fallen on deaf ears. We couldn't expect Germany, which has outraged every principle that Christmas represents, in bringing on and waging war, to heed the call from any consideration for the sacredness of the season. If she did so, she would regard any such understanding on her part as a "scrap of paper," something to be disregarded, something to form the basis of some trick to gain a sneaking advantage over the opposing armies. The allied armies doubtless take this view of it; they know from the past that Germany is not to be trusted. They feel and know that Germany would take any underhand and crooked advantage that might present itself—and if no opportunity presented, she would try to make one—to "steal a march" on the allies and turn the Christmas truce to her advantage. A man or a nation that cannot be trusted is in the outlaw class; separated from right of association with honest and honourable men, and barred from the benefit of the comity of nations.

HEW TO THE LINE.

Great Britain is fighting the battle of honour; of honesty in national relations. We should therefore expect that British methods would in all ways reflect the spirit behind the British national instinct of honesty. But as there was a Judas among the Twelve Apostles, so there are wolves among army contractors who prey upon the government directly and, indirectly, contribute to the suffering, and probably death of the soldiers in the field. The London Daily Chronicle is authority for the statement that the government is being fleeced by combinations of unscrupulous dealers, and makes the demand that the system of purchasing be changed and that the system of open advertising for tenders, be adopted instead of asking for bids from a selected list of persons. the extent to which the latter system lends itself to abuses, is illustrated by the following statement:

> A dealer in the jewellery trade sold to the War Office some hundreds of field glasses which he had in stock, at a profit of well over 100 per cent. After concluding the deal he was astonished and disappointed to find that other dealers were obtaining even double the price he had secured. Not wishing to lose the opportunity of supplying such a good paying and complacent customer as the War Office, he went out into the market (which, of course, should have been equally open to the War Office officials) and bought another lot, which he at once sold to the War Office (during the present month), and afterwards boasted of the fact that by a sharp morning's work he had made a further profit of over $1,500.

We, in Canada, as a people, are no worse or no better than our British cousins; and if such things can happen in Great Britain, there exists a similar possibility in Canada; and a greater possibility owing to the system of purchasing—in a sense, secretly—from party friends of the government. It is stated that unless a manufacturer is upon the party patronage list, he cannot expect to get a contract for war supplies. It is stated as a fact, and is a fact, that nearly fifty per cent., at least forty-eight per cent. of the population of Canada is Liberal, and therefore not eligible for a place in the patronage list, and sharing in the "spoils." As a matter of fair play and principle there should be no exclusion of anybody, otherwise eligible, from contracts for war supplies. The people as a whole are bearing the financial burden of the war; sharing the actual fighting. Favouritism is not the worse feature; this consists in what it leads to. Favouritism in the awarding of contracts, on party grounds can easily open the door to favouritism in accepting improperly performed contracts, and imperfectly made supplies. We have already heard complaints of the quality of the shoes supplied the soldiers of the first contingent, and a board of inquiry has been appointed to look into the matter. It is stated that other supplies have also been found wanting. It is easily possible that favouritism in the awarding of contracts, may be attended with favouritism in inspection. This opens the possibility of monstrous injustice and possibility of actual injury to our soldiers. The provision of defective war supplies, overtly or through connivance or carelessness is not only outrageous dishonesty, but the worst form of treason—negative help to the enemy. A defective article of equipment, if it is clothing, undermines the fitness of the fighter and means impairment of health; if the defect is in other equipment—say in a rifle, part of a machine-gun or saddle or girth, it may easily mean the life of a soldier. The profit of a conscienceless contractor is a poor thing to pit against a brave man's life.

If we are to deal fairly with the men we send to fight our battles, we must make their fitness, their comfort, and the safeguarding of their lives the first consideration. We should not permit partizan awarding of contracts, which makes possible partizan inspection—the passing and the acceptance of defective articles—as a means of private profit. In all ways we should hew to the line, do the honest and square thing. We should not expose ourselves to the charge of contributing to the discomfort, suffering or death of one of our soldiers—by slipshod work and shoddy materials of any kind.

GERMAN "KULTUR'S" WORK

We can't believe all the stories of German atrocities, but if only half of them are true, and there can be little doubt of that, we must regard them as a legitimate result of the abominable, piont of view, that Prussian militarism and the cult of brute force, and the ambition of world domination, which justify every means to an end. The apologists of atrocities with their mouths full of pious texts, with their arms red with the blood of victims to the shoulders, preach a gospel of force that devils might well deny.

A writer in the New York Evening Post Saturday Magazine, in a timely satire, legitimately deduces a point of view quite consistent with the reasonings of Bernhardi; of the spirit of a philosophy that has been given effect in the practical development of the policy of German militarism. The following are given as extracts from Herr Bernhardi's comments on the opening cahpters of the Gospel of St. Matthew and St. Luke:

> "Again and again," he writes, "as the Christmas season approaches I find myself turning to the opening pages of these primitive chronicles for the unrivalled picture they afford of the struggle between two Kulturs.. Side by side with a manly recognition of the realities of life, we find in the Judaea of 4 B.C. a slavish submission to sentimentalism. .Here efficiency, thoroughness, the perfect adjustment of means to an end, is confronted by a spirit of false pity and compromise which is fatal to great deeds. Let us note a few instances of these contrary tendencies in the books before us.
> "'Then Herod . . . was exceeding wroth, and sent forth, and slew all the children that were in Bethlehem.'"—A notable example of state-craft to which we must give our approval; one of the earliest recorded instances of an enlightened Realpolitik.. The drastic reduction in the infant population of the City of Bethlehem, ordered by the king, will shock the sensibilities of those only who fail to recognize that it was a small price to pay for the purpose Herod had in mind—the maintenance of public order, the security of the State, and the preservation of the royal throne. Though carried out in times of peace, the punitive expedition against Bethlehem may justly be regarded as dictated by military necessity, which knows no law. Look at it from Herod's point of view. On the one hand there was Rome, watchful, jealous, avaricious. On the other hand there was the unruly nation of the Jews. From above the danger of extinction by the iron hand of the Caesars.. From below the danger of revolution.. Herod was compelled to wage a war on two fronts.. Under the circumstances there was nothing left for Herod but to strike hard and at once. The threatened rise of one who should be king in Israel opened up for the unhappy country a new prospect of civil war, of religious strife, of stern repression by the pitiless arm of Rome. Compared with the cost of life and treasure which such events would have enforced, the casualties at Bethlehem were negligible.. I will not say that the affair had no drawbacks.. For one thing it will occur to every reasoning person that the elimination of all male children in Bethlehem two years old and less reduced by that much the future military strength of Judaea. The class called up to the colours about the year 16 A.D. would show a regrettable deficiency."

This unspeakably wicked and ruthless religious philosophy, is in no way worse than that which lies at the bottom of the present war upon Christian civilization; for Germany not only declared war upon France and Russia; she not only declared war upon Great Britain by outraging Belgium—out-Heroding Herod in his slaughter of the innocents—but she declared war on Christianity, and all that Christianity holds dear — upon civilization and the dearest liberties and rights of humanity. Turkey, the Christless complement of German "kultur," was brought in as an ally, probably because her centuries of experience in the exploitation of atrocity might supply some details of devilry that would not occur to the war clique. One finds it difficult to understand how any Christian country can refrain from acting in conformity with the spirit of universal condemnation of the monstrous motives and methods of the German war party. The war is a war declared upon Christendom, and Christendom should unite to bring to a speedier end the terrible strife that has made half of Europe a shambles, and is drenching the desolated fields of the oldest Christian civilization with the blood of brave men, the flower and fitness of the contending nations. Verily the Scripture applies—He that is not with me is against me.

SOME MORE PEANUT POLITICS.

The London Free Press finds it very difficult to rise above peanut politics. Commenting upon what it calls the "admirable thing" done by The Globe in sending Christmas greetings through its columns from a number of men prominent in public life to the Canadian troops now in camp at Salisbury Plain and at the front in France, The Free Press adds:

> "One may scan The Globe with care, however, and fail to find the name of Sir Wilfrid Laurier among these representative men of Canada who are speaking a word of cheer to the soldiers awaiting their turn to go upon the firing line in Europe. The omission of Sir Wilfrid's name is so marked it cannot but be widely noticed among Globe readers. Is the Liberal leader without interest in the soldiers of Canada, or has The Globe neglected to invite from him an expression of good-will? The Globe claims to be a national newspaper, yet it sends to the men who are representing this country a special edition which might readily give the impression at the Salisbury Camp that Sir Wilfrid has retired from public life. It is impossible to imagine that The Globe has either wilfully or through neglect administered a slight to the Opposition leader. But equally so, it is difficult to believe that Sir Wilfrid would offer so apparent and deliberate a snub to the soldiers themselves. Evidently there has been a grievous error made someyhere, and on that The Globe should hasten to clear up."

That is most ungenerous. Sir Wilfrid Laurier's interest in the men on Salisbury Plain is warm and abiding. In courteously declining to contribute a Christmas message through the Globe, the Liberal leader adhered to his invariable practice of many years, of refraining from making any public statement except upon the public platform. In his public addresses since the war began Sir Wilfrid has spoken in terms of the highest praise of the patriotism and self-denial of Canada's citizen-soldiers. If The Free Press did not know why Sir Wilfrid's name was not among those appended to the Christmas messages in The Globe, it has not the intimate knowledge of Sir Wilfrid's attitude toward Press interviews so well-informed a journa lin matters political should have. The Globe, it need hardly be added, does not share Sir Wilfrid's prejudice against interviews and messages transmitted through the Press, but it has learned to respect his point of view as representing a settled line of conduct. There is no more courteous gentleman in Canada to-day than Sir Wilfrid Laurier. The men at Salisbury Plain Camp know this, and will smile at the idea that Sir Wilfrid snubbed them.—Globe.

GERMANY IS DOOMED TO LASTING DEFEAT

NEW YORK, Dec. 15—In a leading editorial to-day the New York Times says:

"Germany is doomed to sure defeat. Bankrupt in statesmanship, over-matched in arms, under the moral condemnation of the civilized world, befriended only by the Austrian and the Turk, two backward looking and dying nations, desperately battling against the hosts of three great powers to which help and reinforcement from States now neutral will certainly come should the decision be long deferred, she pours out the blood of her heroic subjects and wastes her diminishing substance in a hopeless struggle that postpones, but cannot alter, the fatal decree. Yet the dom of the German Empire may become the deliverance of the German people if they will but seize and hold their own. Leipsiz began and Waterloo achieved the emnacipation of the French people from the bloody, selfish, and sterile domination of the Corsican ogre. St. Helena made it secure. Sedan sent the little Napoleon sprawling, and the statesmen of France instantly established, proclaimed the Republic. Will the Germans blindly insist on having their Waterloo, their Sedan—their St. Helena, too? A million Germans have been sacrificed, a million German homes are desolate. Must other millions die and yet other millions mourn before the people of Germany, in the court of reason and human liberty, appeal from the Imperial and miltary caste that rushes them to their ruin?

"They have their full justification in the incompetence and failure of their rulers. German diplomacy and German militarsm have broken down

"The world cannot, will not, let Germany win in this war. With her dominating all Europe, peace and security would vanish from the earth.

"A few months ago the world only grimly comprehended Germany; now it knows her thoroughly. So if England, France and Russia cannot prevail against her, Italy with her two millions, the sturdy Hollanders, the Swiss, hard men in a fight, the Danes, the Greeks, and the men of the Balkans will come to their aid, and make sure that the work is finished, once for all. For their own peace and safety the nations must demolish that towering structure of militarism in the centre of Europe that has become the world's danger spot, its greatest menace. The only possible ending of the war is through the defeat of Germany."

OUR FIRST PRIZE COURT.

Tribunal at Ottawa Orders Detention of German Ship Bellas.

OTTAWA, Dec. 16.—For the first time in the history of the Dominion of Canada a prize court, an Imperial tribunal exercising jurisdiction in time of war, was convened in Ottawa yesterday, with Mr. Justice Cassels of the Exchequer Court sitting as president. The case before the court was one involving the seizure of the ship Bellas by his Majesty's customs officers in the port of Quebec after the declaration of war between Great Britain and the German Empire. The ship's papers disclosed that she was a German ship, constructed of iron and of the net capacity of 850.67 tons. She was built in 1875, and her home port is Hamburg. The registered owners are J. Wimmer & Co.

On Sept. 16 Mr. E. L. Newcombe, Deputy Minister of Justice, issued a writ claiming condemnation of the ship and the goods laden therein as "good and lawful prize and as droits of the Admiralty."

An appearance was entered to the writ of Dr. Orlando de Mello de Rego of Lisbon, Portugal, claiming to be owner of the Bellas by sale on July 3rd, 1914.

After evidence had been given by the Customs Collector at Quebec Eugene N. Chinic, Conrad Bollen, master of the ship, was called in behalf of the Portuguese claimant, and stated that the vessel had been sold thirty days before the outbreak of the war. However, it was brought out that the transfer of the ship had not been completed before seizure, and the president of the court decided that the claim be dismissed with costs, and that the Bellas and cargo be detained during the duration of the war.

Ministers Heard A Fine Address

Chancellor McCrimmon of McMaster University Delivered Scholarly Discourse in the Y. M. C. A. Parlours Last Night.

It is to be regretted that a larger audience was not given the privilege of hearing Chancellor McCrimmon of McMaster University, who addressed the ministers of the City and their friends in the Y.M.C.A. last night. The audience, which was as large as the parlour could accomodate, listened wth the utmost attention to the words of the speaker, who treated them to an intimacy and sincerity of consecrated thought upon an unselfish theme, couched in the most admirable language that has been heard in this City for some time. The address indeed was a rare literary and religious treat, and at its conclusion Mr. A. Mowatt, His Honour Judge Huycke and the Rev. Canon Davidson endorsed a hearty vote of thanks to the speaker.

To every thinking citizen a perusal of Chancellor McCrimmon's address will be found invaluable. He spoke, in part, as follows:

The Social Setting of Jesus' Ministry.

Jesus' ministry shows His passion for humanity and is shot through with the recognition of social obligation. Read one of the Gospels with the thought in mind of how far the preaching of Jesus had a social setting and you find out what gave Him such an intense sense of humanity in his God-given mission. After one has been spending a long time to work out a theology which will in some adequate way express the rational ground of his religious experience as a son of God; after directing his thoughts into the abstract channels of justification by faith, of penalty paid, of sacrifice made, of reconciliation, of sanctification, and of all those lines of theological disquisition which seem to be supported by the revelation of God to his servants; after handling legal terms, ceremonial rules and sacramental obligations, the embryonic theologian, beset with the trying difficulties of his limiations, defeated again and again in his attempt to get an exhaustive view of God's relation to the universe of men and things, yet ever following, ever pursuing, ever longing for the light that never was on land or sea, thus beset, and thus never having attained, this theologian, with his finite thought, turns with relief to the concrete facts of Christ's ministry which, after all, must be the first basis of his theology. Here Christ is not building primarily a theology but saving men. Here Christ is building the body from which later, by dissection, you may attempt to get the theological anatomy. Here you find the genius of his mission and his way of working. Here is the pattern in the mount after which the Christian must build and the preacher must preach. Imperatively necessary as a Christian system of truth is, it would be of little use for the salvation of the world unless it were made dynamic. To permit it to shrivel and dry up apart from the concrete life of man would be to allow it to be robbed of its potency and lose its point of contact. Although all power was given to Jesus in heaven and on earth,, he did not sit apart from men, working out in the abstract way the relation of man to God and of God to man; He did not withdraw himself into the rapture of a divine unfolding system of truth; He built his truth into deeds, the divine love lived in his touch with men, the omnipotent power flowed through the red blood of humanity.

The world is filled with social organizations coming to quasi self consciousness. Science, Philosophy, and even Theology are becoming more 'social.' Questions of liberty, fraternity and equality are stirring in new forms in men's hearts. Social contact, social interest and social vicariousness demand greater and greater recognition. The Gospel of Christ, however, is adequate to meet the needs of the age. God is a Father as well as a Judge. Christ is a brother as well as a Saviour. The Holy Spirit is a Comforter as well as a Revealer.

There may be an invertebrate philosophy of mankind which prates about brotherhood but disregards sonship; there may be a spineless theology which presumes upon the fatherhood of God and ignores eternal justice.

The ministry of Jesus justifies the social emphasis of this discourse. As was suggested above, it we take the Gospel's account of his preaching we can appreciate the social setting of His ministry. His realization to the Father was the sure foundation of his whole earthly life. "Trailing clouds of glory from Him he came; his spiritual contact with Him was ever his abiding strength; to Him, when Calvary sealed his mission, did he return. All this has its counterpart in the experience of the Christian regeneration, communion, sanctification, glorification' What a chain of inestimable experiences.

It will not do for a man to think he can enter into fellowship with God and disregard his obligations to his fellow-man 'If you come to the altar,' says Jesus, "and remember that you have aught against your brother, leave thy gift and go and be reconciled by your brother, then offer thy gift." When you approach God for his blessing, when you are seeking to come into closer communion with Him, the spirit of Christ's teachings directs you to see that your social obligations have been met. The clear road to the heart of God seems to be through the happiness and welfare of our fellows. It will not do to plead the awfulness of defilement as an excuse lest we hear Christ saying "I have somewhat to say to you."

The Social Potency of Jesus' Teaching.

Sometimes it is urged that while Jesus strove to bring man personally and individually to acknowledge God, he seemed to take no particular interest in the social questions of his day. It is stated that we look in vain for a direct attack upon such evils as the adulterous and lascivious social life of the Roman Court, the economic iniquities of citizenship, the institution of slavery, or the drunkenness and intemperance of his times.

STOMACH ALWAYS BAULKED HAD CONSTANT INDIGESTION

Smell of Cooking Made Him Sick — Bilious Two Days a Week.

Cured by Dr. Hamilton's Pills.

Mr. Clemmons' experience is not unusual. Nowadays poor stomachs are more the rule than the exception. But the proper treatment is sure to make a quick cure. You can always depend on Dr. Hamilton's Pills, they reach the trouble at once, go right to business, work while you sleep and have you feeling better if not cured next morning.

"My food seemed to decompose in my stomach," writes Mr. Ralph Clemmons, of Newbridge P. O. "I had a stomach that failed in some way to perform its work. Digestion seemed more or less arrested and I grew thin, yellow, nervous. The stomach became distended and impeded apparently the action of the heart, for often at night it would do great stunts. At times I would vomit a mucous mass, and at these times my head ached most terribly. A friend who had been cured of a similar condition, advised me to take Dr. Hamilton's Pills regularly, which I did. The result in my case was simply marvelous. Dr. Hamilton's Pills removed the cause, strengthened the stomach, excited the liver to normal action, the kidneys were released of excessive work. Health soon grew within me. I can now eat, sleep and live like a live man."

Be advised —use Dr. Hamilton's Pills—they are sure to do you good. 25c. per box, five for $1.00, at all druggists and storekeepers or by mail from The Catarrhozone Co., Buffalo, N.Y., and Kingston, Canada.

Reports From The Merchants

Conditions in Peterborough District as Reported to the Toronto Star

The Toronto Star says:

There are about 250,000 retail merchants in Canada and 16,000 factories. Retailers claim that one hundred times the amount of capital is invested in the work of distributing goods more than in their production.

What about this organization this year? Are the retail merchants of Canada and the banner Province of Ontario downhearted?

The Retail Merchants' Association of Canada is stronger than ever it was, with 10,000 more members on the books than a year ago. Two Provinces have been added, New Brunswick and Manitoba.

On Saturday the seven organizing secretaries for Ontario were in Toronto to meet the general secretary, Mr. E. M. Trewern and report. These districts are divided approximately, as follows: 1, Toronto; 2, Niagara Peninsula, including Hamilton; 3, London and the South-west; 4, Peterborough and the East Centre; 5, Brantford and the West Centre; 6, New Ontario and the Ottawa Valley; 7, Muskoka and the nearer North. The Star presents herewith the consessus of their reports.

In Peterborough district, Peterborough was the only point with complaints of a serious nature. Some parts of Eastern Ontario are showing up exceptionally well. Campbellford merchants are prospering. The knitting mill there, the footwear factory, and the shirt factory are working at nights. Whitby is in splendid shape, the merchants say. In Peterborough the chief effect of the shortened employment at the factories is that there is less cash. The merchants are doing as much business as usual at this time, approximately, but are carrying more on their books. There is not so much cash afloat."

Paris, in the west, makes a good showing, with the Penman factory working day and night. Galt, Guelph, and Preston are all reported busy, and the merchants are cheerful. In Berlin "the busiest town in Canada" as it proudly claims itself to be as a rule, things are first-rate. In Ingersoll the milk condensers are closed down partly, but the knitting mills are busy.

BOARD OF TRADE IS DESIROUS THAT THE USUAL CHRISTMAS SPIRIT PREVAIL

Sees No Reason Why "Christmas as Usual" Should Not Be Exemplified in the Same Practical Form as "Business as Usual"—The Necessity for a Policy of Retrenchment is Not Lost Sight of—The Merchants Are Prepared to Do Their Share in the Matter of Supplying the Needs.

That the spirit of Christmas and the time-honoured custom of exchanging gifts should not in any way be curtailed by reason of existing conditions, is the unanimous opinion of the Board of Trade. This organization met last evening for the purpose of discussing a number of important questions among them being the subject of exercising the traditional functions that would voluntarily obtain at this season of the year if the ravages of war were not upon us. The Board repudiated any policy of retrenchment that would in any way interfere with or obscure the seasonal spirit, of the day upon which the eternal lesson is revealed to us. "Good will to men"—is a law unchanging as the stars themselves. The war has hidden this truth, but it is still there. To a great many, the Christmas of 1914 will differ little financially from that of previous years. Foodstuffs are no higher than they were a year ago, and little if any change is to be noted in the general cost of living. Only those who are out of work as a result of the war or who may have dependents at the front, or on their way, can claim reasons to justify a curtailment of seasonal activity both financial and otherwise.

Business As Usual.

This in brief sums up the attitude of the Peterborough Board of Trade in respect to the question raised. Mr. A. E. Tomlins, manager of the local branch of the Bank of Nova Scotia, advocated a policy of retrenchment, but so far as the observance of Christmas was concerned agreed with King George, who a few days ago, expressed the desire that the Christmas season be "observed as usual despite the war."

The merchants of the city have laid in extensive stocks of merchandise, the most of which was purchased before the commencement of the war. If the people of this city and county adopt the same policy that is permeating the British Empire, they will combine the maxim—"business as usual" with "conditions as usual," and bend their energies towards making the Christmas season a season of joy and good will to themselves, also for those who may be suffering from the depression which the conflict tends to create.

Cancellation Stamp To Be Used

Board of Trade Has Received Permission From Post Office Department

The Board of Trade has received permission from the post office department, at Ottawa, to use on all letters going out from Peterborough, the cancellation stamp. Mr. B. D. Hall, president of the Board of Trade, got in touch with Postmaster Edgar, who communicated with the department, getting the desired permission. It is the intention of the Board to advertise the city in this way.

WELL KNOWN SENATOR HAS PASSED AWAY

Special to the Examiner:

TORONTO, Dec. 16—Hon. Robert Jaffray, Senator of Canada, President of the Globe, recently elected President of the Imperial Bank, and one of the most prominent men in Toronto, passed away at 4 a.m. this morning after a brief illness. Mr. Jaffray was in his 62nd year.

Hon. Mr. Jaffray was in usual health on Friday last, and during that night was taken ill. Doctors were summoned at once and realized that the attack was very serious. The Senator was conscious to the last. At the bedside were his son, Mr. W. G. Jaffray and daughters; Mrs. Eaton of Owen Sound, and Mrs. Wellington Cameron, and Mr. Cameron. Another son, Rev. Robert Jaffray, is a Presbyterian missionary at Wu Chow, China.

Ottawa, Ont., Dec. 16—The death of Senator Jaffray redruces the Liberal majority in the Upper House still further. When the eight vacancies are filled by the appointment of Conservatives, the Liberal majority in the Upper House will be eleven. The death of six more Liberal Senators will give the Conservatives a majority in the Senate.

RIGHT ALONG.

Fate treats me in a way that's rough;
It is no wonder I am blue.
Ah, not alone is life so tough!
My turkey had to be so, too!

IN THE WORLD OF FINANCE

At a meeting of the directors of Canada Bread Company, Limited, the regular quarterly dividend of 1 3-4 per cent. was declared upon the company's preferred stock, payable on January 1, 1915, to shareholders of record at the close of business on December 15, 1914.

Directors of the St. Lawrence Flour Mills Company have declared a dividend of 14 per cent., take 10 per cent. in preferred stock, which will add over $50,000 to the capital of the company, and the rest in cash. In addition to the 4 per cent. in cash now to be paid to the shareholders, the directors expect to pay 3 1-2 per cent. more in cash early in February. That payment would then liquidate all dividends up to and including January 3, 1915.

The Dome Mines' report for the month of November shows a slightly decreased tonnage, but a higher average grade. The output was 22,040 tons and the gold production was $36,770.76. The mill running time was 97 per cent. of normal, and the average value per ton $4.30.

Jupiter continues pretty much the whole tip on the Standard Exchange, though it was less active to-day than yesterday, 10,500 of the 17,000 sales of the morning being in Jupiter. It held around 10 1-4 to 10 1-2. Dome Mines sold as high as 820 for a broken lot and Hollinger as high as 1940.

In Aid of The New Home

Entertainment Will Be Held in the Sons of England Hall To morrow Night

Adjt. McElhiney's home for the men of the city who are unemployed is certainly worthy of the heartiest support of the people of Peterborough. Its aims and objects are so well known that they do not need any repetition here. What needs emphasizing is that all who are in sympathy with the unfortunate unemployed men of the city and with Adjt. McElhiney's project to provide them with a home during the winter, will have an opportunity of showing their sympathy in a practical manner to-morrow evening. The Daughters of England are holding a social evening in the S. O. E. Hall at 8 o'clock to-morrow evening. Adjt. McElhiney will preside, and light refreshments will be served, and a splendid programme has been prepared. All are earnestly invited to be present. Admission fee, a collection in aid of the home for men will be taken. Members of the Lansdowne Lodge, S.O.E. please note and attend. An enjoyable evening is promised to all who come.

VESTA VICTORIA, COMEDIENNE, GETS $16,300 DAMAGES

LONDON, Dec. 15—Miss Vesta Victoria, an actress, was awarded damages to the amount of $16,300 against Moss' Empires, Limited, by the court here to-day. Miss Victoria instituted action against the Company for damages alleged to have been sustained through the action of its managers in cancelling a theatrical contract by which, she said, she would have made $2,300.

The contract with the actress was broken by Moss' Empires, Limited, on the ground that she did not attend three rehearsals.

Shooting Accident At Kinmount

KINMOUNT, Dec. 16—A very distressing accident took place at the school here. Mr. M. McCulloch, Principal of the School, assisted by a lady friend, were drilling the pupils for a school entertainment which they proposed holding in a week or so. Instead of using something harmless, it seems that guns were permitted. One young lady brought her brothers' rifle, and not knowing it was loaded, 'presented' the gun and pulled the trigger. The gun went off, and the ball entered the arm of Miss Magige Dettman, daughter of Mr. Fred Dettman, of this village. Some time was spent by the doctors probing for the bullet, but without success, so it was thought best to have the patient removed to Toronto hospital. We learn that the ball was found and removed and latest advices were that he was doing as well as could be expected.

EDISON Makes Carbolic Acid

In making their Phonograph Records, the Edison Company are the largest users of Carbolic Acid in the United States. Germany and Austria were the sources of supply previous to the war, and on the breaking out of hostilities this supply was cut off. Not to be hindered in their business, Mr. Edison had machinery prepared immediately and in eighteen days from the time the supply was cut off they were manufacturing their own carbolic acid right in their own factory.

The Edison Company also have the satisfaction of finding that the carbolic acid of their own manufacture is much superior to the imported article they used previously.

This will be far surpassed as a business achievement by the announcement contained in the following telegram from Edison headquarters, which was sent to the Canadian distributors, and a copy of which was sent to the J. M. Greene Music Co., of this City. It speaks for itself, and will relieve owners of Edison Diamond Disc and Cylinder Phonographs, or intending purchasers, of any doubt of the supply of instruments or records becoming short:

"Conditions at Edison plant not so serious as the newspapers report. Original Master moulds all safe in vaults. Laboratories and power plant not damaged. Officers promise new records and instruments within six weeks. 3,000 laborers now busy clearing away debris. New plant will be larger and better than ever.

"(Signed) B. W. SMITH,
"Committee,
"Thomas A. Edison Inc."

The J. M. Greene Company had large orders for both instruments and records place both before and since the fire, and these goods will be delivered from the large stock on hand, and in transit, for the Canadian distributors, so that the local firm will have practically no delay or shortage in their supply.

either to Flanders or southward across the French frontier.

A defensive as stubborn and unyielding as that presented by the Germans east of the Yser river cannot be said to have crumbled, but the German line is nevertheless slowly drawing back. The corresponding advance by the British and French may be regarded with some dubiety, as it will place the allies in occupation of ground recently held by the Germans, which has been entrenched, fortified and possibly mined to meet attack from the west.

Many rapid movements of troops have been taking place within Belgium recently, which, it is believed can only portend a retirement to newly prepared lines of defence, where the Germans will go into winter quarters.

"In Belgium the Franco-Belgian troops have debouched from Nieuport and occupied the line from the outskirts west of Lombaertzyde to the farm of Saint Georges.

"To the south of Ypres we made an attack in the direction of Klein Zillebeke and gained 500 metres, 550 yards.

"In Alsace we continued to hold the heights which dominate Steinbach.

"On the rest of the front there is nothing to report."

An official statement was also issued last night by the British War Office. It says:—

"After a period of comparative quiet, the fighting in Northern France has recommenced.

"A combined attack by the allies was made yesterday on the line from Hollebeke to Wyteschaete, in Belgium. Several German trenches and a number of prisoners were captured, and substantial progress was made."

UNIQUE BOOK OUT

King Albert's Plea For His People is Ready For the Public's Pleasure

MANY CONTRIBUTORS

LONDON, Dec. 16.—King Albert's book will be issued to-day. Already more than a quarter of a million copies are in the hands of the booksellers. Hall Caine is editor of the publication, which has contributions from well-known persons in many nations. The immediate purpose of the book is to raise funds for the Belgian refugees. There is a striking passage in Hon. Joseph Choate's contribution, which says: "Those who were guilty of an awful breach of faith confessed their crime while in act committing it, and pleaded necessity to absolve them from all law, a plea which the whole civilized world would not accept. As neutrals by international law and by our own law, our hands are tied, and will remain so, but our hearts go whither they list."

Amongst the European contributors are: Premier Asquith, Sir Edward Grey, Lord Kitchener, Henry Bergson, the Archbishop of Canterbury, Hall Caine, Ambassador Jusserand, Rudyard Kipling, Alfred Noyes, Owen Seaman, Pierre Loti, Lord Reading, Earl Rosebery, Cardinal Bourne, the Archbishop of York, Israel Zangwill and William Watson.

HEAVIER TAX ON AUTOMOBILES

Hon. W. J. Hanna, Provincial Secretary, was asked if the tax on motors would be raised at the commencement of the new year. Mr. Hanna refused to say whether the motor legislation taxing cars according to their horse-power would be introduced at the coming session and put into effect in January.

"An increase in the license tax can be looked for," said he. "I think that it is only reasonable that the tax should be increased. How much it will be increased I am not prepared to say. We cannot give out in advance what the Government proposes to do."

The Provincial Secretary would not admit that the new system of taxing motors was to be put into force after the session, but he said that any quotation as to the probable rate was purely imaginary, as the Government had not taken any steps towards putting the legislation in operation. The increasing of the tax is a matter that lies within the jurisdiction of Mr. Hanna's department.

THE GERMANS MASS ALONG THE VISTULA

Russians Report New Hordes of the Enemy Gathering and Fierce Fighting is Reported

PETROGRAD, Dec. 16.—The following official communication has been received from General Headquarters at the front:—

"In the Mlawa region our action continues, and the success gained by our troops has been maintained.

"On the left bank of the Vistula large forces of the enemy are concentrating. In the area adjacent to the river, near Ilow, the presence of several new bodies of the enemy which have just reached our front, has been disclosed. Since the morning of Dec. 14 there has been fierce fighting between Lowicz, the Vistula, and the left bank of the Bzura, and both sides have been alternately on the offensive and defensive. Our troops, however, have been able to make some progress.

"The fighting in the other regions along the whole stretch of the front has been less intense. A marked weakening of the enemy between Czenstochowa and Cracow is reported and in that region the Germans are completing their movements by railway towards the passes of the Carpathians.

"In western Galicia the battle is developing."

According to The Army Messenger, the German attacks along the East Prussian front, which were conducted simultaneously with their offensive in Poland, failed on account of formidable fortifications which the Russians constructed in fields and forests paralleling the German lines.

The Grand Duke Nicholas records the fact without the slightest comment. The consensus of military opinion fully endorses his attitude of complete equanimity.

The Novoe Vremya understands that German and Austrian subjects, within six months, must sell any real estate they possess in Russia, otherwise it will be sold by public auction or expropriated.

Military observers in London, commenting upon Russia's failure to clear Poland of German troops, dwell upon the fact that even Russia's vast resources in men may continue to prove unavailing unless existing methods of communication are improved. On two occasions Russian forces approaching the German frontier have been driven back by reason of the remarkable system of German railroads, which enables Germany to move her troops expeditiously, and it has been suggested that Russia should begin at once the construction of new transverse lines in Poland and the improvement of existing lines. Temporary lines, it is argued, could be laid at the rate of ten or twelve miles a day.

"Enormous forces are massed on both sides of a definite position among the slopes and along the winding courses of streams between the Carpathians and Cracow. There also are movements on a considerable scale within the three chief Carpathian passes leading toward the valley of the San.

Reverse Acknowledged.

BERLIN, Dec. 16.—A retreat of the German forces which attempted to strike at Warsaw from the north was acknowledged in an official communication given out yesterday at army headquarters. The statement follows:

"The German column which had advanced from Soldau, East Prussia, by way of Mlawa, in the direction of Ciechanow, has had to re-occupy its old positions owing to the numerical superiority of the enemy."

White Christmas In Prospect

With almost five inches of snow on the ground, cold, invigorating air, twenty-five degrees of frost, a forecast of "decidedly cold" with no immediate prospects of a change, the weather man is prone to believe that there might possibly be a "white Christmas" this year.

"Of course, that is not an easy question to answer," he said. "It is a little early yet to forecast for the 25th of December. The outlook is for cold weather and if it continues the present snow may be on the ground when Christmas comes, but we can't tell what will happen between now and then. As there has been skating twice already this season, I would not be surprised to see good ice for Christmas."

Christmas Day this year is to be fine, if we will believe the old proverb: "If snow fall on St. Lucy's Day (Sunday, when four inches fell) Christmas will be clear and sunny."

The Court of Revision

The Court of Revision met last evening to consider a number of appeal against the assessment for street paving. Several appeals were allowed and adjustments made.

B. F. COX GIVEN A YEAR FOR THEFT

HAMILTON, Dec. 16.—Benjamin F. Cox was listed for trial at the last sitting of the criminal court, but the Crown was not prepared to go on until yesterday morning, when the prisoner elected to be tried by His Honour Judge Monck at the weekly criminal court. It was charged that he did unlawfully conspire with one, P. H. Dulmage, to obtain $100 from Alfred R. Hawkins by false pretence, fraud and deceit, with intent to defraud, also $100 from Herbert Spence and $300 from Allan Palmer. He pleaded guilty to all three charges. Cox, in witness box, swore he and P. H. Dulmage formed a detective agency, proceeding at once to sell stock. The prisoner said that he came to this country and met Dulmage, who promptly played him for a tool. Herbert Lennox, K.C., of Toronto, made an eloquent appeal on behalf of Cox, but His Honour sentenced him to one year in Central Prison, taking into consideration that he had already served about three months.

Board of Trade Discussed the Matter at Last Night's Meeting—Four Trains Have Been Taken Off—Two Each Way—Will Invite Competition From G.T.R.

A committee composed of Messrs. W. C. Ackerman, J. Hamilton, J. W. Worth and B. D. Hall has been delegated to act in conjunction with the City Council in the matter of securing an improved train service on the Canadian Pacific Railway. On December 13th last four passenger trains were taken off, including the fast train leaving Peterborough each afternoon for Toronto and the Sunday train. By four trains is meant two trains each way. Letters have been received from various officials of the C.P.R., in justification of this action, claiming that the "enormous shrinkage in traffic" was alone responsible.

Mr. Robert Fair, who was present at last night's meeting of the Board of Trade, said that Peterborough was no better off than it was fifteen years ago in so far as the C.P.R. train service was concerned. He cited several instances to show the disadvantage that would accrue to Peterborough by reason of the changes.

The Grand Trunk.

It was suggested by Mr. Ackerman that steps be taken to see the Grand Trunk railway officials and arrange for an improved service on that line. A train from Peterborough to connect with the International Limited at Port Hope, would partially fill the requirements.

Several other members of the Board registered their objections to the new arrangement instituted by the C. P. R.

Mr. W. S. Dodd, local agent of the C.P.R., was present. He explained the situation and the circumstances which prompted the Company to make the changes. He said that the receipts from the Sunday train would seldom exceed five dollars. This train was operated at a loss. Mr. Dodd also explained that while the regular after noon train to Toronto stopped at all statons very little more time was required to complete the trip. Considerable misconception existed as to the speed of local and fast trains.

Wanted a Sunday Train.

Mayor Buller said that the meeting was not for the purpose of casting insinuations in the direction of the Company. He was satisfied that the Company was prepared to go to considerable extent to accommodate the travelling public of Peterborough. He believed that the present difficulty would be solved by the addition of a Sunday train and if possible a fast train to Toronto each afternoon.

Mr. Hall, President of the Board, intimated that the G. T. R. officials had promised competitive train service. He suggested that the matter be taken up with the Company.

With this object in view a Committee was appointed to deal with the matter. A vote of thanks was extended to Mr. W. S. Dodd and Mr. James Skinner of the C.P.R., for the very able manner in which they had served the interests of the community in which they moved. This was done in order that the remarks expressed at the meeting might not be construed into criticism for the local officials of the Company.

A LETTER FROM EMPRESS OF IRELAND

E Co'y, 21st Battalion,
Canadian Expeditionary Force,
Kingston, Dec. 15, 1914.

Dear Sir,—Reading the Examiner today I noticed some Peterborough lady had received a letter which had gone down with the Empress of Ireland. There is one of our boys who received a letter to-night from Peterborough with the remains of the letter that he sent to his mother on the 24th of May. His name is Bugler David C. Stewart, 554 Albert Street, Peterborough.

From
One of the Boys.

A Matter Of Law

Dear Mr. Editor,—Our Chief of Police is an excellent officer, but he has not chosen a very good legal adviser to explain the new cigarette law. The chief's lawyer may lay down the law, but he isn't strong in the laws of English grammar. He says an act passed last parliament forbids the sale of cubeb cigarettes to minors. He says this new law reads this way:

"For the purpose of this Act the word cigarette includes any small cigar made of tobacco, rolled up in paper, tobacco leaf or other material."

And he says this forbids the sale to minors of anything in the form of a cigarette, whether made of tobacco, cubeb berries or anything else.

Now Mr. Editor, I am not a lawyer, thank goodness, nor the son of a lawyer, but I haven't gone to school till I'm fifteen without knowing a little about grammar and what the English language means. The law the chief's lawyer speaks of says—well, I won't rewrite it, but will write it in a way to show what I think it means. I will put in some words, in a parenthis, that will explain it this way:

"For the purpose of this act the word cigarette includes any small cigar made of tobacco, rolled up in a paper, (rolled up in a) tobacco leaf or (rolled up in) any other material."

Now, Mr. Editor, this means, if words mean anything, that the cigarette the new law forbids, must be composed of tobacco, no matter what it is rolled in, whether it is tobacco leaf or rice paper or tarred paper. It's the contents of this thing and not the wrapper, that the law forbids. The law dosn't say a word, as I can see, about cubebs. It isn't the form of the cigarette as the chief's legal adviser said; that's not it, it's the contents which the law says must, in order to be unlawful, be of tobacco. According to the chief's lawyer it's the form or shape of a cigarette that is unlawful, and acording to his argument something square or three-cornered, even if it had tobacco in it, would not be unlawful. The law doesn't say a word against cubebs, which they say is good for catarrh if it is inhaled through the nose, that is if smoked in a pipe or cigarette, and I don't believe the law forbids it to be sold to a minor or a major or a captain or a corporal. I may not know much about law, but if words mean anything I argue that the law doesn't forbid the sale of cubebs rolled up in the form of cigarettes. I am only a high school boy, but I am conceited enough to think that I know what words mean, and I'll bet the Chief of Police or his lawyer, or the Chief Justice a dollar to the hole in a doughnut that the law they speak of doesn't refer to the shape of the cigarette but to its contents—the stuffing. Hoping this may find room in your valuable paper,

Yours truly,
Form 11.

FIREMEN SAVED LIFE.

After Young Man's Heart Stopped Hospital Staff Called Fire Brigade.

KINGSTON, Ont., Dec. 16. — Michael Mulvehill, aged 20, owes his life to the pulmotor, worked by members of the city fire department. He is a patient at the Hotel Dieu. Yesterday afternoon he was removed to the operating room to undergo an operation for appendicitis. After the anaesthetic had been administered it was found that the young man's heart was too weak to stand it. His respiration stopped for three minutes, and a rush call was given for the pulmotor, which is kept at the fire hall. The work of the pulmotor saved his life, for after working half an hour the firemen succeeded in reviving him. He is out of danger and doing well.

The Duke of Connaught will be here Friday to inspect all the soldiers for overseas service. He will also make a visit to the Royal Military College. Premier Borden is expected here to review the men in the course of a few days.

Scores Put To Death.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 16.—During the past ten days from 100 to 150 Mexicans have been executed in Mexico City, according to official reports which reached the U. S. Government yesterday from one of its agents there.

Just who ordered the executions has not been disclosed, nor are any of the names of those put to death known.

Except for these executions, which are understood, according to the report, to be happening daily, conditions in the city itself are quiet and Provisional President Guiterrez, with the allied Villa and Zapata forces is maintaining order.

ST. CATHARINES, Ont., Dec. 16. —Fire from an unknown cause broke out in the Thorold Pulp Mill last night, and fanned by stiff wind, destroyed the entire plant. The firemen were hampered by the fact that the water supply was shut off for making repairs. The loss is $12,000 to $15,000, partially covered by insurance.

THE WORLD OF SPORT

INSTRUCTIONS ISSUED THE O. H. A. CLUBS

Playing Certificates Have Been Sent Out—Clubs Are Requested to Pay Particular Attention to the Lighting of Their Rinks

The new playing certificates for the season were sent out to the various clubs of the O.H.A. last night, with instructions to the secretaries that the certificates should be returned to the O.H.A. secretary at once to be countersigned and passed by committee; have the certificates properly filled out and in duplicate, so that there will be no confusion.

The following instructions were also enclosed:

Each club is responsible for the eligibility of its players.

Junior players must be under 20 years of age, January 1, 1915.

Certificates are revocable by the association without notice.

All certificates must be filled out properly and countersigned by the secretary of the Association.

Each player must have a certificate signed by himself in ink, and by the president and secretary of his club. (Sign certificate where designated, as one-half is to be kept by the association.)

Birth Certificates for Juniors.

In adition all junior players must furnish official birth certificates from the Parliament Buildings, registry office, or Church records. These should be sent in with the playing certificate and not separately. No junior will be allowed to play until this is done.

Official birth certificates filed last year for eligible junior players desiring to play this year will not require to be renewed.

Clubs are requested to pay particular attention to the lighting of their rinks and to the condition of the goal nets. Both must be perfectly satisfactory to the referee, or there will be trouble for the home club.

No junior player will be eligible to again play in that series who plays more than one intermediate or one senior game in that season.

The Residence Rule.

Under the residence rule, a player must be a bona fide and continuous resident of the town to which his club belongs since August 1, 1914. The exceptions are students, teachers and sailors. The latter must play where they were living in rural districts, villages, or police villages must play in their nearest O..A. towns.

No player who has received an O. H. A. certificate shall play in an exhibition match for another club without first receiving permission from the Association.

No player shall play for more than one club in the association year, nor shall he sign a certificate for more than one club.

Any club intending to default a match must give three days' clear notice to opposing club and the Association. Failure to give such notice will cost offending club $25, in addition to all expenses.

A Default Puts a Team Out.

A club defaulting any match debars itself from further competition. All scheduled matches played by such club will count as played, and all unplayed matches will count as wins to the teams scheduled against the club defaulting.

Every club must file a list of officers with the association. Do this at once and save a lot of unnecessary correspondence.

O.H.A. clubs playing in another association must give precedence to O. H. A. scheduled matches.

A junior may play one intermediate or one senior game with his own club, and an intermediate player may play one senior game. Two games will disqualify the player from competing in the lower series.

Failure to start a game on the scheduled hour will cost the offending team or teams a fine of $10.

All clubs are required to register their playing colours with the association. Send these in with the list of officers.

Expenses of Visiting Club.

Expenses of the travelling club are ten cents per mile for one way for eight men, which amount must be paid by the home club.

The junior birth certificates must be official documents issued by the Register-General's Department at the Parliament Buildings, Toronto, or by a local registrar, or an extract from a Church baptismal record, certified to by the clergyman in charge.

Any club refusing or failing to play the club against which it is matched debars itself from further competition.

Notice of the result of each match must be sent to the association by the victorious club through the referee.

The Referee's Fee.

Referee's fee is $5, in addition to an allowance at the rate of 10 cents a mile one way for all distances. The minimum of fee and allowance is $8, except in the case of a local referee. After the group winners are returned the association appoints all referees. Each club is to pay half the referee's expenses.

In case of a club playing its home game and defaulting the return game, the penalty wil be the payment of a sum sufficient to completely cover the expenses of the visiting club in the first game, such expenses to be hotel and 'bus bills for ten men and one-half the referee's expenses.

72 Hours' Notice for Referee.

Clubs failing to agree upon a referee must give the association seventy-two-hours' notice of their match, and an official will be sent; otherwise both teams will be ruled out of the competition. Either club may send in the notice. Clubs should agree on a referee whenever possible, and save trouble for themselves and the association.

Protests must be in duplicate and signed by the president or secretary; must be filed with the association within 48 hours of the match protested, and must be accompanied by a deposit of $25. Defending club has 36 hours to file a defence. Service personally or by registered post will conform with the rule. Protests on questions of fact will not be entertained, as the referee's decision is final.

SCOTTISH CUP TIES WILL BE CANCELLED

NEW YORK, Dec. 15.— A cable from London to the Herald says:

Following the decision of the Scottish Football Association last week to cancel the Scottish Cup ties for this season, strong rumours are gaining ground that the remaining league games may be abandoned. Every Scottish League team has given up several players who have gone on active service, and several of the clubs are finding great difficulty in getting together a team strong enough for each Saturday's league game.

The famous amateur club, Queen's Park, are the chief sufferers, the whole of their first eleven having gone to the war, and having to put a reserve team in the field each week will explain their position at the bottom of the league.

The first team of the Hearts, who are at the height of a brilliant record, have recently volunteered en bloc, and while six of their best players have already joined the colours, the remainder are expected to follow very shortly. The Hibernians, Rovers and Falkirk players have also made a strong rally for active service.

Socker has a tremendous hold in Scotland and intense interest, drawing large crowds at all league games, but with so many clubs and players taking part, stopping the schedule would not be so serious as if the games were abandoned in England, where the number of professional players total several thousand.

COLLINGWOOD THE FIRST BONSPIEL

Local Curlers Invited to Attend on January 12th, 1915

The weather has again played into the hands of the curlers. This morning the ice showed signs of being rounded into shape and if the atmosphere continues at this temperature it will not be long before the stones are trundled out and the exciting matches are commenced. The first bonspiel on the slate is that of Collingwood's Curling Club, which is to begin on January 12th, 1915. A letter from Messrs. G. B. Westwood and G. T. Stephens, officials of the club, contained an invitation for the local curlers to be represented.

People of Warsaw Confident.

WARSAW, Russian Poland, Dec. 16.— Notwithstanding the proximity of Warsaw to the battle front, the business of the city is proceeding as in times of peace. Although sound of cannonading may be heard at times, Christmas crowds throng the streets. Shops and cafes are decorated gaily, and the holiday spirit has dissipated the gloom of war.

Among every rank and class of society there is supreme confidence that Warsaw cannot be taken by the Germans.

Ministers Heard Fine Address

(It may be true that Jesus did no[t] identify himself with some special po[l]icy of reform which would require political implementing). He did no[t] prematurely enter into a vituperative expose of certain social events, yet he did not refrain from indignant invective when he thought it necessary. "Ye generation of vipers how can y[e] escape the damnation of hell." (Be[-]ware of the Scribes which desire t[o] walk in long robes, and love greet[-]ings in the markets, and the highe[st] seats in the synagogues and the chie[f] rooms at feasts, which devour widow[s] houses and for a show make lon[g] prayers."

Jesus drives home to the heart o[f] man that eternal principle in the ligh[t] of which all such moral corruptio[n] and social rottenness must disappea[r]. He makes no superficial attempt t[o] deal with the effects of immoral te[n]dencies. He strikes at the caus[e] which is to be found in the heart o[f] man. He brings the soul of man in[to] the presence of Light of Lights whic[h] is a consuming sublimating Fir[e]. "The Pure in Heart shall see God." By the divine alchemy the dross changed to pure gold. In gettin[g] right with God the isues of social lif[e] must be purified. The pure in heart[.] Every vile passion stayed. The pur[e] in heart! Every animal appetite co[n]trolled. The pure in heart! Kindle[s] at the eternal altar of purity ther[e] flames out an indignation against ev[e]ry attempt institutionalized or othe[r]wise which would degrades mankin[d] or rob woman of her glory—Jesus [is] content with no mere formal legal ex[-]pression. It was said of old "Tho[u] shalt not commit adultery." "Veri[ly] I say unto you he that looketh upon [a] woman to lust after her hath alread[y] committed adultery with her in h[is] heart." The foundation of life mu[st] be pure. Only the pure in heart sha[ll] see God.

The dynamic of the Gospel is nee[d]ed in our social affairs to-day. I[n]stitutionalized evil presents a cha[l]lenge to the Christian conscienc[e]. The liquor traffic, as an exampl[e] claims your attention. It thrusts i[t]self obtrusively upon you in its inves[t]ment of 1,200 millions of dollars [in] Great Britain and correspondi[ng] amounts in other countries; in a dri[n]bill approximating in Canada to [a] million dollars a year, in the Unit[ed] States to over 2,000 millions, in Gre[at] Britain to 1½ times the national r[e]venue, an amount equal to the rent [of] all her houses and farms; in a co[n]sumption in the United States increa[s]ing from four gallons per head [in] 1840 to 18 gallons at the close of t[he] last century; in its demand in so[me] communities for governmental outl[ay] for defence against it of eight tim[es] the amount of revenue it affords; [in] causing directly and indirectly fr[om] 80 to 90 per cent of all crimes, a[nd] from 20 to 75 per cent. of all paup[er]ism; in lives ruined, wives maltreat[ed] children starved, morals corrupt[ed] politics vitiated,—the countless a[nd] indescribable effects of this spawn [of] evil. When such an institution [is] wrecking the national and spiritu[al] lives of men, the justified soul th[at] waits too long at the forensic bar [of] the theological court may find its r[e]sponsibility unmet. An ultra-indiv[i]dualistic theology will lead to a se[l]fish spiritual life which stultifies i[t]self.

There is forced upon our attention [in]the gambling practice, one of u[r] most insidious and injurious of all [c]ercial vices. That man is a manly m[an] who desires to acquire goods in a[c]cordance with the equitable retu[rn] to his intelligent activity and owne[r]ship of capital. That man prostitute[s] his manhood and the instinct of self-preservation who desires to get some[-]thing from his fellowmen without giv[-]ing anything in return. Gambling in whatever form it takes is, robbery, 'a felony on the common purse of society.' It does not avail how much there may be pleaded the consent of the individual, or the power of contract; it is a transgression of eternal laws of justice, an attack upon the brotherhood of man, a stultification o[f] Christ's spirit of loving thy neighbour as thyself. It enters into so-called 'society' alongside of pink teas and whist and bridge, when culture flees before vulgar excitement, and lovely woman loses her charm to greed. It appears in book-making, land-jobbing, note-skiting, paper companies, bucket-shop manipulations galore. The principle is the same whether clothed in the dulcet accents of pink tea bridge, in the raucous shout of the race-meet, or in the reverent (?) tones of the church bazaar raffle. The people of New York know how institutionalized evil fights. Ex-Governor Hughes put the case concisely when he said 'Political manipulators and representatives of special interests who try to pervert the God for selfish purposes hold the people in contempt. Their political creed is that the people are to be fooled and that victory is to the unscrupulous.' Let a nation persist in legalizing race-track, or other forms of gambling, and it is digging the grave of its national integrity and honour. Once let a national cloak of respectability be permanently cast about the illegitimate satisfaction of man's fundamental economic desire, and that nation has entered upon the road to political Hades. The Christian man should carry his conscience into all objective spheres of life. George Adam Smith says, 'Confine religion to the personal, it grows rancid, morbid. Wed it to patriotism, it lives in the open air and its blood is pure."

Social impurity faces us to-day in an institutionalized syndicated form. This is the worst of all the social evils. The details of the prostitution of virtue and of a ghastly traffic almost unthinkable in its virulence, are too revolting for presentation. Every parent should know of the danger, every woman should be informed of the peril, every man should feel it's a call upon his chivalry. It is estimated that 40,000 victims yearly swell the roll of American experience. The physical stamina of many a nation is being eaten out by this black disease. The operating table, the insane asylum, the syphilitic hospital, the blind children's home, the grave-yard of the nameless, are sad testimonies of the prevalence of this vice. Men, in whose blood there is the fire of youth, I appeal to you. Edmund Burke once

The question of raising the wages of the seamen was submitted to the Board of Trade for arbitration shortly after the war broke out. The men requested an advance of $5 per month over their old wages, to cover the extra risks of navigation.

DR. HIGGINBOTHAM.

Well known in the city and district, Dr. Higginbotham passed to his last long rest early this morning at the residence of his son-in-law, E. W. Cameron. His decease brings to a close a life of industry and effort in the 67th year of his age. The late doctor has for many years been in practice first taking his medical degrees at Queen's University. Omemee was his first seat, where he built up a large practice before coming to Brantford. He went to Walkerton and there, as in Omemee, he was very successful, only returning again to Brantford on the death of his wife, who was before her marriage to the doctor, in 1873, a Miss Olivia L. Matchett, and daughter of the late Thomas Matchett, for many years Treasurer of Victoria County.

Left to mourn his loss are, one daughter, Mrs. E. W. Cameron of this City, one brother, Andrew of Lindsay, and two sisters, Misses Minnie and Jane of Toronto.

The funeral will take place on Thursday afternoon to Greenwood cemetery where the remains will be interred.—Brantford Expositor.

CRUISER INTERNS.

Converted German Warship Cormorant Runs Into Guam.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 16.— Voluntary internment yesterday of the German converted cruiser Cormorant and her 22 officers and 355 men at Guam, an American Pacific Ocean insular possession, brought what promises to be troublesome questions, involving the observance of American neutrality in this case to a prompt and final adjustment.

As soon as it was learned at the Navy Department that the Cormorant had put into Guam short of coal, food and water, there was immediate discussion as to the extent to which the warship could replenish her supply in an American port.

In view of Guam's remoteness from any German port, the decision to intern was expected, but in the meantime Capt. Maxwell, governor of the far-away naval station, was instructed to observe strict neutrality in all his dealings with the German commander.

RULERS MEET TO-MORROW.

Kings of Norway, Sweden and Denmark to Settle Differences.

CHRISTIANIA, Dec. 16. — (Via London.)—The meeting of the three kings—Haakon of Norway, Gustav of Sweden, and Christian of Denmark—at Malmo, Sweden, on Thursday on the initiative of King Gustav, will be the first conference of these three Scandinavian monarchs to discuss state affairs since the dissolution of the Duality between Norway and Sweden in 1905.

The newspapers of the three kingdoms are expressing the greatest satisfaction at this evidence that the strained relations between the royal families of Norway and Sweden have come to an end with this holding out of the olive branch by King Gustav.

NO COURT-MARTIAL THREATENED.

AMSTERDAM, Dec. 16. — (Via London.)—A message from Antwerp, says that 80 soldiers, who participated in the recent mutiny among the Bavarian troops garrisoning that city are to be court-martialed.

It is stated that the mutineers broke furniture and many windows in the barracks, attracting a great crowd, which the police were forced to hold back. The soldiers displayed Bavarian flags and decorated the portrait of Queen Elizabeth of Belgium, who is a Bavarian by birth.

READY FOR ADVANCE.

General Activity Is Witnessed Along the Allied Lines.

LONDON, Dec. 16.—All along the battle line from Flanders to the Vosges the allies began yesterday to move forward with the immediate object of driving the Germans out of Belgium.

According to information from a highly-placed personage in touch with the War Office, the Kaiser's troops, if this new movement be successful, should be thrown back on their second line in Belgium from Bruges to Courtrai, a distance of 20 miles, within three weeks.

The authority for the information concerning this most important development pointed out that yesterday's attack at Hollebeke is probably only one of the last feeling-out movements begun by Gen. Joffre about ten days ago. From the sea to the Swiss frontier, the allied troops have been sounding out the Germans' strength by small attacks at various points. Evidently the result of this process has been highly satisfactory.

The commanders in the field figure that by their present strategy either Belgium may be freed of the invaders by spring or the Germans be forced to withdraw so many men from the eastern theatre of war that pressure on the Russians will be relieved to such extent that their advance into Germany will be made practically certain. It is believed, according to the same authority that the duration of the war will be shortened by fully three months unless some unforeseen obstacle overthrows their present plan.

In making the change, Generals Joffre and French were actuated largely by the discovery that their estimate of the number of effectives under their command had erred on the right side, as it was too conservative.

The French first-line regiments needed far less time in which to recuperate from the early months of the war than Gen. Joffre had allotted to them, and the men of Kitchener's new army and territorials have shown themselves to be ready for the firing line months before Kitchener had intended to send them to France.

BERLIN WORRIED.

Defeat of Austria By Servians Drenches German Hopes.

LONDON, Dec. 16.—The Austrian army in Servia has not recovered from the surprise which the Servians gave it. Just when they were thought to be beaten, the Servians turned on the invaders and drove them westward and northward out of Servian territory. The only part of Servia remaining in Austrian hands comprises a small territory, including the towns of Shabats and Losnitza.

It is now announced on behalf of Servia that the previous retreats were due to a lack of ammunition, and that the stores have been replenished by captures from the Austrians.

The little Montenegrin army is also doing its share, and, according to a Cettinje report, has succeeded in cutting off part of the Austrian right wing, which retreated into Bosnia.

Announcement of the capture of Belgrade by the Austrians less than two weeks ago was received with the greatest enthusiasm, and resulted in great jubilation.

The suddenness of the reverse suffered by the Austrians consequently came as a complete surprise in Germany.

A Matter of Strategy.

VIENNA, Dec. 16. — An official statement issued here yesterday, commenting on the recapture of Belgrade by the Servian forces, admits that for strategical purposes the temporary abandonment of Belgrade by the Austrian troops was desirable.

BRIEFS FROM THE WIRES.

It is officially denied in Vienna that Austria-Hungary has attempted to conclude a separate peace with Servia.

The patriotic committee of the Kent County Council has decided to purchase a machine gun to be presented to the Militia Department.

Joseph Gerauda, a former chef at Freeman's Hotel, Montreal, has been killed in action in France, where he was serving with the French army.

It was announced at the Russian War Office yesterday that since the beginning of the war 80,000 Austrian prisoners have been sent to Siberia.

The United States naval collier Jason, which brought Christmas gifts from the American people to the children of the belligerent powers, left Genoa, Italy, yesterday for Saloniki.

Peter McArthur, the Canadian writer and journalist, has written an "Open Letter to Santa Claus," suggesting that Canadian apples be placed in the stockings of children this Christmas, instead of oranges.

Under a new lighting order issued by the British Home Secretary, the streets of London will be even gloomier than before. The use of lights for outside advertising and for the illumination of shop fronts is entirely prohibited after sunset.

Clasped Baby's Dead Body.

HAMILTON, Ont., Dec. 16. — One of the most distressing cases of poverty discovered by charity workers came to light yesterday, when a woman, lying ill on a bundle of straw, was found clasping her dead babe to her breast. The child had died of starvation.

The woman had nothing to eat for days, and there was no fuel in the house from which the furniture had been moved.

Twelve Thousand Boys Enrol.

BERLIN, Dec. 16.—Twelve thousand school boys between the ages of 15 and 17 have been enrolled as volunteer recruits in Berlin.

They have been divided into twenty companies, and their military training is proceeding with all possible speed. It is intended that they shall take the field early in the spring.

Germans Same Since Caesar

Italian Historian Says They Have Not Changed—Britain Always There To Help Belgians

(By Camillo Cianfarra.)

ROME, Dec. 12. Professor Arnaldo Cervesato, historian of the Roman Campagna, in an interview with the correspondent of the New York American, declared that, psychologically, the Germans have not changed much since the time of Caesar. He said certain aspects of the present war strongly recall the wars the Germans waged against Belgium and France before and after the Roman conquest of those two countries.

"First of all," Professor Cervesato said, "the plains of Belgium have always exercised a strong fascination on the Germans. As in modern times, the Germans of Tacitus and Caesar had a weakness for the richer and more fertile country of the Belgians and the valley of the Meuse.

"In ancient times, and by that I mean a century or two before Caesar, the Germans made periodical incursions into the nearby country.

"But, as the Belgians of to-day, those of Caesar were valiant and courageous. Historians call them the most valiant of all the peoples inhabiting the territory west of the Rhine, and this for two reasons. First, because the population of the southern part of France was somewhat effeminate, and, second, because their frequent wars with the Germans had developed to a high degree the military qualities of the Belgians.

"Apparently in their relations with their neighbours the Germans of Caesar behaved in a way not at all unlike the way they have acted toward the Belgians of the twentieth century. Caesar relates 'that they always claimed of having been attacked, when they instead had been the actual assailants.' As to-day, Great Britain was always there to help the Belgians. On many occasions, duly recorded by the Roman historians, Britannia sent troops to expel from Belgium the trespassing Germans, and the same support the Britons lent to the Gauls when at war with the Germans."

"May I say just a word before you impose sentence?" asked the street railway magnate. "Well, what is it?" snapped the Court. "Please remember, your Honour, that you are imposing sentence and not granting me a franchise," he cautioned, fearing for the worst.

"Man is made of dust," sighed the Sage. "Yes," replied the Fool. "And the kind of dust some men are made of wouldn't sell for 30 cents an acre."

Rush To Recruit A Direct Result Of German Raid

SEVENTY-FIVE CIVILIANS KILLED IN BOMBARDMENT OF COAST TOWNS

Latest Casualty List Shows Shells of German Fleet Resulted in Death of Many Non-combatants--Greatest Boom in Recruiting Since the War Began.

ADMIRALTY WILL NOT CHANGE PLANS

Special Morning Cable:

LONDON, Dec. 17.—Calm but deadly anger is the keynote of the national sentiment to-day, following the sensational raid upon the British coast cities yesterday by the German cruisers which bombarded Scarborough, Hartlepool and Whitby.

Despite the fact that the warships of the enemy succeeded in threading their way through the mine fields of the North sea and approached within a mile of the British coast at some points, there is firm determination not to permit such isolated raids to interfere with the present plans of the Admiralty and the War Office for the disposition of the British naval and land forces.

The latest casualty lists to-day account for 75 civilians killed and 267 wounded in the three cities attacked by the Germans.

The London and provincial newspapers to-day unanimously support the Admiralty and the War Office in the determination to follow out all present plans for the fleet and army.

After the first rush for the railway stations in Scarborough, Hartlepool and Whitby, the excitement subsided yesterday and there was no sign of a panic.

The greatest boom in recruiting since the war began is certain as a result of the German bombardment. Already there has been a rush to the colours. Within two hours after the bombardment of Scarborough, forty men from one factory in the city enlisted for service. Throughout the country men began appearing at the recruiting offices even while the British North Sea squadron was still pursuing the German raiders.

100 Freight Cars a Day Needed To Take Christmas Presents to Front

PARIS, Dec. 16.—The number of Christmas and New Year packages going forward for the French soldiers at the front is already so great that the military authorities have found it necessary to issue a note to the public suggesting to the families of soldiers that they reduce their gifts to a minimum.

The heavier parcels now require for their transportation no less than one hundred freight cars a day, while the lighter weight packages going by mail are averaging 220,000 daily.

The Premier, Mr. Rene Viviani, who is making a trip through territory held temporarily by the Germans earlier in the war, in order that he may procure information concerning economic conditions in these sections, stopped to-day at Montdidier and inspected the American hospital there. He paid his respects to the directors.

CAPT. FESSENDEN IS PROMOTED

By the British War Office—Has Local Relatives

HAMILTON, Dec. 16 — Word has been received here that Captain J. H. Fessenden of the British Army Service Corps, a Hamilton boy, has been appointed Major. He was stationed in England before the outbreak of hostilities, and is a nephew of Mrs. Clementine Fessenden, of Robinson street, and a son of Cortez Fessenden. As a family the Fessenden are doing their share in the present war. His brother, Trenholm, is now in Ottawa with the Royal Canadian engineers, and another brother has recently received his commision in the imperial army.

Captain J. H. Fessenden is a relative of Mr. C. Fessenden of the staff of the Peterborough Collegiate Institute.

SERVIANS HAVE CAPTURED 80,000 OF AUSTRIAN INVADERS

Official Report From Nish Tells of the Rounding Up of Another 10,000 of the Invading Army---Only 30,000 Left in the Force Operating Against Servia.

Special Cable:

NISH, Dec. 17.—The total number of Austrian prisoners now held by the Servians, is placed at eighty thousand, in an official statement here to-day.

"During the battle of Tartak for the heights dominating Belgrade," the statement asserts, "the Servians captured another ten thousand men, making the total number of Austrian prisoners taken by ours troops 80,000.

"The entire strength of the Austrian southern army operating against us is now only 30,000 men."

HEARING DENIED HENRI BOURASSA

Ottawa Audience Sang Patriotic Songs and Waved Flag—Prussian Culture in Ontario Charged

OTTAWA, Dec. 16.—Henri Bourassa, the Nationalist leader, came to Ottawa to-night to make a speech. He did not deliver it. The Russell Theatre was packed from floor to ceiling with a crowd of nearly 3,000 who refused to listen.

The trouble began early. As the crowd was surging its way into the building, one of the policemen lost his temper, and brutally treated a young man. Seeing this, a number of soldiers rushed the police, the doors were smashed and the crowd filed in.

The audience was good humoured and sang patriotic songs. Dr. Freeland was chairman and when he and Mr. Bourassa came on the platform the uproar became tremendous. For half an hour the Nationalist leader waited for silence, but the crowd never gave him a chance to begin.

The singing continued after Mr. Bourassa moved to a corner and began to address a reporter. He refused to stop when the audience sang "God Save the King." The climax was reached when one of the soldiers jumped on the platform, lifted a Union Jack from the table and held it out for Bourassa to wave. Bourassa refused and a great roar went up. Several soldiers mounted the platform, Bourassa disappeared and the curtain went down. For an hour afterwards the crowd stayed singing songs, but there was no disturbance other than noise. Speaking of his reception in Ottawa Mr. Bourassa said: "It is what I might have expected from Prussian culture in Ontario."

The Official Statement of War Office

LONDON, Dec. 1.—The official Press Bureau late to-night issued the following statement from the War Office regarding the German raid:

"At 8 a.m. to-day three enemy ships were sighted off Hartlepool, and at 8:15 they commenced a bombardment. These ships appeared to be two battle cruisers and one armoured cruiser.

"The land batteries replied, and are reported to have hit and damaged the enemy.

"At 8:50 the firing ceased, and the enemy steamed away. None of our guns were touched. One shell fell in the Royal Engineers' lines, and several in the lines of the 18th Service Battalion, of the Durham Light Infantry.

"The casualties among the troops amounted to seven killed and fourteen wounded.

"Some damage was done to the town, and the gas works were set on fire.

"During the bombardment, especially in West Hartlepool, the people crowded in the streets, and approximately twenty-two were killed and fifty wounded.

"At the same time a battle cruiser and an armoured cruiser appeared off Scarborough, and fired about fifty shots, which caused considerable damage, and thirteen casualties are reported.

"At Whitby two battle cruisers fired some shots, doing damage to buildings, and the following casualties are reported, two killed, two wounded.

"At all three places there was an entire absence of panic, and the demeanour of the people was everything that could be desired."

Prominent People Killed By Shells

SCARBOROUGH, Eng., Dec. 17.—The casualities in Scarborough as a result of the attack by German war ships this morning include among the killed John Hall, a prominent alderman; Alfred Beale, a postman; Mrs. Bennett and two children, Mrs. Merryweather and Miss Trow, all well known residents of the city; two unidentified women, a housemaid, a young woman named MacIntyre, and a baby belonging to a family of the workingclass.

The town was aroused by firing about 8 o'clock. German warships, accompanied by a trawler, had come into the south bay under cover of a mist.

There was a lull in the firing at a quarter past 8 o'clock, and then the shooting began again, more sharply. Women and children took the first train from the station.

Organist Musgrove of St. Martin's Church, says communion was being celebrated by Archdeacon Mackarness when two shells struck the edifice, but that the congregation remained calm.

"Soon after the bombardment began the guns on Castle Hill made reply. The Balmoral and Royal Hotels were struck and many houses along the waterfront were riddled."

The bodies of the dead were taken to the mortuary, and the wounded to hospitals, the work being carried on amid the falling shells.

At various places in the city it is difficult to force a passage through the streets on account of the debris.

The first shots were directed on the heights, but they failed to hit their mark. The cruisers then turned their attention to the electric light works and the gas tanks, evidently having accurate plans of the town. They failed, however to destroy these, although they damaged the buildings in the vicinity considerably. Bookkeeper Woods of the Electric Company and his son both were hit and slightly wounded.

"Both my son and myself," said Mr. Wood, "were standing near a butcher shop in the vicinity of our home when a shell burst overhead. It took off the roof of the butcher shop. I got my wife and boy into our cellar and then gathered together a few belongings in order to get away from the place.

PARALYZED LIMBS.

To-day it is sleeplessness, headaches, digestive trouble and irritability. Next thing you know some form of paralysis has developed. Mr. Alex. Honeburger, 10 Moore Street, St. Catharines, Ont., writes: "Nervous trouble developed into paralysis of the limbs so that I became helpless. Doctors failed me, but after using ten boxes of Dr. Chase's Nerve Food I resumed work, and now feel better than I did for 20 years."

REPORT OF ADMIRALTY

LONDON, Dec. 16.—The following statement was issued to-night by the Secretary of the Admiralty on the German attack on the English coast:

"This morning a German cruiser force made a demonstration upon the Yorkshire coast, in the course of which they shelled Hartlepool, Whitby and Scarborough.

"A number of their fastest ships were employed for this purpose, and they remained about an hour on the coast.

"They were engaged by patrol vessels on the spot. As soon as the presence of the enemy was reported, a British patrolling squadron endeavoured to cut them off. On being sighted by the British vessels, the Germans retired at full speed, and favoured by the mist, succeeded in making good their escape.

"The losses on both sides are small, but full reports have not yet been received.

"The Admiralty take the opportunity of pointing out that demonstrations of this character against unfortified towns or commercial ports, though not difficult to accomplish, provided that a certain amount of risk is accepted, are devoid of military significance.

"They may cause some loss of life among the civil population and some damage to private property, which is much to be regretted; but they must not in any circumstances be allowed to modify the general naval policy which is being pursued."

IN THE WORLD OF FINANCE

It is said that Mr. Geo. J. Bury, the new vice-president of C.P.R., will be elected a director of the road.

A BATH IN AUSTRIA

It Was Full of Surprises For the Visiting Englishman.

JOHANN WAS TOO ATTENTIVE.

The Valet Was Only Doing as He Would Have Done Had His Master, the Prince, Been in the Guest's Place, but It Jarred the Briton's Nerves.

Although I live in England, which is supposed to be the home of aristocratic privilege, says a contributor to Chambers' Journal, I had no true conception of the meaning of the words until I visited some Austrian friends at a great castle some five hours' journey from Vienna.

It was a tropically hot day, and the train was crowded, but when the conductor found that I was going to visit Prince A. he cleared my compartment of passengers and did all he could to make me comfortable. At the little station the peasants stood with bared heads while I made my way to the waiting carriage, and as we rushed through the village hats were raised and the street was cleared for our galloping steeds.

At the castle I was shown to a room in one of the turrets, where I found the jager who had met me at the railway station unpacking my luggage. But the first essential was a bath. He was full of "desolation," but something had gone wrong with the water pipes in the turret, and therefore the bathroom could not be used, but if the high and well born excellency would condescend to use a hip bath he would instantly bring one. The bath was brought and prepared, but the tall jager still remained in the room.

"You can finish the unpacking afterward," I said. "I will ring when I have had my bath."

Johann turned from an open drawer, his face blank with amazement. "But is it not the high and well born excellency that I should wash?" he asked.

The German of the "high and well born excellency" failed him. There was a pause; then, after a repeated declaration that I would ring when I wanted him, Johann left the room clearly under protest. "I shall be outside the door if the high and well born one should need me," he said reproachfully.

I was no more than in the bath when the door opened and the stalwart figure appeared. "Is it not cold water over the back of the high and well born excellency that I should pour?"

"No; certainly not!" The door closed again protestingly.

A few seconds later Johann came into the room with an air of triumph, bearing a large bath towel. "Ah, the splashing is over! Now the high and well born excellency I may be permitted to dry."

But he was not even permitted the high and well born excellency to dry.

"What will my prince say?" he said, looking at me in bewilderment. "His serene highness commanded me to show the excellency every attention, and the excellency will allow me to do nothing for him—nothing."

At dinner I sat next to the Princess Karl, the wife of the eldest son, a beautiful Hungarian who possessed all the charm and vivacity of her race. "I'm afraid you are not being properly looked after," she said. "Johann told my husband that you ordered him out of the room."

"But he wanted to wash me," I explained. "He was most attentive, but that was an attention I did not desire."

"Poor Johann!" answered the princess. "He was much upset. He is Karl's special servant and was told to look after you on purpose. You see, he did not understand. He always washes Karl."

I made no attempt to conceal my astonishment, and when I glanced at Prince Karl, a broad shouldered giant, I could not help smiling.

"Why are you amused?" the princess asked.

"It seems so incongruous," I answered, "Prince Karl being washed!"

But I afterward learned that it is the usual custom for the Austrian nobility to be thoroughly well scrubbed in warm baths twice a day by their valets and dried afterward with hot towels. They are also dressed by their servants. The driving of poor Johann from my bedroom became a great joke in the family. Prince Karl declared that he had never dressed himself in his life.

"I tried it only once," said one of his brothers, an officer in the Imperial guards, "when my servant was ill and I had to go to a parade. I put all the buttons in the wrong buttonholes and got confined to barracks for a week in consequence."

In the old days the Austrian princes, counts and barons were sovereign lords in their own lands, which they held from the emperor in return for military service. Each of these great nobles held his own court, which was a reflection in miniature of the imperial court, and as it was considered an honor by men of the highest birth to assist at the toilet of the monarch, so it was considered an honor by those of lesser degree to render similar personal service to the great nobles. The dependence of their descendants upon their valets is only the survival of those feudal customs.

Ends Dry, Hoarse or Painful Coughs Quickly

A Simple, Home-Made Remedy, Inexpensive but Unequaled

The prompt and positive results given by this pleasant-tasting home-made cough syrup has caused it to be used in more homes than any other remedy. It gives almost instant relief and will usually overcome the average cough in 24 hours.

Get 2½ ounces Pinex (50 cents worth) from any drug store, pour it into a 16-ounce bottle and fill the bottle with plain granulated sugar syrup. This makes 16 ounces—a family supply—of the most effective cough remedy at a cost of only 54 cents or less. You couldn't buy as much ready-made cough medicine for $2.50. Easily prepared and never spoils. Full directions with Pinex.

The promptness, certainty and ease with which this Pinex Syrup overcomes a bad cough, chest or throat cold is truly remarkable. It quickly loosens a dry, hoarse or tight cough and heals and soothes a painful cough in a hurry. With a persistent, loose cough it stops the formation of phlegm in the throat and bronchial tubes, thus ending the annoying hacking.

Pinex is a highly concentrated compound of genuine Norway pine extract, rich in guaiacol, and is famous the world over for its splendid effect in bronchitis, whooping cough, bronchial asthma and winter coughs.

To avoid disappointment in making this, ask your druggist for "2½ ounces Pinex," and don't accept anything else. A guarantee of absolute satisfaction, or money promptly refunded, goes with this preparation. The Pinex Co., Toronto, Ont.

Two Famous Musicians at Rheims.

Rheims cathedral, besides being "the Parthenon of French national architecture," has played an important part in the world of music. It was here that the sublime "Coronation Mass" of Cherubini, which "brings tears to the eyes of those who listen to it," was first performed at the coronation of that truly tragic monarch, Charles X. The second of Gounod's trilogies—the "Mors et Vita"—far superior to his first in style and grandeur of treatment, was inspired by and partly composed in the glorious church.—Westminster Gazette.

Carlyle and Gingerbread.

It is asserted and also denied that porridge was the cause of Thomas Carlyle's ruined digestion. Sir Richard Quain said porridge had nothing to do with his ruined digestion. Sir Richard stated in the British Medical Journal of Nov. 9, 1895, that "the wretched dyspepsia to which Mr. Carlyle was subject was fully accounted for by the fact that he was particularly fond of very nasty gingerbread. Many times I have seen him sitting in the corner smoking a clay pipe and eating this gingerbread."

Snake Farms.

Two snake infested countries, India and Brazil, maintain "snake farms" at which a scientific study of serpents is being pursued. The venom from the poisonous ones is extracted and made into a serum for curing persons who have been bitten. The Brazilian institution, situated near Sao Paulo, is maintained at an expense of $40,000 a year. Besides preparing serums, the "snake farm" tries to spread knowledge about snakes and induce farmers not to kill them indiscriminately.

Not a Penal Institution.

It used to be a habit of justices of the peace to sentence an able bodied vag to join the army or navy as an alternative to going to jail. The theory was that any sort of two legged male creature was good enough to fight for his country. Of late, however, Uncle Sam's recruiting officers have discouraged this practice by rejecting all such candidates for uniforms and serving notice that the service wants citizens, not jailbirds.—Chicago Journal.

All Alike.

A Glasgow schoolteacher was reviewing the assembled ranks preparatory to marching them to their classes the other morning. As he walked up and down the lines he noticed one boy whose boots had not been blacked and who was standing slightly in front of the others. Wishing to shame him into methods of neatness, the teacher exclaimed, "The boy with the dirty boots, step back into line." And straightway the whole line shuffled back a pace.—Glasgow News.

Domestic Bliss.

They had been trotting in double harness for seven long, weary months, and the honeymoon had bumped the bumps for fair.

"John," she said as she dished out the breakfast food, "I need a little pin money this morning."

"What did you do with the $5 I gave you last week?" asked the man who had promised to love, honor and pay the freight.

"Oh, I don't remember," she replied. "It's so easy to spend $5 and have nothing to show for it."

"Right you are," sighed John. "That was the amount I paid the minister for marrying us."—Chicago News.

A Dangerous Subject.

Professor Henry Drummond when a boy discovered that he could hypnotise people. At a birthday party a little girl declined to play the piano. Drummond happened to catch her eye and said, "Play." To his surprise she rose at once, went to the piano and played. At another time he hypnotized a boy and gave him a poker for a gun. "Now," said Drummond, "I'm a pheasant. Shoot me." The boy did so, and Drummond fell to keep up the illusion, whereupon the boy, seeing the "bird" move, was about to hit it over the head with the poker. The hypnotiser had just time to stop the magnetised sportsman.—Pearson's Weekly.

Age of Discretion.

Willie—Paw, what is the age of discretion? Paw—That's when a man gets old enough to keep his face closed when he has nothing to say, my son.—Cincinnati Enquirer.

BRONCHITIS

If Neglected Will Surely Turn Into PNEUMONIA.

Bronchitis comes from a neglected cold. It starts with a short, painful, dry cough, accompanied with rapid wheezing, and a feeling of oppression or tightness through the chest. At first the expectoration is of a light color, but soon becomes copious and of purulent character.

You have, no doubt, wakened up in the morning and have had to cough half a dozen times before you could raise the phlegm from your bronchial tubes, and when you do succeed in doing so you find that it is of yellowish or greenish color, and you get some relief right away. When this happens to you, you may rest assured that you have a touch of bronchitis, and if not cured immediately it will sooner or later develop into pneumonia or some other more serious trouble.

DR. WOOD'S NORWAY PINE SYRUP.

Mrs. Rebecca Have, Mahone Bay, N.S., writes: "My little boy, aged six, was always troubled with bronchitis, and when he had whooping cough he was worse. Doctors advised me to use Dr. Wood's Norway Pine Syrup. It gave him instant relief, and positively cured him."

Different Doctors.

There are a great many "doctors" who know nothing of medicine. In its technical sense doctor is a university degree, the highest given. It is given in recognition of attainments in many branches of learning, and so there are several kinds of doctors. There is the familiar M. D., doctor of medicine; the LL. D., doctor of laws; the Ph. D., doctor of philosophy; the D. D., doctor of divinity; the J. D., doctor of jurisprudence, the D. D. S., doctor of dental surgery, and many another. So if you hear a man referred to as "doctor" you must find out what he is doctor of before you can determine to which profession he belongs.

Doctor of laws seems to have been the earliest of the doctor's degrees, it having been awarded as early as the twelfth century. Doctors of divinity appeared somewhat later. It was a century before the now familiar M. D. (doctor of medicine) came into use.—American Boy.

Sunstroke on Mountains.

Sunstroke, according to experiments made by Professors Victor Henry and Morcho and reported to the French Academie des Sciences, is due to the invisible ultra violet rays at the extreme limit of the spectrum. If the solar spectrum be examined at an altitude of from 3,000 to 4,000 meters it will be seen that the limit of these rays varies little, but that their intensity is greatly increased. At sea level this intensity is comparatively feeble. So one is much more likely to have sunstroke on a high mountain than in a valley.—New York World.

Better Still.

One of the principal owners of a promising gold mine was expatiating on its merits to a capitalist and prospective investor. He described the vein in which the miners were working, showed him specimens of the ore and backed up his statements with the written opinions of experts.

"Well," admitted the capitalist, "it looks as if it might be a good investment. As my old Uncle Hiram would say, it has 'p'ints.'"

Buried With Dolls.

In the Chinese morgue one of the strange sights is a number of life size dolls which are burned to accompany the corpses as their servants to the next world. They are doubtless a relic of the time when human beings were thus buried as companions of the deceased.

More Darkness.

"I'm all in the dark about how these bills are to be paid," said Mr. Hardup to his wife.

"Well, Henry," said she as she pulled out a colored one and laid it on the pile, "you will be if you don't pay that one, for it's the gas bill."

Vegetable Sponges.

Vegetable sponges are used a great deal by the poorer class of natives in Ecuador. They assert they are better in washing dishes and in bathing than are the animal sponges.

Gained 30 Lbs. in Few Weeks Never Felt So Well

Was Pale, Weak and Thin, and Had Nervous Headaches Before Using Dr. Chase's Nerve Food.

It is truly wonderful what Dr. Chase's Nerve Food does for women who are weak, weary and run down in health. New, rich blood is what is needed in nearly all such cases, and because Dr. Chase's Nerve Food forms new blood it brings cure — not mere relief, but actual cure—in the great majority of such ailments.

MRS. H. LAICH.

With an abundance of rich, red blood coursing through the veins the nerves are strengthened and vigor and vitality are carried to every organ of the human body.

With the nerves properly nourished headaches and neuralgic pains disappear, appetite improves, digestion is good, you sleep and rest well, and gain in strength and weight.

Mrs. H. Laich, Cannington Manor, Sask., writes:—"You will remember me writing you last spring. Well, I gave up my doctor and began using Dr. Chase's Nerve Food. This treatment cured me rapidly and I was soon myself again. I was pale, thin and weak, suffered from stomach troubles and liver complaint, and frequently had sick, nervous headaches. "I was surprised to find that in a few weeks' time I had gained 30 pounds in weight. I never felt so strong and well in all my life. Headaches never bother me any more, and I am grateful for the cure. If people would only give this medicine a fair trial they would certainly be cured."

Everywhere people are talking about this great food cure, which cures in Nature's way, by supplying the ingredients to form new blood, and so overcome weakness and disease by an abundance of vitality. A Hymn For War Time

O God of Hosts, we pray Thee shield
Our soldiers on the battlefield,
Or in the trenches dear,
Where rolls war's tide with crimson swell,
And screams the deadly shrapnel shell.
In mercy be Thou near.

In bivouac, weary, chill and damp,
Around their watch-fires, in the camp,
Whatever lot they share,
Bid ministering angels bright,
Enfold them 'neath strong pinions white,
And keep them in their care.

O Father, Whose Almighty sway,
The ocean's stormy waves obey,
And sink to peaceful rest,
Protect our sailors on the brine
From tempest, wreck and treacherous mine,
And billows' periled crest.

Thy tenderest pity kindly show
To captives languishing in woe
Beneath an alien sky.
Then lonely prisoners' griefs attend,
In love beside the wounded bend,
Who sad and suffering lie.

Comfort and succour all who mourn
For those who never will return
Who fell amid the fray.
Hear too the hungry orphans' cry,
The lonely widow's wants supply,
And be her help and stay.

Our noble Red Cross nurses cheer,
With courage, firm to persevere,
Patience, true wisdom, skill
Make wars wild horrors soon to cease,
Give to all nations concord, peace,
If such Thy Holy will.

For a short time on Monday evening last the citizens were in terror when the fire bell rang out telling its sad tale. Fortunately, it was discovered that it was only a chimney burning out, but as it was in close proximity to Doxsee's planing mills, naturally intense excitement prevailed among the people in that district, until the blaze was extinguished, as the wind was blowing at a terrific rate. The fire brigade was soon on hand and the fire was not permitted to gain any headway.

ACID STOMACHS ARE DANGEROUS

Common Sense Advice by a Distinguished Specialist.

"Acid" stomachs are dangerous because acid irritates and inflames the delicate lining of the stomach, thus hindering and preventing the proper action of the stomach, and leading to probably nine-tenths of the cases of stomach trouble from which people suffer. Ordinary medicines and medicinal treatments are useless in such cases, for they leave the source of the trouble, the acid in the stomach, as dangerous as ever. The acid must be neutralized, and its formation prevented, and the best thing for this purpose is a teaspoonful of bisurated magnesia, a simple antacid, taken in a little warm or cold water after eating, which not only neutralises the acid, but also prevents the fermentation from which acidity is developed. Foods which ordinarily cause distress may be eaten with impunity if the meal is followed with a little bisurated magnesia, which can be obtained from any druggist, and should always be kept handy.

SATISFACTION EXPRESSED.

Britain's Action Regarding Vatican Envoy Is Commended.

"Sir Henry Howard's appointment as Great Britain's envoy to the Holy See, with the consequent re-establishment of formal diplomatic relations between England and the Vatican after a lapse of nearly 400 years, is commented on in the Italian press as an event of first rate political importance.

"One conviction, generally expressed in the organs as Italian public opinion is that Great Britain's action, besides welding firmer than ever to herself the vast Catholic populations of the British Empire, will strengthen immensely the moral as well as material influence of the allies and the friends of the triple entente."

WASHINGTON, Dec. 16.—Sir Cecil Spring-Rice, the British Ambassador, advised the State Department yesterday that his Government was willing to forego the exercise of the right of search of vessels carrying cargo from American ports if the shipmasters would confer with the British consuls at the ports of departure and satisfy them as to the neutral character of their cargoes.

The Department yesterday received a note from the French Government stating that France was prepared to give the same assurances as had been given by the British Government in regard to the non-contraband character of American cotton.

Appeals Against The Voters' List

Nineteen appeals against the voters' list for 1915, were heard yesterday in the County Court before His Honour Judge Huycke. Seventeen of the appeals were entered by Mr. S. R. Armstrong, city clerk, and concerned errors. The other two were entered by A. Carpenter and J. M. Pritchard, respectively. The former complained of being wrongly omitted from the voters' list. The appeal was allowed. Pritchard failed to appear, so his appeal was thrown out.

IF BACK HURTS BEGIN ON SALTS

Flush Your Kidneys Occasionally if You Eat Meat Regularly

No man or woman who eats meat regularly can make a mistake by flushing the kidneys occasionally, says a well-known authority. Meat forms uric acid which clog the kidney pores so they sluggishly filter or strain only part of the waste and poisons from the blood, then you get sick. Nearly all rheumatism, headaches, liver trouble, nervousness, constipation, dizziness, sleeplessness, bladder disorders come from sluggish kidneys.

The moment you feel a dull ache in the kidneys or your back hurts, or if the urine is cloudy, offensive, full of sediment, irregular of passage, or attended by a sensation of scalding, get about four ounces of Jad Salts from any reliable pharmacy and take a teaspoonful in a glass of water before breakfast for a few days and your kidneys will then act fine. This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia and has been used for generations to flush clogged kidneys and stimulate them to activity, also to neutralize the acids in urine so it no longer causes irritation, thus ending bladder disorders.

Jad Salts is inexpensive and cannot injure; makes a delightful effervescent lithia-water drink which all regular meat eaters should take now and then to keep the kidneys clean and the blood pure, thereby avoiding serious kidney complications.

Is 83 Years Old

And Her Heart Does Not Bother Her.

Thanks to MILBURN'S Heart and Nerve Pills.

Mrs. J. McLaren, Coutmande, Ont., writes us under date of February 9th, 1914. "Sixteen years ago I took bad with my heart and nerves, and was not able to do anything. I tried a good many doctors, but they did me no good; in fact one doctor gave me up to die. I heard about Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills, and I thought I would give them a trial, and after using a couple of boxes I saw that I was improving. I kept on using them for quite a long time. I am eighty-three years old and my heart does not bother me at all.

"I am raising a little girl who was never very strong, and the doctor said that she had palpitation of the heart, so I started to give them to her. She is now twelve years old, and they are doing her more good than I can possibly tell you. I would advise anyone who has a weak heart to try Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills, as they have done wonders for us."

Price, 50 cents per box, 3 boxes for $1.25; for sale at all dealers, or mailed direct on receipt of price by The T. Milburn Co., Limited, Toronto, Ont.

Farm and Dairy Market Report

Toronto, Monday, Dec. 14.—Canada now presents the, for us, unique spectacle of a nation economizing. For a decade or more we as a people have been spending to the limit. The shock of the war with the financial stringency added, has caught us somewhat unprepared and from the mechanic to the manufacturer, all are endeavoring to retrench. The millinery and fur business has suffered most severely from this retrenching. In the cities, high-class restaurants report a falling away in patronage. Farmers, too, have been spending rather freely for more land, better buildings and improved live stock. All of these things are profit-makers, but at the same time they tend to leave the farmer without readily available assets. Hence the tendency to restrict outgo even in country districts. Probably in the long run this economizing will tend to more quickly dispel the depression.

Economy, however, can be carried too far. In their endeavour to retrench, many farmers are selling off their live stock to an extent where breeding operations will be curtailed seriously. The call now is for good business economy, not niggardly economy. Financial houses are loaning for legitimate business needs, and this too will tend to keep good business on a solid plane.

WHEAT

Quotations have varied but little. All eyes are on the winter wheat belt and practically all recent fluctuations have been determined by crop reports. No. 1 Northern, $1.24; No. 2, $1.21; Ontario wheat, $1.10 to $1.12.

COARSE GRAINS

Here there has been only moderate trading. Ontario oats has tended to decline on large deliveries. Rye has taken an upward shoot and trading in corn has been fairly active. Quotations are as follows: Oats, C.W. No. 2, 38½c; No. 3, 36½c; Ontario oats, 36c to 36c; corn, 71c; peas, $1.70 to $1.75; rye, $1.08 to $1.05; barley, 64c to 66c; buckwheat, 74c to 76c. Montreal reports business quiet and prices steady: Oats, C.W. No. 2, 60c to 60½c; No. 3, 58½c; local white, 52c to 54c; corn, 73c to 74c; barley, malting, 76c to 78c; feed, 67c to 70c; peas, $2.40 to $2.50; buckwheat, 85½c.

HAY AND STRAW

The continuance of present high prices is believed to depend largely on more government orders. There is still much hay for sale in the country at a price that cannot be realised for a purely local demand. Ontario producers, however, will not suffer so much in case of a drop as will the hay growers of Quebec. Quotations are still steady. No. 1 baled hay, $16 to $16.50; No. 2, $13.50 to $14; No. 3, $11 to $12; baled straw, $7 to $7.50. The Montreal market quotes No. 2 hay, $19 to $20.

POTATOES AND BEANS

The potato market is quiet, with receipts worked off with difficulty. Many of the potatoes intended for Belgian relief were partially frozen and have had to be disposed of at Montreal, and this has tended to weaken the market, both there and here. Ontarios are now quoted 85c to 60c; New Brunswicks, 70c. The prevailing price at Montreal is 55c to 60c.

Beans here are quoted: Primes, $2.75 to $2.80; hand picked, $2.90 to $3. The Montreal quotation on one-pound pickers is $2.45 and hand picked, $2.70.

EGGS AND POULTRY

The export trade in eggs with Great Britain has relieved what promised to be a serious situation for cold storage men. The opening of cold weather found holders with too many eggs on hand. Stocks have now been reduced to a safe point. Locally fresh eggs are quoted around 50c; selects, 32c to 33c and storage, 28c to 30c. At Montreal new laids are selling at 48c to 50c; No. 1 storage, 27c to 28c and selects, 30c.

Poultry has taken an advance due to the Christmas demand. Live: Spring chickens, 10c to 12c; old fowl, 8c to 10c; ducks, 9c to 12c; geese, 7c to 8c; turkeys, 12c to 15c. Dressed: Spring chickens, 12c to 15c; old fowl, 9c to 10c; ducks, 10c to 12c; geese, 10c to 10½; turkeys, 18c to 20c. All prices are for choice stock.

DAIRY PRODUCE

The butter market is quiet, with quotations holding firm. Dealers do not anticipate any great activity until after the New Year. A shipment has been made of a consignment of creamery butter from Montreal to Boston. The ruling prices for finest creamery is 32c to 33½c. On this market creamery prints are quoted 34c to 35c; dairy prints, 30c to 32c and bakers', 26c to 28c.

The Canadian cheese market is fairly well cleaned up, there being not more than 70,000 boxes in the country available for export. Demand for cheese from the Old Country is not expected until after the New Year.

LIVE STOCK

The live stock markets last week experienced the usual Christmas rush. Altogether 4,000 cattle were offered during the week. These were well received as packers had liberal needs. Ordinary cattle were cleared up at the ruling quotations of previous week. Choice Christmas heifers brought $8.10 to $8.25 and fancy were quoted, $8.35 to $8.75. The demand for anything approaching good quality was the best for some time. Of the inferior sorts, canners and cutters were in best demand. Quotations averaged as follows:

Shipping steers, $8 to $8.25; handy choice steers, $7.75 to $8; butcher steers, good, $7.40 to $7.75; com. to med., $6 to $7.40; heifers, $6.75 to $7.75; butcher cows, choice, $6.50 to $7; com. to good, $5 to $6.50; butcher bulls, $4 to $7.25; feeders, $6.50 to $6.75; stockers, $4.90 to $6.50; canners and cutters, $3.75 to $5.

Good milch cows are in ready demand at $60 to $100; com. to med., $40 to $60; springers, $60 to $80. Calves run $5 to $10.

Lamb quotations have suffered a slight recession. Light lambs, $8 to $8.50; heavy, $6.75 to $7.25; culls, $5.25 to $5.75; light ewes, $5.50 to $6; heavy sheep and bucks, $4 to $5; culls, $3 to $4.

Swine lost 10c to 15c early last week, packers paying $6.50 f.o.b. country points. This quotation still holds.

FEW BETTER CHRISTMAS OR NEW YEAR'S GIFTS THAN A YEAR'S SUBSCRIPTION TO THE EXAMINER

Sisters of Santa Claus

By Lillian Jeffreys Petri.

WHEREVER the story of the Christ Child is told the whole corps of workers, inspired by the Christmas spirit, devises, invents and labors for weeks and months to carry out the orders that Santa Claus demands to have finished for the cheering and entertaining of the world on the twenty-fifth of December.

Among these are some who catch the spirit of the time better than others, who have the peculiar skill to express their understanding in quaint or lovely objects suitable for gifts at Yuletide.

One of these members of Santa Claus' intimate council is Kaethe Kruse. To her one evening, when she had put her child to rest, came the inspiration to make a human faced doll.

The doll was rather crude at first. It had, however, what Kaethe-Mother deemed the essentials of a humanlike doll, a wobbly head and loose, limp limbs. It was only a potato head wrapped in a towel, the four corners pulled out for legs and arms, and a burnt match painted face, but Kaethe-Mother worked over her human faced doll until she evolved the sweet creature now familiar to lovers of dolls. It is made over a cast of a famous Italian baby head known as the Fiampingo head, an art treasure handed down from the Middle Ages; this being covered with canvas and hand painted. The body is a copy of the chubby form of Kaethe Kruse's own little child. The dollies are named, some of the prettiest having the names of Mother Kaethe's babies, as Jockeric and Hannerie and Michel.

They are not like "store dolls," for the little child who first desired them had never asked for a "doll"; she distinctly said a "Christ Child." Her artist father had a great deal to do with the inspiration, for, because he insisted that the Christ Child must be mother-made to satisfy the longings of the little mother heart.

In another corner of the world there was a little girl with snapping black eyes and a message of cheer in her heart. She was lame and had to be wheeled about by her brothers and sisters, but her heart was full of love. One Christmas she sat making a little elephant of white felt, with red and white tigers of felt to stand upon, between which were tucked pins and needles and other useful things. A tiny, pale blue satin saddle cloth with initials embroidered in white upon it lay over Jumbo's back. The name of the lame girl was Margarete Steiff, and she sat sewing deftly before the old fashioned open fireplace so that her gift might be ready for her mother that evening when the big tree was lit.

Santa, on his rounds, must have seen Margarete as she was finishing the elephant with real ivory tusks and decided that she was the very person to help him.

Of all the toy workers in the world Margarete Steiff is perhaps the most active. She thinks and works and works and thinks all her days, ever evolving fresh delights for the children. She went on making the beautiful elephants for awhile, then other animals; and so came forth the grizzly with his deep growl, the monkey, the camel, the lion and the Teddy Bear. Teddy Bear was her bright particular inspiration. The popularity of this animal brought prosperity and fame to the obscure, quaint old town where Margarete Steiff dwelt. Her great factories house the most thriving industry of the place, and nearly every cottage for miles around contains one or more toymaker. More than three thousand different kinds of toys have come from Margarete's factories. She gets up nearly all the marvelous toy window displays that are seen in the great shops near Christmas time. In Chicago, for instance, this year is her huge Noah's Ark. We have seen a circus, with clowns, trapeze performers, fancy riders and all the rest of the bright paraphernalia, almost life size, worked by electricity with fascinating results; a county fair, where carrousels and big swings filled with doll children moved merrily to the organ that a dolly organ-grinder turned assiduously; where a big man doll swung a huge hammer, driving the weight high to the top of the pole, gauging his strength, and many other stunts such as are seen at a real county fair or at Coney Island. I have seen an enormous store space turned into Toyland, with elves going in and out of caves, dolls chopping trees in a toy forest, bears wagging their clumsy heads and lions roaring.

One day an artist named Rose O'Neill dreamed a dream of Kewpies. She thought she was awake, but was not quite sure. She seemed to peep half frightened over the coverlet at a merry, innocently mischievous, scampering horde of round, pink, baby Kewps, with wide, rolling eyes, sweetly impish smile, and above all, a top knot. Rose O'Neill says they seemed to be "young, toddling cousins of that earlier illustrious family of Brownies" that Mr. Cox long ago created to the joy of countless children and grown-ups. She asserts, however, that a Kewpie meeting a Brownie face to face would be quite overcome with respect.

Suddenly she found a tiny Kewpie in the palm of her hand. It felt cool to the touch, yet soft like a bird, and it seemed comfortable, for it jiggled with its feet looking at her sideways and chuckling. In her words:

"The Kewpie wights stay up at nights,
All gaily singing rumty tum:
Like puddings, they are pleasant sights.
Well rounded at the tumty tum."

Children everywhere cut out Kewpies and played delightedly with them. So Miss O'Neill got her message from Santa Claus to make Kewpie paper dolls and send them out broadcast into the world. Then she modelled the forms of her pets in clay, travelling to the land where everybody loves to make toys, and discussing the making of Kewpie dolls with grave men. She said that she wanted them made perfectly, especially the tiny cheap ones that would be likely to go to poor children.

Kate Jordan had the Baby Happifat pat the ugly Grouch on the head and coo to him till he had to smile. Then he laughed and finally he disappeared and left a thistle in his place. There are Teeny, Weeny and Queeny Happifat. Queeny wears a rose wreath. Weeny is sporty and athletic, wearing a sweater with a big H on it. Teeny is the leader, the brainy one, the thinker. He wears an Early Victorian costume and a cap with a tassel.

Santa Claus has had "September Morn" made up into cunning dollies. Little Cuddle Kiddie is a dolly that squeaks no matter what one does to her or how she moves. Character dollies imitate or caricature every human attribute and weakness. The Kestner dollies come from the heart of the dark forest. They are cutesy dollies, dollies that move their tongues, some that have real eyebrows inserted from the back so that baby hands cannot pull them out, some have "pearl" teeth made of glass, some mohair wigs made from Angora goat skin.

The old game of parchesi has a picturesque origin. Long ago, in the land of perpetual sun, the kings and princes used to invite each other to one another's palaces to play the game of parchesi, which had a wonderful vogue among them. The courtyard was marked off with different colored tiles into sections like the parchesi board. Instead of wooden figures there were the required number of slave girls. These were moved about the courtyard as one moves the little "men" around the board, the object being, of course, to win the beautiful slave girls away from each other.

Once in Chicago a woman artist was very blue. In desperation she made a sort of infant Buddha. She called him "the god of things as they ought to be" and put him upon her mantel "for luck." He brought her luck, for he was the widely known Billiken statuette that amused the world, and the Great Toy Man came and got him. A clever man of our own country, who had spent his life in making toys for children, found a poor old man from the land of the Bear who had invented an unbreakable material for the making of dolls, and he promptly acquired it, building upon wonderful doll industry here, where it was thought it couldn't be done.

Between her love for her children and that of her work of toy modelling Mrs. Helen Fox Trowbridge scarcely knows which makes her happiest. It is such a congenial work that even the men who travel for the Very Smart Man are caught in the contagion of good cheer. She thinks the work as entertaining to grownups as the dolls to the children, and she is a strong advocate of specialized home industries for women.

Mrs. Trowbridge first specialized in child portraiture. From that to the making of models for more lifelike dolls was but a short step, as the picture of "Baby-suck-a-thumb" shows. She and the clever man are putting their heads together, continually trying to produce a better and more artistic doll at a low price. The dolls' heads are of an unbreakable velvety material, almost as soft as the skin of a child. The features are painted by hand, one man putting on nothing but eyebrows, another the lashes, another the eyes, and another the white spots which form the high lights of the eyes. The best worker of all puts on the rosy cheeks with an atomizer. The clothes are made carefully, that they may stand many dressings and undressings by childish fingers.

Mrs. Trowbridge is making new models for dolly all the time, sometimes even going to hospitals to get originals of all nationalities to copy. Her greatest joy is in catching the winsome whimsicalities of children. To South America go dark skinned dolls, to Japan a beautiful Japanese model. Every country likes to see its own types portrayed.

BOWSER, STUDENT

He Is Strong on All the Big Political Questions.

MRS. B. WOEFULLY IGNORANT

At Least He So Assumes and Condescendingly Offers the Benefit of His Superior Knowledge—But Mrs. B. Again Knocks His Conceit Sky High.

MRS. BOWSER drew a long breath.

She knew it was coming.

Even the cat got up and turned around seven times before lying down again.

Mr. Bowser had smoked only half his after dinner cigar when he began to hitch around in a way to prove to Mrs. Bowser that he had something on his mind. She waited for him to begin, and presently he said:

"Mrs. Bowser, I want to say a few words to you this evening in good nature, and it will be entirely your fault if there is any hard feeling."

"Well, what is it?" she asked.

"I don't like a manpish woman, as you very well know, and all this talk about woman's rights makes me very tired. I believe, however, that a woman should pay attention to some few things beyond bargain sales and tea parties."

"You are very kind," she answered. "I would like to know what is going on in the political world. What are the issues at stake this year?"

"The issue, Mrs. Bowser," he replied as he walked around—"the issues are tremendous. There is our foreign policy, for one thing."

"Just what is that?"

"What is it? What is it? Why it's our foreign policy, of course. You know what foreign means, I suppose? We have a policy toward all foreign countries, and it's a mighty good thing we have."

"But what is the policy?"

Mr. Bowser Flabbergasted.

Mr. Bowser was stumped. He flushed up and looked around uneasily, and when the family cat came over to him and wanted to rub against his leg he lifted his foot so menacingly that she jumped six feet.

"It refers, of course, to our general and particular attitude on general and particular questions," said Mrs. Bowser in answer to her own question. "There is the Philippine question, for instance."

"What—what do you know about the Philippine question?" he asked.

"Not much. There are those who claim that under the source doctrine we have no right to hold the islands, but others are with the president in his policy to retain possession. You understand it that way, I presume?"

He didn't reply. He simply glared at her and kicked himself for having opened the subject.

"And we have a Chinese policy," she went on. "We have treaty rights there, and we are bound to make Russia, France, Germany and England respect them in their grabbing of territory. Yes, Mr. Bowser, I think I have a dim perception as to what a foreign policy means, but I'd be glad to have you enlighten me all you can."

In an Embarrassing Position.

He stood with his hands crossed under his coattails and glared at her, and the cat walked around on tiptoe and scented a family row in the distance.

"What are the other prominent issues, Mr. Bowser?" queried Mrs. Bowser without appearing to notice his embarrassment.

"You have heard of the currency question, perhaps?" he half sneered.

"I—I think I have, but I'd like to be fully posted. Isn't our currency all right?"

"They may revive the silver question again, but I don't think we need do any worrying. We will pass on to something else."

"But I have heard so much about the currency that I'd like to know more," she protested.

"I said we would pass on," he growled, knowing that he wasn't posted and would meet with a fall.

"In a minute, Mr. Bowser. As I understand it, in our monetary system we have so much silver to so much gold. A portion of the people want to raise the ratio of silver, or, indeed, to coin it almost without limit. Those are called free silver men."

Mr. Bowser returned to his glare, and the cat winked an eye as she saw his neck growing red.

"A percentage of the people, however, want the ratio to remain the same and to retain the gold standard. It seems to me, though I am only a woman, that our standard ought to be the same as that of the strong commercial powers of Europe. The standard of a country's currency is her credit, isn't it?"

Thinks He'll Bluff His Way Out.

"Look here, woman, what are you trying to get at?" almost shouted Mr. Bowser as he decided to try bluff. "I set out to post you on the issues of the day, in order that you may at least listen understandingly, and what do you do? Do you listen and get posted or do you interrupt me with nonsense?"

"Well, then, go ahead with other issues. Don't you think this country was overreached in the Hay-Pauncefote treaty regarding the Panama canal?"

"Treaty? Treaty? I never heard of any treaty."

"But you must have."

"And you have been reading treatises when you should have been overlooking the house!"

"Can't you overlook your office and do the same thing? We wanted a canal to connect the Caribbean sea with the Pacific and save us the long voyage around Cape Horn. We wanted it to be an American canal and to control it ourselves. England for one would like it to be an international affair. The canal was a government undertaking, isn't that the way you understand it?"

"Never!" he shouted as he jumped at the cat.

"Then how is it?"

But Bluffing Fails of Its Purpose.

"I refuse to say! If you think you know it all—and you evidently do—go ahead and have it your own way. What a fool a husband is to ever talk to his wife about anything beyond clothes and novels!"

"Why, I don't see anything to get mad at," she replied. "I just asked if you understood the canal question the way I did. We will drop it, of course, but I want to ask you about the issues put forward by Mr. Bryan when he became secretary of state."

"He's for America, of course," replied Mr. Bowser, being unable to think of any other issues.

"Or he wouldn't be where he is, of course. What is his general policy toward other nations?"

Mr. Bowser couldn't say. He hadn't read much about recent developments. As she waited for him to reply he decided that he must raise a row to save his prestige.

Mr. Bowser Goes Up in the Air.

"Woman," he shouted, "I have been insulted in my own house and by own wife, and don't propose to stand it. Instead of going to the club this evening and enjoying myself I stayed home to give you a few pointers to hide your ignorance, and this is my reward—this—this—this"—

And he kicked over a chair, scared the cat half to death and sat down heavily on the divan.

"Will you tell me what I have done?" quietly asked Mrs. Bowser.

"You have tried to make out that you—you"—

"That I know more about the political situation than you?"

"That's it—that's your old trick! While you don't actually know whether Woodrow Wilson or Jim Jones is president, you go on as glib as if you'd read every line of politics for the last twenty years. Mrs. Bowser—woman—you mark what I tell you when I say"—

But he didn't finish. The doorbell rang, and, delighted at the interruption, he hastened down the hall to open the door.

"Does Mr. Bowser live here?" queried a man who stood on the steps.

"He does, but you can't gum game him for a cent. No cold victuals, no old clothes, no cash. You'd better bump right out of this."

Mr. Bowser returned to the sitting room and sat down to read and smoke. It was a long fifteen minutes before Mrs. Bowser asked:

"Do you know who that man was?"

"Tramp, of course," he growled.

"But it wasn't. It was our minister!"

ANTWERP IS UNDER VEIL

Feels the Iron Behind the Velvet Rule—Food Plentiful and Normal in Price

IN HOLLAND, Nov. 24 (Correspondence).—When the Germans took possession of Antwerp they drew over the city a veil which has become almost impenetrable. Antwerp is a city of mystery and silence.

Nothing is easier than to enter it. All are welcomed, and refugees are almost implored to return. The flight of the population really looked bad, and America was beginning to talk. Everything would be forgiven, the refugees were told, and the Prussian fairy godmother, in helmet, jackboots, and brecches, with a sword peeping from beneath her cloak, would see that every one became rich and lived happily ever afterward.

After the panic among the refugees had decreased they began to reconsider the situation. They had left their homes and everything they possessed, and were penniless and workless. It is not surprising that many decided to recross the frontier in the hope that they were choosing the lesser evil.

Free trains were provided for them by the Germans, and many thousands of them are now back in Antwerp. But there is no return to Holland. To leave is almost impossible.

Mesmerized by Prussians.

An Englishman, however, has managed to make his way out this week and has lifted the veil. He describes a city half alive; mesmerized beneath the gaze of Prussian officials.

"I should think," he told me, "that 70,000 or 80,000 of those who fled during the bombardment have returned. About 200,000 of the normal population of 350,000 are in their homes, but they are almost all working class people. The middle and upper class have not returned.

"By day there is little to notice except that the streets are half empty. The supply of food holds out, and Antwerp has received little of the consignments from America. Bread is sold in the shops at a price that is almost normal, and prices of other foods show only slight increases. Industries are carried on to some extent and there is liberty to do most things—except to leave.

Germans Count Men.

"The object of drawing a ring round the city is not altogether to conceal what is taking place in it; what is happening behind certain closed gates is unknown to the citizens themselves. The fact is that the Germans are beginning to count men.

"When the Belgian government decided to call all available men to the colours the Germans recognized in Antwerp a valuable trap. This largely explains their invitation to refugees. The men are not forced to dig trenches, as at Liege and elsewhere, but they are prevented from joining the forces of the Allies. Germany at last realizes that every man counts.

"People go about their business until eight o'clock at night, when lights are extinguished and the streets become silent and empty. To be found abroad after that hour is to be arrested and fined.

"Last Sunday night many people went to call on their friends, and many failed to return home punctually. Then the iron was felt beneath the velvet. No fewer than six hundred persons were arrested, and each of them was fined twenty marks (£1).

"Despite precautions to prevent the spreading of news, the citizens are aware of Germany's failure in France and are cheerfully awaiting the leaving of their unwelcome callers. They have even begun to collect the Belgian postage stamps, with German words printed across them in red, as souvenirs of the occupation which will soon end."

THE BURDENS OF AGE.

The kidneys seem to be about the first organs to wear out and fail to properly perform their work. The result is weak, lame, aching back, rheumatic pains and failing eyesight. Many people of advanced years have recovered health and comfort by using Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills. They ensure the healthful action of liver, kidneys and bowels.

MOTOR CYCLIST GREAT FACTOR IN THE FIGHT

(By G. Valentine Williams.)

PARIS, Dec. 5.—There are one or two things I should like to show the Germans, this people we once thought so logical but now find willing to swallow the most egregious falsehoods of their newspapers. I should like to take them among the "demoralized" French, especially among the small Paris shopkeepers, and let them hear how calmly and confidently men talk about this war. I should like to take them among the British working classes, to listen to the dogged determination that runs through their talk when it is about the Germans.

But above all I should like a German who has been reading in his newspapers of the "failure" of the British recruiting campaign and all the puerile inventions about the British troops in the fields to have been present at a little talk I had one evening outside the tiny inn of a tiny French town with a score or so of British motor-cyclist despatch riders fresh from the Front.

Enthusiastic for Work.

I am not concerned here particularly with the performances of the motor-cyclists' corps. Every General Staff officer with whom I have spoken is enthusiastic about the work it is doing, and as a corps it certainly has not its equal in any of the armies in the field. For the moment I am thinking only of the spirit of those youngsters who gathered round me in the circle of light thrown by their powerful lamps, resting on their travel-stained machines, eager, impulsive, high-spirited boys, laughing at the layer of petrol-scented dust with which hair and face and hands were covered, making light of the miles behind them as of the miles to come, though a cold night and a frosty dawn lay between them and their ultimate destination.

Most of them had a rifle slung across their backs; some had none, but a revolver was strapped to the leather belt encircling their dusty overalls. On the carrier behind them they mostly carried a begrimed sack with their possessions—a brush and comb, a toothbrush, sleeping things, and shaving tackle, with perhaps a few maps. Looking at them so dusty, so dirty, and so cheerful, I could not help thinking of them as many of them were in London, the immaculate motor cyclist of the suburbs, with the lady of his affections instead of a grimy pack on the carrier behind.

Their Own Customs.

All classes are represented among the army motor cyclists. Most of them are undergraduates or public school boys, many have come from Officers' Training Corps, many are clerks or shop assistants. All the varied accents of class and county are heard in their speech, from the correctness of Oxford to the homely burr of the West. But the most complete democracy exists among these knights of the road. Cliques and classes seem to have vanished when the blue and white armband of the Signalling Corps of the Royal Engineers — the emblem of their branch—was fastened to their sleeve. Doubtless, after the manner of Englishmen herding together, they have also evolved their only code of manners and customs from which it is not permitted to depart an inch. One thing I know: Anything like "grousing" or shirking is barred. I offered a clothes brush to one bronzed young man who was so smothered in dust that he looked as if se had been dropped into a flour bin. He politely declined it. "If you look properly dusty," he said apologetically, "they'll see you've not been shirking, don't you know?"

The Machine First.

All the time we were talking more dusty and enthusiastic young men kept whirling in. A large convoy of army motor lorries was parking for the night in the market place, and one by one the lorries came lumbering up. Every now and then a high pillar of dust would come skirting in and out of the clumsy vans. It would eventually materialise into a perfectly cool and extremely cheerful youth, who was quite willing to talk about the war and his experiences and who seemed only to remember as an afterthought that he had come sixty miles by road, and had practically nothing to eat or drink all day, that he was both tired and thirsty, and had forty odd miles to go before daybreak.

His first thought is his machine, which he honours with a comprehensive glance travelling from the monkey mascot in front to the back tyre; then, learning that there is a newcomer fresh from England present, he wants to come into the circle and hear the news, accepting a cigarette with a quiet bashfulness that is perfectly charming.

Shifting for Himself.

Tthe life is none too easy. The motor cyclist has mostly to shift for himself; he moves too fast and too often to be provided for by the machinery the army arranges for finding quarters. On arrival at headquarters with a despatch, after he has presented it and been dismissed until wanted again he sets to find (a) somewhere to wash, (b) something to eat, (c) somewhere to sleep, and (d) where the petrol is kept.

"No speed limit, thrills all round, an open air life, and lots of variety," is the way in which one of the motor-cyclists summed up his life, at the front." They are gallopers of modern war, though they must stick to the roads (some of these daredevils try to use their machines across open country with dire results). All along the straight white roads leading to the zone of operations you may meet them whizzing by in clouds of dust—gone before you could bid them God-speed.

Their total lack of sentimentality about themselves and their work, their unselfishness towards one another, and their disregard of danger are worthy of the highest traditions of the British Army. Meeting them one begins to understand something of that moral ascendency which, according to official despatches, "French's contemptible little army" has already succeeded in establishing over the German troops. Yet these boys have not been soldiering long enough to absorb the traditions of the Army. One would like to think that theirs is the spirit of us all.

A Family Mix-Up.

Details of a curious family complication come from St. Gall, Switzerland. A naturalized Swiss citizen, German by birth, is married to a Hungarian. His brother-in-law is fighting against the Servians, and the husband of his sister-in-law is fighting against the Austrians. Of the man's two brothers, one is in a Prussian regiment and the other is serving France under Gen. Gallieni.

Against Their Principles.

"The people in the slums about here resort entirely too much to the castigation of their offspring."

"Oh, no, they don't. They would be scared at the idea of such a thing."

"Then what do they do as family discipline?"

"They wallop their kids."

Self Reliance.

Much as worthy friends add to the happiness and value of life we must in the main depend upon ourselves, and every one is his own best friend or worst enemy.—Lord Avebury.

HOW TO HAVE A FINE COMPLEXION IN WINTER

Any woman can have a soft, velvety, peach-like complexion in spite of exposure to the worst winter weather and at the same time get rid of wrinkles, chaps and blackheads by applying to the face, with a soft cloth or sponge, just before going out, a lotion which can be prepared by any druggist by mixing 2 ounces of Rosewater with 2 ounces Flowers of Oxnoin and ½ dram Tincture of Benzoin. Owing to its soothing and healing properties this lotion gives wonderful relief in cases of eczema, burns and skin irritation. When so used apply liberally without rubbing, but use a compress or bandage.—T. H. P.

THE MILITARY CAMPAIGN IN ASIA.—The Turks have evacuated Batum, and it is expected an allied force will occupy the place. The Goben bombarded Batum on the Black Sea. The Czar is reported at Tiflis inspecting the Caucasian army. His troops are at Erzerum also fighting the Turks west of Tabriz in Persia. The British are forty miles north of Basra holding back the Turks east of the Suez Canal.

SIEGE OF CRACOW TO BE ABANDONED BY THE RUSSIANS

Decide to Straighten Line to Counteract Enemy's Harassing Tactics

PETROGRAD, Dec. 16 (via London).—An ex-Minister of the Russian Cabinet, explaining the military situation in an interview, stated that public opinion solidly endorsed the decision of the Russian general staff recently announced regarding the discontinuance of the Russian attacks in the region of the Austrian fortress of Cracow, and the yielding of Lodz to the Germans. The ex-Minister said:

"It is now apparent that the Austro-German aim is not the taking or holding of certain towns, but by a continuous harassing of the Russian flanks and by means of their extensive railroad system, to throw troops at various points here and there in an attempt to weaken and tire out our army.

To Straighten the Line.

Hence the Russians decided to straighten their line, abandoning all places outside of that line, no matter how important or how populous. The Russian plan is to preserve the Russian forces rather than to hold geographical points.

"This explains why, despite the new Austrian offensive from the Carpathians and the German attempt between the Vistula River and Lowicz, great live-sacrificing battles were not reported."

THE BALLAD OF JACK MUNROE.

(Toronto News.)

"The pugilist-volunteer was born in Boulardarie, N.S., and though achieving some prominence as a glove artist was better known as a miner, having recorded his name with the successful ones, both in Montana, in his early days, and latterly in the Cobalt and Montreal River district. In the latter he became a champion of the people's rights, and a town to-day bears his name, "Munroe" of which he was the first mayor.)

Oh! this is the tale of Jack Monroe,
With arm of iron and fist of bruse,
Who fought a champion long ago,
(The glittering years! How swift they pass!)
And his back was broad and his eye was bright,
And his soul was square, and his spirit light.

He tramped far over the mossy rocks,
The rocks which shelter the Cobalt rose,
Where the geese go past in their arrow-night,
Where the spruce sings soft as the Norther blows,
Where the Poplar Torches illume the sky
And the mystic lakes of forest lie.

He came one morn to the mining town,
Across the lake in his bark canoe,
He filed his claims and they wrote them down
And plotted the mall and put them through.
And they spoke to him—by the veriest chance—
Of the bloody war on the plains of France.

"A war?" he said, with a questioning eye,
"Is Britain in it?" They answered: "Yes."
Then Jack Munroe raised his head on high,
And answered: "It's up to me, I guess.
I have a sister. She gets my coin,
Make out my mill. I'm goin' to join."

And thus it was that old Jack Monroe
Brought deeds and papers, a famous store,
To the good Recorder the miners know,
And saw them behind an iron door.
And signed his will, and remarked: "So long,
I'm rather strnck on the bugle's song."

For he said: "It's Duty, and nothing less,"
And his lips were tight and his smile was grim,
"So put me down for the Privates' Mess.
The king is calling, and I'm for him,
And what's the odds if I don't come back,
They named me after the Union Jack."

And so he marched with the Princess Pat's,
You saw the beautiful regiment start,
With the saucy swing and the rakish hats,
And the love of a girl in every heart.
And this is the story miners told
Of the fighting-man with the heart of gold.

LITTLE BOY WEAK AND SICKLY

Mother Tells How Her Little Son Was Made a Strong, Healthy Boy by Vinol After a Severe Sickness.

New York City.—"About five years ago my little boy, then seven years old, was very ill with gastritis, then he contracted measles from the other children, pneumonia soon followed, and there seemed no hope of saving his life. However, we fought off the disease and he recovered, but was in a very weak and delicate condition.

"The doctor prescribed cod liver oil, but his little stomach swelled up like a drum, and the doctor said there was no cure for him. I decided to try Vinol, as I had used it myself with splendid results, and it seemed to agree with him. That bloated condition soon disappeared, and now he is a strong, healthy boy, thanks to Vinol."—Mrs. THOMAS FITZGERALD, 1699 Park Ave., New York City.

In all cases where the healing, curative, tissue building influences of cod liver oil, or the strength-creating, blood-making properties of tonic iron are needed, Vinol gives immediate benefit, for it is easily assimilated and acceptable to the weakest stomach, because it contains no oil or grease, and tastes delicious.

Dear Mr. Editor:—

Thanks for the privilege of appealing through your columns on behalf of the Hospital for Sick Children. The Hospital takes care of sick and deformed children, not only in Toronto, but in the Province, outside of the city.

This coming year, of all the years in the Hospital's history, has a more serious outlook, as regards funds for maintenance, than any year that has passed its calendar.

So many calls are being made on the purses of the generous people of Toronto and Ontario, to help the soldiers of the Empire, that as I make my daily rounds through the wards of the Hospital, and see the suffering children, — our own and both, the thought strikes me as to whether the people will as of old, with all the demands made upon them, answer our appeal and help to maintain the institution that is fighting in the never-ending battle with disease and death, in its endeavor to save the stricken little ones in the child-life of Ontario.

Last year there were 394 in-patients from 210 places outside of Toronto, and in the past twenty years there have been 7,000 from places in the Province other than Toronto.

It costs us $0.54 per patient per day for maintenance. The municipalities pay for patients $1 per patient per day; the Government allows 20 cents per patient per day; so, deducting $1.20 from $0.54, it leaves the Hospital with $1.14 to pay out of subscriptions it receives from the people of Toronto and the Province. The shortage last year ran to $12,000.

Since 1890 about 1,000 cases of club foot, bow legs and knock knees have been treated, and of these 900 had perfect corrections. Nearly all these were from different parts of the Province outside of the city of Toronto.

Remember that every year is a war year with the Hospital; every day is a day of battle; every minute the Hospital needs money, not for its own sake, but for the children's sake. The Hospital is the battle-ground where the Armies of Life have grappled with the Hosts of Death, and the life or death of thousands of little children is the issue that is settled in that war. Will you let the Hospital be driven from the field of its battle to save the lives of little children for the lack of money you can give and never miss?

Every dollar may prove itself a dreadnought in the battle against death, a destroyer in the fleet that fights for the lives of little children.

Remember that the door of the Hospital's mercy is the door of hope, and your dollar, kind reader, may be the key that opens the door for somebody's child.

Will you send a dollar, or more if you can, to Douglas Davidson, Secretary-Treasurer, or

J. ROSS ROBERTSON,
Chairman of the Board of Trustees, Toronto.

"He is very popular with his wife of late." "And him such a flirt. How does he do it?" I have the dearest, sweetest, most beautiful wife in the world, and she is the only woman I permit to call me darling!'"

SWINGING GERMANS BACK ON OSTEND

MINES ALONG EAST COAST ENDANGER TRAFFIC

Determined Assault Upon Enemy's Lines in Flanders

Drive Toward Main Highway Through Lens, Lille and Roulers is Developing Hourly--German Trenches Are Captured by Allies at the Point of the Bayonet.

HEAVY GUN FIRE ALONG THE LINE

SPECIAL CABLE:

PARIS, December 17. --- With the violent shelling of the German trenches and repeated infantry attacks, the allied forces between Arras and the sea have kept up a determined attack upon the lines of the enemy for the past 48 hours.

Aided by the warships shelling the German positions from the sea an effort is being made to swing the Germans back up on Ostend. The pressure on the entire line through Belgium is constantly increasing, and farther south and east the drive toward the main highway through Lens, Lille and westward to Roulers, is developing hourly.

An advance was made along the railway toward La Bassee by a direct assault upon the German positions.

Heavy artillery firing is in progress in the Aisne region. The French aviators have been extremely active in locating the German batteries in this district, as well as in the Argonne and the Woevre region.

This has resulted in the destruction of many batteries and necessitating a constant shifting of the German positions.

PARIS, December 17.—The capture of several German trenches in Flanders at the point of the bayonet is reported in the official communique issued from the war office to-day. Continued success is reported in the French advance in the region of Vermeilles. Heavy artillery firing is reported along the entire line. The artillery duels were the liveliest yesterday, the statements asserts, in the region of Tracy de Val, in the Aisne and Champagne regions, and in the Argonne and about Verdun.

LONDON, Eng., December 17.—The steamer Elterwater struck a mine and was sunk to-day off Flamborough Head. Six of the vessel's crew are missing.

Another vessel as yet unidentified, also struck a mine and went down nearby. The passengers and crew of the latter vessel escaped by taking to the lifeboats.

The freight steamer Princess Olga was sunk during the night by striking a mine six miles off Hartlepool. Members of the crew of this vessel, who were rescued reported that they saw a German steamer laying mines near the point where the Princess Olga went down. The German cruisers dropped mines overboard as they fled after the bombardment yesterday.

GERMAN NOBLE SENT TO SIBERIA

COPENHAGEN, via Berlin, The Hague and London, December 16.—Baron Carl Von Manteuffel, who owns a fine estate at Kardangen, near Libau, and the most prominent German noble in the Russian Baltic provinces, has been banished by the military chief of his district to Dwinjk, near Tomsk, Siberia. The excitement in the Baltic provinces because of this incident is said to be great.

COURT MARTIAL FOR MUTINOUS BAVARIANS; DECORATED QUEEN ELIZABETH'S PORTRAIT

AMSTERDAM, via London, December 16.—A message from Antwerp says that eighty soldiers who participated in the recent mutiny among the Bavarian troops garrisoning that city, are to be courtmartialed. It is stated that the mutineers broke the furniture and many windows in the barracks, attracting a great crowd which the police were forced to hold back. The soldiers displayed Bavarian flags and decorated the portrait of Queen Elizabeth of Belgium, who is a Bavarian by birth.

CANADIANS MAY BE PLACED ON COAST DEFENCE

Corporal H. E. Carpenter of Peterboro' Intimates First Contingent May be Sent to the East Coast

FRANCE NEXT SPRING

Simultaneously with the announcement that German ships had bombarded the east coast of England, comes an intimation in a letter from Corporal H. E. Carpenter of the 57th contingent at Salisbury Plain that the Canadians are to be sent to the east coast to do coast defence work.

Corporal Carpenter says:

"Here I am sitting on my blankets with a candle in front of me, trying to write a few lines while the piano is humming and the bugles sounding "Defaulters." Our Col. Watson has erected a big tent for a recreation room and furnished it with reading materials, oil stoves and a piano. The piano is going from reveille to last post. It is a great treat to sit around the stoves reading and enjoying the music.

The mules have stopped work as we are getting cold weather, cold enough to freeze the drinking water in our tents. The qaurter amater sergeant has issued anextra blanket to keep us warm. Each man has four blankets and a straw mattress. There is an ol tent bag in here, so I generally wind myself up in the blankets and get into the tent bag.

Every day this week the battalion is goin gout on route marches in marchin gorder. To-day we left at 9 a.m. and got back at 2 p.m. and have done nothing since. We have a bugle band now, and you should see us march. I just wish Peterborough could see the old 2nd go up George Street.

The church service was held in the Y.M.C.A. tent yesterday and one of the boys played the piano.

I have not seen Howard Curtis since we left Valcartier. His battalion is at Bulford in new huts. Six men from our company are there building huts, supposed to be for us, but I guess not. There is a rumour that we are going to some town on the east coast on coast defence. We shall go into barracks there or be billeted. No possible chance to get to France until next spring.

SUGGESTION AS TO DISTRIBUTION of the Local Patriotic Fund in Regard to Unemployed

Mr. B. D. Hall, President of the Board of Trade, in conversation with the Examiner, this morning, made a suggestion in regard to the local distribution of the Patriotic Fund. He was of the opinion that manufacturers could help by having a list of the men they previously employed, but who had been laid off owing to the present depression. These could be paid through their former employers.

PEOPLE SHOULD HAVE CHANCE TO SAY SOMETHING

To the Editor of The Examiner:

I have noticed in the press of this city recently, that there is a movement on foot to re-elect by acclamation the present Mayor and Council, suggested by Mr. Harry Rush.

While Mr. Rush may have his own ideas on the subject, I think "the people" should also have something to say. The saving of five to seven hundred dollars, is nothing, if the taxpayer is going to have, as we have had, more in thousands wasted.

Re-elections by acclamation may be or may be not all right, but for the sake of saving (?) a few hundred dollars the city's business, "that is very serious business" should not be placed in hands of incompetents.

Now is the time for the citizens to act.

A Non-Voting Taxpayer.

VICTORY TO PEACE

President Jordan of Leland Stanford University Makes Strong Comments on War

GERMANY BLAMED

Special to The Examiner:

The pastor of Murray Street church gives us this extract from an address delivered two days ago before the Ministers' Conference at Cleveland, Ohio, by Dr. David Starr Jordan, president of Leland Standford University. Of course, his address was not reported in any of the American papers:

"This war is the greatest victory for peace since Calvary, because no nation is brave enough, strong enough, daring enough to stand up before the peace conscience of the world and acknowledge that they started it. As soon as the war broke out, and ever since, the nation that planned it and forced it, has spent half its energy in trying vainly to make the world believe that it did not do it. If a thing is not loaded it will not explode, but when everything is loaded, something is pretty sure to explode and then the explosion runs all along the line."

"Some people speak of the Peace Palace at The Hague as "The world's grimmest jest," or "The Costliest failure of history." Now in the first place that is not a palace. It is simply a building of halls for the purpose of peace conferences or the discussion of international law. Is it a failure? Is it a jest? When this war is over and the friends of peace hold another conference at The Hague, does any person suppose that all the halls in the building will begin to accommodate those who will want to attend. There will be a thousand earnest friends of peace after this war for every one we had before. "The world's grimmest jest," "the costliest failure," is not the peace palace at The Hague, but the costliest failure is the idea that the accumulation of armament issues in peace. The cost of twenty-four hours of war would build fifty peace palaces, to say nothing of the waste of life."

Distribution Of Toys And Candy

Enthusiastic Meeting of the Business Girls Held Last Evening

A very enthusiastic meeting of the Business Girls' Club was held in the Bank of Montreal Chambers on Wednesday evening. Final arrangements were made for the distribution of toys and candies the week before Christmas.

The onorary President, Mrs. Travers, was present, and spoke a few words of kindly encouragement. A handsome donation of $10.00 was received from some kind friends who not wish their names mentioned. Another donation of $11.00 was received from the Office Staff of the Quaker Oats Company.

Through the kindness of Mr. Geo. Morrow, the premises lately occupied by the Patriotic Fund Committee, have been placed at the service of the Club as headquarters, until after the distribution has been made.

All the members are asked to be present on Monday or Tuesday evenings, to secure the toys and candies for the children on their respective lists.

EDITOR WHIPPED

P. D. Ross, Editor of Ottawa Journal Chastised in His Office This Morning by Angry Woman

AFTERMATH OF RIOT

Special to The Examiner:

OTTAWA, Ont., Dec. 17.—P. D. Ross, proprietor and editor of the Ottawa Journal, was horse-whipped in his office this morning by a woman who blamed him for inviting, through his paper, the riot which broke up the Bourassa meeting last night in the Russell Theatre, in which her husband, A. C. Glassie, who organized the meeting, was pushed through one of the glass panels in front of the theatre and was badly cut and had one rib broken.

More Mail Is Recovered

By Divers—Local Man Receives a Letter That Was Recovered From Bottom of St. Lawrence River

"Recovered by divers from the wreck of the Empress of Ireland." This is the somewhat laconic message that is stamped on the face of one of the strangest letters ever received by Mr. Harry Curtis of this City. Mr. Curtis, who resides in Browntown, had occasion, in May last, to dispatch a letter to a friend, in Hull, England. Yesterday that self-same letter was returned to Mr. Curtis, in a very dilapidated condition. The envelope was torn and, together with the contents, showed evidences of having been in the water for a considerable period. The writing could be read without difficulty. The communication was returned through the Dead Letter Office.

Much Food Was Condemned

By Medical Health Inspectors of Toronto

Lamb, 4 forequarters.

Trout, 1,100 lbs.; halibut, 325 lbs.; herring, 1,150 lbs.; flounders, 50 lbs.; mixed fish, 3,200 lbs.; total, 3 tons, 45 pounds.

Cloeces 20 baskets; herring 5 boxes, kippered herring, 336 tins.

Sanitary Inspector Spence of Peterborough has made frequent attempts to suppress the sale of diseased meats in this city, but for some reason or other, has resived very little support from the authorities.

MARRIED MEN GIVEN WORK

On the New Sewer—Gang Was Changed To-day

To-day, the gang of men employed in the construction of the new sewer, is being changed for a new gang. A sign inviting men out of work and with families, to make application to City Engineer Parsons, where a limited number of men are required, was displayed at the corner of George and Simcoe Streets. Quite a number of men made application and were accepted.

Wanted Coal Not Wood

Yesterday City Relief Officer Miller sent a load of wood to a man in need of charity. The recipient almost refused to accept the wood, stating that he wanted coal, not wood. He was politely informed that he would either take the wood or nothing. He accepted after more material option. This is a case of "looking a gift horse in the mouth." Cases like this are not uncommon to the Relief Officer.

SEARCH FOR SPIES IN SCARBOROUGH

$200,000 Property Damage Done in Yesterday's Bombardment--Flashlight Signalling on Tuesday Night May Have Been Guide to Germans---Mines Strewn Along the Coast.

SPECIAL CABLE:

SCARBOROUGH, Eng., December 17. — A vigorous search is being made in Scarborough to-day for spies. Reports of mysterious flash-light signalling seen on Tuesday night before the bombardment by the German warships, have reached the authorities. It is believed the German warships may have been aided in directing their fire on the town by spies who signalled the position of the railway station and other building on which the shell fire was concentrated. The damage done here is estimated at about $200,000. Most of the dead and wounded are believed to have been accounted for. The authorities are directing their attention towards clearing away the wreckage around the shelled buildings. All the streets have now been cleared of debris and the overhead cables of the street railway lines are being repaired so that traffic may be resumed. The freight steamer Princess Olga was sunk 6 miles off Scarborough last night by a mine. The crew was saved. On arriving here the survivors said they saw a German steamer laying mines near where the Princess Olga went down.

TRAFFIC ABANDONED

LONDON, December 17.—The Admiralty to-day issued a warning that traffic between Flamborough Head and Newcastle was now endangered by mines and all traffic would have to be abandoned until further notice.

GERMANS, TO MEET METAL SHORTAGE, USE IRONWORK OF SMASHED BELGIAN BRIDGES

LONDON, December 17.—G. F. Steward, correspondent of the Daily News at Rotterdam, telegraphs:—

"From a reliable source I learn that so short are the Germans of metal that contracts have been entered into, and actually are being carried out, for the transportation of all iron work of the smashed Belgian bridges to Germany."

A GERMAN REPORT

BERLIN, via Amsterdam, December 17.—Concerning the shelling of Scarborough and Hartlepool, the Berliner Tageblatt says: .Again our naval forces, facing the danger of scattered mines in the North Sea, shelled English fortified places. The Boersen Zeitung says that the bombardment is positively the herald of greater events.

ROME, December 17.—Serious disorders verging on riots have broken out in Austria as a result of the defeat of the Austrian army in Servia, according to reports reaching here to-day. In Vienna great crowds marched to the war office and shouted protests against the war. In Budapest demonstrations there assumed a separatist character. Bohemians protested violently against their people being sacrified in the interests of Germany.

LONDON, December 17. — The British Cabinet today met in full session to discuss the raid of the German warships upon the English coast yesterday. Premier Asquith, Winston Churchill, the First Lord of the Admiralty, and Secretary for War Lord Kitchener, were among the first members of the Cabinet to appear for the meeting. All the other members were present at this session.

BUENOS AIRES, December 17.— The Argentine cruiser Pueyrredon, after a long chase, has captured the German armed steamer Patagonia, it is reported here to-day. The vessel is charged with several violations of neutrality in Argentine waters.

SENATOR JAFFRAY.

In the death of Hon. Senator Jaffray, Toronto, Canada loses another of her grand old men, who like many of them, passed away full of years and honour, fighting the battle of life with faculties undimmed and spirit unimpaired to the last. The late Mr. Jaffray came in early life—nearly three-quarters of a century ago—from the land of successful men, Scotland, and for more than half a century has been a conspicuous figure and influential factor, in the commercial, financial, journalistic and political activities of the country. For years he was identified with the management of the Globe, a staunch friend of its interests. In politics he was an active, and influential Liberal. He made his mark and achieved success in the financial world, and one of his early enterprises associates him with Peterborough. In conjunction with the late Senator Cox, he took hold of the moribund Midland Railway, which at that time passed through Peterborough, coming, figuratively, from nowhere, and going nowhere, and that at a very moderate rate of speed, revived it and sold it to the Grand Trunk, of whose system it forms an important link, and contributes largely to the commerce and prosperity of Peterborough. That is regarded as the foundation of the fortunes of these two men, who in after years both became men of wealth and influence, and both senators—Mr. Cox in 1896, and Mr. Jaffray, ten years later, in 1906.

THE END CERTAIN.

Whatever may be the outcome of the naval conditions at present existing in the North Sea, as a result of the daring raid of German warships on the English coast, we may be sure that in the end the British fleets will show that Britannia rules the waves. Not only is the British navy, as it existed before the war, ship for ship, double that of Germany in both strength and numbers, but the British are building warships so rapidly that according to the statement of the First Lord of the Admiralty Great Britain could have destroyed one super-Dreadnought per month for a year and still be in a better position than at the beginning of the war. The German plan of wearing down the British navy works both ways. The wearing down is not all on one side, and if the material wearing down process should continue as it has done so far to the advantage of the British navy, or if the material destruction were only equal, the time would come when the German fleet would cease to exist—then Britain would be left with the most powerful navy in the world. We are stirred out of the rut the hitherto inactivity of the German navy has put us in, and though the bombardment of the British coast is a distressing incident, it is only an incident. It will not discourage the British; it will only put them on their mettle. If there was any need of a stimulus to recruiting in Great Britain, the bombardment has supplied it. We are a little surprised; but we are not discouraged, and more desperately set in our determination to fight the fight to the finish. We have set out to win or help win, and we shall do it.

AN EXCEPTION.

The Examiner on Saturday republished from the Globe an article referring to commercial and industrial conditions in Peterborough. The writer, a well-known special contributor to the Globe, is a man of large experience, a shrewd observer and of good judgment. But in this case Jupiter has nodded for once. The article printed, stated that a "local cream separator factory . . . was running on very much reduced strength." It is a pleasure to state that the writer of the article in some way got a wrong impression and unwillingly did the De Laval Separator factory, which could be the only factory referred to, an injustice. This factory is not "running at greatly reduced strength" — but is running to full capacity in every department except the silo department, which every year relaxes at this season. Not only do the present demands for the productions of the factory keep it in full running activity, but the prospects for future brisk business are most promising. A conference of the representatives of the company in various parts of the country, was held yesterday, concluding with a banquet last night; and at the conference the reports presented showed that the outlook for the future was excellent, and assured a continuance of the present manufacturing activity. This is as natural to expect as it is gratifying. While the war may tend to stimulate some and to depress other manufacturing industries, it really helps an industry like the separator company, which caters to the wants of agriculture in its broadest sense. Agriculture in Canada at least, is not depressed, but rather heartened by the war conditions. There is a greatly increased demand for agricultural products of all kinds, and a consequent activity in the arena of production, and necessarily of the agencies that supply some of the essentials of creating such increased production.

CHRISTMAS AS USUAL AND NOT AS USUAL

The Board of Trade is right in urging the observance of "Christmas as usual," for this observance will promote observance of the motto "business as usual." Our merchants deserve that this attitude on the part of the public should prveail. They have not, owing to the disturbed conditions created by the war, been overwhelmed with business, and a greater activity at the Christmas season, will indicate practical acceptance of the lead of the good will spirit of Christmas.

But while we should do on Christmas buying as usual; we should vary the usual direction of our Christmas manifestations of kindness. Unfortunately the usual way of distribution of Christmas largesse is in the direction of exemplifying the truth of the saying, "to him that hath shall be given." We spend to too large an extent the most thought and money on the bestowal of gifts upon those to whom such bestowal means embarrassment of riches—the gift of costly articles of much less doubtful value than utility. Especially at this trying time when actual distress, actual privation of even the common necessities of life, are so prevalent, we are all called upon to make new manifestations of the Christmas spirit.

As at this time nearly twenty centuries ago, the Blessed Virgin went to her lying-in in a stable, and in this bleak environment, gave the greatest Gift of all gifts to the world. This indicates the true spirit in which we should keep the Christmas feast, a feast not of luxurious self-indulgence and catering to social obligations and banal custom, but a feast of self-denial and good works, good giving. We have many homes in which our fellow-beings are housed in cheerless wind-pierced rooms, unwarmed or badly warmed, and with the inmates as badly clad and as badly fed. In such homes many a prospective mother faces her travail under as cheerless conditions as did the Christ mother in the manger of Bethlehem. The Son that was born there, came to the poor, mingled with the poor, and ministered to the poor. He set the standard of true Christmas giving, of the true exercise of the Christmas spirit, unselfish single-hearted-giving; not giving to get, or for form's sake or for fashion's sake.

We cannot sit in our warm and comfortable homes, well clad and well fed, and with warm clothing when we go abroad, rejoicing in the Christmas cheer the Lord hath given—we can't do this with ease of mind or conscience, if we know, as we must know if we think, that there are hundreds within the sound of our glad home revelry and reverent rejoicing, cold, shivering, hungry and hopeless.

Indeed we need more than ever, Christmas as usual and not as usual—in the form of manifestation of its true spirit.

Let us try to show proof that Christmas has made us Christians.

AS IT AFFECTS GEN. HUGHES.

The appointment of Major-General Lessard and Brigadier-General Sam Steele as Inspectors-General of the militia forces in Canada, coming at this time, is probably not devoid of significance.

The present forces in Canada and those yet to be raised for active service will probably be under the control of these military officers, while Hon. Sam Hughes, as Minister of Militia, will more particularly occupy himself with those duties that fall under his charge as a civil Minister of the Crown.

That appears to be the meaning of what has been done. As the Star said the other day, such trouble as Hon. Sam Hughes had involved himself in had not been incurred in his capacity as a Cabinet Minister, but outside of that capacity altogether, as a soldier with his regimentals on.

It is not necessary that the Minister who holds the Militia portfolio should himself be the ranking militia officer of the Dominion. It is not necessary, and perhaps not even advisable, that he should be a militia officer at all. The ablest officers, not being in politics, are not in line for Cabinet positions, but they must be in line for promotion to full command of the troops if the highest efficiency is to be reached.

It looks as if the new move means that Inspector-General Lessard and Brigadier-General Steele will be in military command of the forces in Canada, while Hon. Sam Hughes, as Minister of Militia, will retain that directing authority over the service which, under our system of government, must attach to the responsible Minister in charge.—Toronto Star.

THE KAISER'S THROAT.

Whether or not the throat affection of the German Emperor is serious, it is interesting to recall that throat trouble caused the death of his father nearly thirty years ago.

His illness was the cause of one of the most heated medical controversies on record, brought about by the strife of two opposing factions, with Bismarck leading one and the Crown Prince's radical friends the other. The court physicians, it is said, declared Frederick was suffering from cancer, and that an immediate operation was necessary. The Prince's friends opposed an operation, fearing he might die; his father was old and feeble, and they were anxious to see him at the head of affairs if only for a short time. Frederick, himself, was convinced that his ailment was incurable and formally relinquished all claim to the succession.

The controversy became so warm that Dr. Morrell Mackenzie, the English throat specialist, was called in. He declared the crown prince was not suffering from cancer, but whatever the ailment was, he seemingly found no cure for it. The old Emperor died, and Frederick, constantly growing weaker and despite his renunciation, took his father's place. His rule was ended three months later by death, and just a year after the throat affection first appeared.—London Advertiser.

CIVIC RESPONSIBILITY.

Every town and city hall should have a bureau to encourage Made-in-Canada goods. Money spent by public officers for the good of the public should serve the good of the public by being invested in what makes work for Canadians. There are cases in this country of councils and boards of works turning down Canadian tenders even when they were lower than foreign tenders; or because they were a few dollars higher; or because they wanted to try experiments; or because they figured that the factories which paid taxes into their own civic treasury could afford to beat up business abroad. Happily, such cases are not now as frequent as they used to be.

The civic employers and spenders of Canada, as a whole, have got it strongly into their heads that it's far more important to have labour busy in factories and able to spend wages for Made-in-Canada goods, than to have labour tramping the streets looking for charity or work. It's better to have men busy on something that represents a fair investment of labour than busy on work that's done by a corporation just on purpose to keep men from being idle.

A skilled mechanic may be able to handle a shovel on a piece of roadwork. But he won't do it as well as the man that's brought up on the shovel. His power to work depends on the thing he does. When he's at a job that doesn't suit him he wastes his labour. The civic government that doesn't help to keep labour busy in its own factories, or factories elsewhere in Canada, is neglecting a golden opportunity to help along a movement that keeps civic governments from having bad economic problems on their hands. Every municipal government in Canada should be a civic headquarters for the purchase of Made-in-Canada goods.

WHAT EXPERIENCE INDICATES AS THE BETTER NAVAL POLICY

Those Canadian Conservatives who had lauded the Borden naval policy, and charged with disloyalty those who did not sing Te Deums in its honour, must feel pretty cheap these days as they see victory after victory won by cruisers such as the Laurier government wanted this country to provide. Particularly disagreeable will be such comments as that which follows, taken from The London Morning Post:

In Canada, Australia, New Zealand, the raising, equipping and despatching of their contingents was in each case local work, conceived on a generous scale, and handsomely carried out. These contingents will be found to justify local efforts of the dominions to create their own military forces. Even where the central authority and dominions were in conflict, it is the Dominion judgment that is proving right. Thus Australia insisted, against a great deal of opposition at this end, on having ITS OWN NAVY, and this Australian navy, when the war broke out, was FOUND to be THE RIGHT THING IN THE RIGHT PLACE. If Australia had developed this independent policy somewhat earlier we might not have been under the necessity of applying for the good offices of our loyal, obliging ally in the east (Japan.)

The Post concludes with this declaration: "These things point out also the great truth that if the empire is spared under Providence to continue its development, that development will be upon lines of freedom and co-operation, not upon lines of concentration and subordination."

The Laurier naval policy preserved the autonomy of Canada, while at the same time it proposed to assist the British naval programme in what the experience of the war has shown to be an invaluable manner. Dreadnoughts too, play their part, and these the Mother Country can supply, whether with or without the assistance of the colonies. But colonial navies such as Australia has, and Canada under Laurier planned to have, are also necessary.—Brantford Expositor.

A TRANSPORTATION FEAT

Some day the story of the wonderful feat of transportation of the British expeditionary forces to France may be written. For obvious reasons it is suppressed now. The English newspapers dare only hint at the magnitude of the undertaking. During the Boer war 250,000 men with artillery, horses, equipment and stores were carried 7,000 miles to South Africa, and the achievement was without a precedent. But the seas were clear of hostile ships. England had the means to move the troops, and it was only a question of how quickly the work could be done. No other maritime nation would have been able to solve the problem so smoothly and in time so brief. Granting that England had the tonnage, high praise was her due for the celerity with which the transportation was effected.

In sending army corps to the aid of England's ally in the great war on the Continent, distance to be steamed by the transport was a negligible factor. The big factor was assembling the men at the point of embarkation, and getting them across the Channel without accident in time measured by days. Mr. H. A. Walker, General Manager of the London and South-Western Railway, thinks that his line has made a record in handling troops destined for the front. The Government gave him sixty hours to make preparations to dispatch 350 trains of about thirty coaches each. He was ready in exactly forty-eight hours. He does not go into details, but the presumption is that the 10,500 coaches called for carried the first expedition to the point of embarkation. It probably consisted of two army corps and an extra division. In the first three weeks of the war seventy-three trains were unloaded every fourteen hours, arriving from all parts of the country, about twelve minutes apart.

Ship after ship took her place in turn at the wharf, filled up with soldiers, horses, guns and equipment, and steamed into deep water at once. A naval officer was in charge of each vessel, and everything went like clock work with the help of a host of well-drilled stevedores. Tonnage of the transports of course varied greatly. One Atlantic liner carried 3,000 men across the Channel, but no ship less than a thousand. Men-of-war were waiting to escort the fleet and scouts ran round in the van to look for submarines and to sound warning of attack by the enemy. No accidents worth reporting occurred. What risk there was had to be taken, and speed was the essence of each undertaking. The transports in ordered procession were strung out across the Channel, and the disembarkation went as smoothly as the taking of the troops and munitions aboard on the English side.—New York Sun.

SAYS AUTOMOBILE IS A NECESSITY

A notably conservative paper recently made the editorial statement that the average physician with a scattered practice saves time worth $10 each day he uses his automobile.

The writer goes on to prove that motorists having great financial interests will show an average saving far greater than the professional man, but, for the sake of argument, credits an average saving of $1 a day in time to the million and a half American cars now in use. This means that more than a half billion dollars will thus have been saved to Americans in 1914.

Astonishing figures, but who will venture to dispute them? What automobile owner will deny that his time is worth so little that his car doesn't save a dollar's worth of it a day, no matter how little he rides?

In carrying this line of thought to its logical conclusion, the writer states that on the estimated investment in American automobiles of a billion and a half of dollars a return if thirty-three and a third per cent. is shown. And he asks: "What other investment of this magnitude gives such a return?"

The Kissel Motor Car Company recently made a careful inquiry to learn what percentage of Kissel Kars were used to a material extent in the owner's business. It was learned that eighty-one per cent. were thus employed, and most of the remaining nineteen per cent. were admittedly used to carry their owners to and from business.

How much more than this saving of time—which is money—the automobile means to modern civilization is incalculable. It increases the value of prosperity by annihilating distance, it is a wonderful tonic and preserver of health, and it employs, directly and indirectly, a tremendous army of workers.

There are four hundred and fifty automobile manufacturers in this country, employing hundreds of thousands of men, mostly skilled mechanics. There are more than fifteen thousand local dealers and another three to four thousand garage men who do not sell cars. There are hundreds of makers of automobile accessories, representing thousands upon thousands of workers. The metal, lumber, leather, glass, rubber, oil, and other industries owe a very large share of their prosperity to the automobile. In New York State alone there are sixty thousand chauffeurs.

The modern automobile is decidedly not a plaything—not a luxury. It is a necessity to business as a business is carried on to-day, and will be even a greater necessity to business as business will be carried on in the future.

TREBILCOCK BROTHERS

RUSSIANS ARE PRESSING FORWARD IN THE SOUTH

Grand Duke Nicholas Determined to Crush Austro-German Army and to Advance in Force Through Silesia

LONDON, Dec. 17.—The greatest importance is attached to the fighting on the southern front. Grand Duke Nicholas is determined to crush the Austro-German resistance in the region and to advance in force through Silesia, says a despatch from Petrograd.

The next big battle is expected to be fought south of Cracow. In preliminary engagements the Russians have repulsed the Austro-German forces.

In Central Poland, in the region of Lowics, repeated German attacks have been repulsed, and the offensive of the enemy has been confined to sporadic attacks upon the Russian line. German reinforcements have arrived, however, and this battle is expected to be renewed with the greatest ferocity. Northern Poland is cleared of Germans, and the East Prussian campaign is to be vigorously pushed.

The repulse of the Austrians advancing down the northern slopes of the Carpathians through the Dukla Pass into Galicia is claimed in a report published by The War Messenger yesterday.

South of Cracow, it is stated, the Austro-German forces have been endeavoring to check the Russian attack by strengthening their defences. The Germans are declared to have suffered heavy losses in violent but unsuccessful attacks in the region of Lowics and Llow.

Czar Nicholas left the Caucasian front, where he has been visiting the Russian troops, yesterday.

From western Poland the Germans are preparing another great drive on Warsaw. Fresh troops are being rushed into the fierce struggle on the Vistula, and a stupendous battle is again developing from the Baltic to the Carpathians, according to advices received in London.

The following statement from the General Staff of the commander-in-chief of the Russian forces was issued last evening:—

"In the direction of Mlawa we have repulsed the enemy toward the frontier.

"On the left bank of the Vistula the Germans kept up a stubborn attack throughout the day along the line from Kiernozia to Sochaczew. Owing to the unfavorable condition of the country our troops retreated slightly during the evening.

"On the other sections of the front our troops made counter-attacks and compelled the enemy to remain on his positions, checking his attempts to advance.

"Our strategy has stopped the Austrian advance from beyond the Carpathians.

"On the other points there is no important change to report."

The correspondent of The Morning Post at Petrograd says:—

The Germans continue obstinately to reinforce their already enormous strength on the left bank of the Vistula. The new forces here again made a most determined series of attacks between the Bzura and the Vistula in the neighborhood of Hova, and the concentration of German forces is taking place almost on the Vistula. The Germans evidently persist in their original plan to force the Russian right flank south of the Vistula in the hope of reaching Warsaw, securing the whole course of the Vistula and utilising this magnificent river as a main artery for the direction of their attack upon the flank of the Russian main armies operating in Galicia.

Women Among The Dead In Scarborough

Germans' Shells Killed Prominent Citizens

SCARBOROUGH, Eng., Dec. 17.—(Via London.)—The casualties in Scarborough as a result of the attack by German warships yesterday morning include among the killed, John Hall, a prominent alderman; Alfred Beale, a postman; Mrs. Bennett and two children; Mrs. Merryweather and Mrs. Tetrow, all well-known residents of the city; two unidentified women, a housemaid, a young woman named McIntyre, and a boy belonging to a family of the working class.

The town was aroused by firing about eight o'clock. German warships accompanied by a trawler had come into the south bay under cover of a mist.

There was a lull in the firing at a quarter past eight and then the shooting began again more sharply. Women and children took the first train from the station.

Montreal Is "Wide Open."

MONTREAL, Dec. 17.—The Montreal Star says: Despite sporadic outbursts of reform the business of gambling is going on to-day as freely as it ever was. The city is "wide open."

There are a number of quiet resorts, some of them in respectable uptown localities, where the devotees of poker or the wheel may find sport any evening. Poolrooms where you may play the ponies are also flourishing.

In another place "craps" are the order of the day and night, and "the sky is the limit," where the bones are being rolled. All one has to do is to walk in. There are at least a score of these resorts.

Grants From Municipalities

Besides the $500 per month granted by the Counties of Northumberland and Durham as a patriotic fund while this war lasts the different municipalities have made the following grants of goods, money and produce: Cartwright Township, $540; Cavan Township, $500; Clarke $1,000; Darlington, $340; Hamilton, $1,5..; Hope, $2,000; Manvers, $600; Percy, $2,000; Seymour $1,010; Hastings, $537; Newcastle $223.

The Host—It's beginning to rain. You'd better stay to dinner. The Guest—No, thanks, very much; but it's not bad enough for that.

PROMOTIONS IN CANADIAN MILITIA

Major-Gen. Lessard, promoted from the comand of the Toronto divisional area to position of Inspector-General will remain in Toronto. Col. S. B. Steel, of Winnipeg, raised to rank of Brigadier-General, becomes Inspector-General for Western Canada. Col. Fiset, for years Deputy Minister of Militia, becomes Surgeon-General.

Will Celebrate Jewish Feast

Chanucah, or the festival of lights, is being observed by the Hebrews all this week, in commemoration of the re-dedication of the temple at Jerusalem in 165 B.C., after Antiochus Epiphanes, the Greek invader, had been driven out of Judea by Judas Maccabeus and his brothers. After three years' fighting, the Hebrews recovered their land from the Greek invaders, and the lights in the temple were relighted.

The feast of Chanucah is observed for eight days, and every night in the homes and the synagogues the candles are lighted, the first night one, the second night two, and so on, till the whole seven branches are alight.

General Joffre Thanks Soldiers For Victory In Marne Battle

Text of French Commander's Orders of the Day is Made Public, Calling Leadership of Such Men the Highest Honour He Has Borne

NEW YORK, Dec. 15.—"If I have been able to accomplish something I have also been recompensed by the greatest honour that has come to me in my long career—the honour of commanding men such as you."

These are the words of General Joffre in his orders of the day to his army after the battle of the Marne. The full text of his proclamation in the orders was received here only yesterday. It is short and to the point—the thanks and appreciation of a great general to his gallant men. It is addressed to the troops of the Sixth army and is as follows:

"The Sixth army has sustained for five full days without interruption or lull combat against an enemy superior in numbers and till this time flushed with victory. The struggle has been hard; the losses under fire, the fatigue due to lack of sleep and of nourishment have surpassed anything that could be imagined; you have suffered all this with a valour, a firmness and an endurance to which words cannot give the glory merited.

"Comrades, the General in Chief asked you in the name of your country to do more than your duty; you did it and have accomplished what seemed to be impossible. Thanks to you, victory has crowned our standards. Now that you have tasted its glorious satisfaction, you must never again let it escape you.

"As to myself, if I have been able to acomplish anything, I have also been recompensed by the greatest honour that has come to me in my long career, the honour of commanding men such as you.

"It is with a lively emotion that I owe to you that to which all my efforts and energies for more than forty-four years have been extended—revenge for 1870.

"Thanks to you, and honour to all the fighting men of the Sixth army!

"JOFFRE."

General Joffre's reward for the battle of the Marne was the Médaille Militaire—the military medal. That he had been granted this decoration was made public some time ago, but there are but few persons here who recognize the honour bestowed upon him.

The military medal is reserved for the decoration of non-commissioned officers and men for brilliant feats. Officers are not eligible to it, except on one condition. An officer who has attained the highest command may receive the decoration if after he has received that command he distinguishes himself by some new and brilliant service.

erman asserts that there has been some indifference shown by local manufacturers in respect to the market that has been created by the war. He cited the case of one firm in the City who apparently felt that they were not in a position to manufacture anything that the War Department might require, yet they were able to take a sub-contract for the manufacture of metal fittings for war harness. The same applies to many local industries such as the Canoe Works, the Lundy Shovel and Tool Company and others. The reason that the last named firm is unable to secure Government contracts is said to be due to the fact that they are unable to obtain handles for shovels such as would be required by the Government.

Will Go to Ottawa.

This matter was discussed by the Board of Trade at their last meeting, and the conclusion reached was that a committee should go to Ottawa at once and see the Government Purchasing Agent. Mr. J. W. Worth of the Bonner-Worth Co., sounded a note of warning to the effect that manufacturers tendering for work should not exceed their production. Delay in making delivery of goods contracted for may prevent the manufacturer from getting a second contract. Mr. Worth states that the increase in the payroll of the Bonner-Worth amounts to fifty per cent. They are working to full capacity. The Ackerman contract will be completed in about fifteen days, when it is possible that a new one may be secured. The two Hamilton firms are mentioned in the list of manufacturers who might undertake a contract for the manufacture of munitions of war. Both of these firms are well equipped for such work. The machinery in teau, has been entirely destroyed. The Prussians massacred a large part of its population. They seized several hundred of the more important citizens, and having assembled them in the public square, shot them down with machine guns. Among these unfortunate victims was the brother-in-law of my sister, with his two sons. Several hours after the execution one of these poor children gave signs of life; his compatriots wished to pick him up and care for him, but the German soldiers, like real butchers, forbade [illegible] is stain.

of the largest punch presses in department is used in the manufacture. Some time was spent in experimenting with the cap, before a satisfying article was produced. Several other firms in Canada tried to produce a similar article but failed, owing to the lack of necessary equipment, stamping brass and other difficulties connected with the manufacture of the cap.

A Thousand Fold.

The manufacturers have come to the conclusion that nothing can be gained by sitting around waiting for contracts to come in as suggested by the local Member. The latter is of the opinion that the Government should seek the manufacturers when contracts are ready and that no good can be gained by the manufacturers appealing to the Government direct instead of through the local Member. This Government carries little weight when it is known that other cities have been favoured with Government contracts as a result of the effort put forth by their parliamentary representatives.

Mr. Northup, Member for Hastings County, is credited with securing a large contract for a canning factory in Belleville. Brantford and other cities in Ontario have had similar experiences. Berlin is another. As one member of the Board of Trade put it: "Berlin has got back a thousand-fold the amount that it contributed to the Patriotic Fund."

If you want to sell cheap tea, leave all the dust in it. But cheapness does not always mean satisfaction. The dust and stems are carefully removed from Salada tea, thus ensuring a perfectly clean bright cup of a quality and flavour unsurpassed.

FIREMEN'S SIXTH ANNUAL BANQUET

And Christmas Tree Was Held Last Night in the Fire Hall One Hundred and Twenty-five Guests Enjoyably Entertained--Presents Distributed.

There is only one adequate way in which to describe the Firemen's Annual Banquet and Christmas tree which was held last night in one of the spacious rooms of the Fire Hall That is to say, that it was even more largely attended, more successful and if possible, more thoroughly enjoyed by all than their anual affair last year. Those who were present at the 1913 banquet will know just what high degree of praise is contained in that statement. Because it is called the Firemen's Banquet no one should be allowed to remain under the impression that on this occasion the eighteen local firemen sit down at the prodigally laden tables and rival their guests in the disposition of the food for this would be a great mistake. The firemen, as a matter of fact prepare the food, also room and the tables (and in a manner too which can only be realised by being present) and when the evening for the banquet comes round they keep up their good work by seeing that every wish of their wives, children and guests is satisfied thoroughly and promptly. Their reward for all their time, labour and painstaking is to see how greatly their families and friends enjoy the splendid feast and programme they prepared.

One hundred and twenty people sat down to the ample and delicious dinner last night. The tables had been set in the dormitory which had been most liberally and tastefully decorated for the occasion. The comprehensive scheme of decoration, which was inexpressibly pleasing, embraced a patriotic design of flags, in which was set the photographs of their Majesties, the King and Queen. It would be useless to attempt to describe the splendidness of the repast Those that experienced it would know how far short of the mark the account had fallen and no words from this pen could make others understand the tastiness of the spread provided.

During the evening, too, a splendid musical programme was given. Every number on the programme was thoroughly enjoyed. Miss Clancy, who was accompanied on the piano by her sister, rendered an excellent solo. Messrs. F. Skitch, R. F. Downey and Henry also gave well-rendered solos which were warmly received All three gentlemen were accompanied in splendid style by Mr. John Crane. Mr. J. John's humorous elocutionary offering touched a responsive chord in the audience, and Miss Thomas gave a reading replete with the best examples of humour, and was forced to respond to an encore.

Chief Howard presided and called first upon Mayor Buller for a brief address. His Worship the Mayor said that he had always a warm spot in his heart for the fire brigade, because in the active part he had taken in its establishment and because of the enjoyable times he had spent with them upon similar occasions in the past. He thanked the Chief and the Brigade for their hospitality.

His Worship Magistrate Dumble said that he was glad he had waived aside two or three engagements to be present. He had always been interested in the brigade and was glad to meet the firemen and their wives and families under such happy auspices. He was sure that in the coming year, as in the past one, the firemen would have a splendid record and the public have no grievance against them.

His Honour Judge Huycke remarked on the appearance of contentment of the firemen. He always wondered at it and attributed it to various reasons, but he was sure now that it was owing to their happy wives and families.

Ald. G. Walter Green said that this year his duties as head of the Fire, Water and Light committee had been very pleasant. There had been no trouble, and cross firing between the brigade and the committee. During the year there had been 120 fires with a total damage of under $10,000. This was even better than the year 1913, which at the time was considered a record.

Ald. A. H. Stratton said that as a member of the Fire, Water and Light committee he was in a position to say that under the leadership of Ald. Green the committee's work had been pleasant and profitable. He complimented the firemen on their air of thriftiness and wished them and their families and the guests a Merry Christmas and a Happy New Year.

At this stage of the programme the most interesting event of the whole evening took place, when, with Ald. Duffus and Ald. Green acting as Santa Clauses. The many handsome presents were distributed from the Christmas tree to the children of the firemen. Certain others of the guests also received very appropriate gifts.

In a brief speech Ald. Duffus paid a tribute to the local firemen who gave up their home life, and were separated from their happy families far to much of the time. The local firemen, he said, loved their work. The citizens in general did not really appreciate the situation of the firemen, whose stipend was none too generous.

Dr. Greer spoke of the good fellowship that had existed between himself and the brigade as neighbours. He thought that the citizens realised what a splendid fire department Peterborough had.

Chief Thompson, on behalf of the guests from the City Hall, expressed his gratitude to Chief Howard and the firemen for their kind invitation. He remarked that the Police and Fire Departments were co-operating splendidly.

Mr. G. A. Gillespie, M.P.P., congratulated Mayor Buller on his choice of a chairman for the Fire, Water and Light Committee. He also complimented the Brigade on its splendid record during the past year.

Ald. G. H. Duncan expressed his pleasure at being at the firemen's annual banquet for the first time. He hoped, however, it would not be the last. In well-chosen terms he expressed his thanks for being included among those invited, and thanked the Chief and Brigade for their kindness. The City was coming more to realise the value of the permanent brigade.

Press Assists The Police

Sir Melville McNaughton Pays Tribute to Newspaper Men who Have Been of Great Use to Him

Sir Melville McNaughton, late Chief of the Criminal Investigation Department of Scotland Yard, in his recently published memories, "Days of My Years" had something interesting to say relative to the aid newspaper men give in criminal cases.

"At certain times press men did hamper one, but in nine cases out of 10 they have been of the greatest use to me; and on occasions rendered yeoman service in the successful investigation of crime. The old idea used to be that detectives best served the interests of justice by keeping journalists at a distance, with the natural result that press men, being under the necessity of reporting something, used to string together unreliable stories, and to set about investigations themselves in a manner very maddening and handicapping to the detective officers who had the handling of the case. It seemed well, therefore, in many cases, to give freely and frankly such information as could be used without hesitation, and at the same time with profit to the public and the police."

St. John's N.F. Has Sent 1,250 to War

ST. JOHN'S, N.F., Monday.—From this city, with a population of 30,000, about 1,250 men have enlisted for service in the British army and navy, 1,000 as soldiers and 250 as sailors. This is an average of one in every twenty-five of the population—an average that, so far as is known here, has been exceeded only at Liverpool, where one person in every fifteen has enlisted.

The extent of the local enlistment has been somewhat of a surprise to the government officials, as there is no militia in Newfoundland and the people of the colony have never had any appeals made to their military spirit.

The ability of St. Johns to put so large a force in the field is ascribed by recruiting officers to the fact that for twenty years denominational schools and colleges have maintained boys' brigades. These number ordinarily about one thousand youths. When the call came for men to go to the front as a military contribution from Great Britain's most ancient colony four-fifths of those who offered their services were either present or one-time members of the boys' brigades, and every officer appointed for the regiment had been trained in one of these organizations.

SHELLING GERMANS

British Warships Violently Bombard Belgian Coast Town in Effort to Drive Out Enemy

PROGRESS MADE

LONDON, Dec. 17.—The raid of German warships on the northeast coast of England and their escape in the fog after having bombarded Scarborough, Hartlepool and Whitby, where a number of persons were killed and wounded and considerable damage was done to property, completely overshadows the operations on land.

The land operations, however, as on preceding days, have been of the utmost importance. The British, French and Belgian troops have continued their offensive in the west, and, according to the French official reports, have made further slight progress. This was not accomplished without serious opposition on the part of the Germans, who at every point where an advance was attempted fought against it foot by foot.

Along the coast of Flanders, where the allies are trying to push their lines forward from Nieuport, they had the assistance of the British fleet, which violently bombarded Westende, one of the many little coast towns that have suffered greatly since the commencement of the war. This attack, Berlin says, was without effect and the allies were repulsed.

Further inland the French also claim to have gained ground, although in a less marked degree than on previous days. In the Argonne there appears to have been a lull in the fighting, but both in the Woevre and Alsace, the two other regions where severe fighting has been in order for some time, the Germans appear to have delivered counter-attacks.

British Troops at Havre.

HAVRE, Dec. 17. — Thousands of British troops are arriving here daily on transports, and are being moved to the north as rapidly as possible. The British are making the port of Havre their main base of supplies. On the average, 15 British transports arrive here daily from Southampon.

Large camps have been leased on the heights along the Seine for periods varying from two to three years, and barracks are being built. Extensive supply depots have been established here.

French Advance on Right.

BASLE, Switzerland, Dec. 17.—The French armies appear to have taken the offensive along the entire front from Belfort to Sainte Marie-aux-Mines. Heavy artillery firing causes the windows to shake in houses here by night and day. The French have converted Thann into a stronghold.

The movement reported from Basle apparently is in the nature of a general attack by the French forces in Alsace.

Customs Officer Dropped Dead.

SARNIA, Dec. 17.—James Alcock, for thirty years a customs officer at this port, dropped dead in the customs office here yesterday morning while getting up from a desk where he had been working. Deceased was born in 1845, and was very well known in Sarnia.

SPLENDID PERFORMANCE BY HUYCKE'S MINISTRELS

SINGING WAS SPLENDID

If all made-in-Canada products are as good as the made-in-Canada minstrels, Mr. Asa Huycke's company, which appeared at the Conservatory of Music Hall last night in aid of the Peterborough Hockey Club, Canada should have little trouble in capturing her share of the German trade. To those who saw the attraction for the first time, and who based their anticipations on the usual amateur production, Mr. Huycke's organization was a complete surprise. Splendid solo work, a most effective chorus, and bright specialties made the programme altogether delightful and the audience indicated their approval in no uncertain manner, every number being encored.

In arranging the company good judgment has been shown in securing quality rather than quantity, and the result is a performance that is artistic and finished, with none of the drag or awkwardness that so often mars amateur productions.

The first part opened with the rousing chorus, "All Aboard For Dixie," with the solo well taken by Douglas Carlisle. The ballad, "Last Night Was the End of the World," gave Jos. Minecola a chance to display his fine tenor voice in good style, and an encore was demanded. Mr. George Wesley made a big hit in his end song, "The High Cost of Loving," and had to repeat the number. "Down South," with Tom Ward as the soloist, was most effectively rendered and a quartette did admirable work in the chorus. Walter Fitzgerald got all the humour out of his song, "Fido is a Hot Dog Now," and the audience insisted on hearing it again. "Harmony Bay," a most tuneful duet by Jos. Minnicola and George Daley, was one of the gems of the programme and had to be repeated. Mat Drysdale caught the crowd with his rendition of the catchy song, "By the Beautiful Sea," and like the rest, was recalled.

Dave Quinlan and Walter Fitzgerald in their buck and wing dancing, gave a decidedly clever act and had to come back in answer to the applause. A particularly effective rendition of "Tipperary," with the solo well taken by Geo. Daly and a novel drum effect introduced by the chorus made a rousing finale to a splendid first part.

In the olio Frank Clarke, who needs no introduction, played the banjo as only he can play it, and Dave Quinlan assisted in some clever soft shoe and buck dancing. Mr. Jarry contributed a humorous monologue that caught on and Asa Huycke and the Harmony Octette were heard to great advantage in a song and chorus with a yodeling effect that was novel and pleasing. Mr. Huycke sang the solo, "Mother Machree" in splendid voice and with a full appreciation of its qualities. A cornet solo by Jos. Minecola was cleverly rendered, following a ourlesque solo by Geo. Wesley. The latter in company with Chas. Seymour showed a few innovations on the one-step, hesitation and other popular dances in a manner that convulsed the audience. Ed. Hanrahan's splendid bass was admirably suited to "The Veteran Song," which formed part of the finale, and he was warmly applauded. "Rule Britannia" and the National Anthem by the chorus, bringing the programme to a close.

Huycke's orchestra added greatly to the success of the occasion. Doug Carlisle made a splendid interlocutor, and the funny end men were Geo. Wesley, Dave Quinlan, Mat Drysdale and Walter Fitzgerald.

After the concert an enjoyable dance was held, the music being supplied most effectively by Huycke's orchestra.

LOCAL FIRMS WILL GO AFTER GOV'T CONTRACTS

They Have Concluded That it is Worse Than Useless to Sit Around Waiting For Contracts to Come in—The Ackerman Contract Will be Completed in Fifteen Days—Brass Cap For Shell as Manufactuaed by C. G. E. —Local Manufacturers are Well Equipped to Undertake Government Work

Mr. W. C. Ackerman, of the Ackerman Leather Manufactory, is a member of the Committee who will wait upon Mr. F. Stobart, Ottawa, purchasing agent in Canada for the British Government, with a view of securing additional contracts for Peterborough Manufacturers. Mr. Ackerman asserts that there has been some indifference shown by local manufacturers in respect to the market that has been created by the war. He cited the case of one firm in the City who apparently felt that they were not in a position to manufacture anything that the War Department might require, yet they were able to take a sub-contract for the manufacture of metal fittings for war harness. The same applies to many local industries such as the Canoe Works, the Lunday Shovel and Tool Company and others. The reason that the last named firm is unable to secure Government contracts is said to be due to the fact that they are unable to obtain handles for shovels such as would be required by the Government.

Will Go to Ottawa.

This matter was discussed by the Board of Trade at their last meeting, and the conclusion reached was that a committee should go to Ottawa at once and see the Government Purchasing Agent. Mr. J. W. Worth of the Bonner-Worth Co., sounded a note of warning to the effect that manufacturers tendering for work should not exceed their production. Delay in making delivery of goods contracted for may prevent the manufacturer from getting a second contract. Mr. Worth states that the increase in the payroll of the Bonner-Worth amounts to fifty per cent. They are working to full capacity. The Ackerman contract will be completed in about fifteen days, when it is possible that a few one may be secured. The two Hamilton firms are mentioned in the list of manufacturers who might undertake a contract for the manufacture of munitions of war. Both of these firms are well equipped for such work. The machinery in both plants is not only modern but adaptable to nearly all kinds of work connected with that branch of manufacturing.

Cap for Shells.

For some weeks past the Canadian General Electric Company has been manufacturing a brass cap for a shell. The cap is of peculiar manufacture. It is stamped from brass. One of the largest punch presses in that department is used in the manufacture. Some time was spent in experimenting with the cap, before a satisfying article was produced. Several other firms in Canada tried to make a similar article but failed, owing to the lack of necessary equipment for stamping brass and other difficulties connected with the manufacture of the cap.

A Thousand Fold.

The manufacturers have come to the conclusion that nothing can be gained by sitting around waiting for contracts to come in as suggested by the local Member. The latter is of the opinion that the Government will seek the manufacturers when they are ready and that no good can be gained by the manufacturers appealing to the Government direct or through the local Member. This argument carries little weight when it is known that other cities have been favoured with Government contracts, as a result of the effort put forth by their parliamentary representatives.

Mr. Northup, Member for Hastings County, is credited with securing a large contract for a canning factory in Belleville. Brantford and other cities in Ontario have had similar experiences. Berlin is another. As one member of the Board of Trade put it: "Berlin has got back a thousand-fold the amount that she contributed to the Patriotic Fund."

If you want to sell cheap tea, you leave all the dust in it. But cheapness does not always mean satisfaction. The dust and stems are carefully removed from Salada tea, thus ensuring a perfectly clean bright tea of a quality and flavour unsurpassed.

Draft Agreement Is Submitted

To the Public Utilities Commission —Mr. J. C. Anderson Appointed Attorney

The Public Utilities Commission, which met last evening, considered a draft agreement submitted by the Peterborough Radial Railway Company in regard to the use of city poles for feeder lines. The matter was referred to Manager H. O. Fiske, for a report.

Mr. J. C. Anderson will be appointed attorney for the Commission to transact all business which the Commission may have with the collector of customs. The appointment will be authenticated over the seal of the Commission in accordance with the regulations.

The commissioners are in receipt of a letter from the Goldie-McCullough Company, asking for an opportunity to quote prices on a steam plant.

Peterborough Reservist At Ypres

Mrs. Chas. Payne, Smith street, has received a letter from her husband, Chas. Payne, a British reservist, who left Peterborough the first week in August to join his old corps, the Wiltshire regiment. His letter is written from the trenches at Ypres, and one interesting piece of information is that the British forces at the front have been supplied with fur coats and caps, the gift of the Russian Government.

The bank clearings for the week ending Dec. 17th totalled $496,473, an increase over the previous week of $20,213. The corresponding week last month the clearing amounted to $411-264.

THE CATTLE MARKET

A New Meaning To Our Christmas Gifts

Christmas giving will doubtless be marked this year with more of the ideal sentiment of the season that the recent years of bliss and plenty have called forth. The war has touched us all. It has made us sharers in the sorrows of the bereaved, and in the misery of the homeless. Our eyes have been opened as never before to the picture of suffering that reflects its sadness in the helplessness of those who would help. We realize, too, our dependence upon one another. Friendship appears in a brighter lustre. Its sanctity has been stripped of tinsel by grim realities whose effects are gradually becoming manifest.

This Christmas with its beautiful associations is set in a spirit of sacrifice closely akin to the divine. We have valued assayed, and the lesson will not soon be forgotten. Hence our Christmas tokens will be more fraught with meaning than ever. They will be given with more of that true spirit of friendship as the result of the new emphasis which has been placed upon friendship by recent world events. The spirit of sacrifice will be felt to a greater extent, and we will receive remembrances in that spirit. And it is well that we should be so influenced. Let our clearer vision have regard, too, for store employees. If a shopping tour is tiring to the purchaser he and she should remember the clerks; shop now while there is ample opportunity and help avoid causing fatigue that might be unnecessary.

The war has affected us and its results are seen in the attitude toward Christmas. Our gifts convey more meaning; they will be chosen more carefully and our consideration will extend to those who serve us.

DEVASTATION OF POLAND SECOND ONLY TO BELGIUM

LONDON, Dec. 15.—A picture of devastation and desolation almost equal in poignancy to that of Belgium is painted by the correspondents who have caught glimpses of the vast battlefields of Poland. Towns are in ruins, farms are laid waste, the greater part of the population has taken refuge in flight, either toward the German frontier or toward the Russian interior, and the entire country is said to be in abject despair. To the damage necessarily inflicted by war, midwinter is adding its terrors to the unfortunates whom fate has prevented from joining the flight from the territory.

The constant fluctuation of the fighting lines from the East Prussian border to Galicia has left scarcely a city or village intact. Driving each other back and forth across the snow covered plains, the opposing armies occupy and reoccupy the towns, and the big guns inflict on the population remaining in them such punishment as has become so well known in Northern France and Flanders. Correspondents declare that more than five hundred Polish towns have been laid in ruins during the last two months.

According to one correspondent the city of Kalisz has met the fate of Louvain. He says the place has been thoroughly sacked and 400 civilians have been killed.

The flight of civilians from Lodz when the Russians abandoned that city to the advancing Germans is said to be one of the most tragic episodes of the war, surpassing in its accompanying suffering the flight from Antwerp. The inhabitants of the Belgian city found open to them the hospitable doors of the Dutch, only a few miles away. Lodz, a city of about the same size, is more than seventy-five miles from any adequate refuge; railway service has been employed wholly in the movement of troops, and the highways, poor at the best, have been ground into almost impassable paths by the hundreds of thousands of soldier feet that have been passing over them.

Literally thousands of those who fled from the city ten days ago have not been accounted for, and the death-rate among them is certain to be extremely high.

Both armies are accusing each other of looting and cruelty, but so far no evidence has been adduced to prove violence that, experience has taught, is not the travelling companion of war.

The Public Utilities Commission at last evening and in addition to being a long list of accounts, transted several items of business. An pression of appreciation at the ork accomplished by Mr. G. L. owse, during his connection with e department, was recorded.

"Keep the Flag Flying."

The merchant marine flag is gaily uttering from the flag-staff at the City Hall. It is somewhat tattered nd torn, but it is still there echoing he sentiment that was expressed within the building a few nights ago, by those who attended the meeting that was called for the purpose of encouraging a wider use of the national emblem.

With Other Councils.

Sarnia on New Year's Day will have its first city election, and at that time will cast aside its reeves and have but a mayor and twelve aldermen. One of the main features is that the city will have a police commission to handle that department, the work now being done by a committee. The mayor, magistrate and country judge will handle this after the New Year. W. R. Paul and Wm. Doherty are running for mayor.

Children Heartbroken.

Children in St. Thomas are heartbroken over the order of the Medical Health Department, forbidding all Christmas entertainments or parties of any kind, owing to the outbreak of diphtheria which has occurred.

Decrease in Revenue.

The increased use of electricity in has caused such a follow revenue of the municipal ant that the Council is considering the advisibility of discontinuing operations.

Civic Lodging House.

St. Catharines has opened its new civic lodging house. A fee of ten cents for meals and fifteen cents for lodging will be charged all inmates.

Machine Gun Section.

New Sewers.

London has decided on the construction of additional storm sewers, to cost $14,000.

SOME THINGS AND A FEW OTHERS

games of all kinds, in time of peace and in time of war, "went to the front" in the agitation against football in the old country, a movement that seems to have spent its strength. Many well-meaning and usually well-informed also participated. Such a case was that of the Earl of Durham, whose position has roused much feeling, and stirred the Durham County association to action. A report of the meeting held by the association says that they resented his remarks, and thought his lordship must be unaware of what was being done in Durham county in regard to recruiting among footballers. It was reported that the following had joined the forces from 150 clubs. 2,366 players, 594 officials and 2,312 other members, representing an average of 8.75 per club. Of the 200 clubs in the county, 36 had not responded a return. Twenty-seven referees had enlisted. It was decided to acquaint Lord Durham of the figures and also of the amount contributed to the National fund when a complete return had been made up.

Scotland Wants the Game.

In Scotland, too, the worm is turning, and the misrepresentations of the crusaders are rousing the supporters of football to putting the case plainly before the public. Sir James Leishman, the head of the Scottish Insurance Act commission, who was mainly responsible for enlisting the footballers, in an interview deprecated shutting down football and other means of recreation and amusement [illegible]

Funeral of Little

League Enlargement and Extension.

That the game is in no serious straits is evidently the opinion of its principal promoters, as it is seriously proposed to play more, instead of less, football. This would be accomplished by enlarging the league sections to twenty-two clubs each, and extending the season, to begin August 15 and play until the middle of May. This would give at least four more Saturdays for fixtures, but the proposition is already meeting with strong opposition, though not yet officially launched.

Old country referees are up in arms against the reduction of fees, which they allege has been done without consulting the approved referees' societies. Not that they are unwilling to carry their share of the burden of the proposed reduction, but they contend that the resolution of the league clubs passed on October 20, is of so overbearing a nature that unless the clubs concerned are willing to receive a deputation on this matter, thereby taking them into consideration, trouble of a serious nature is likely to occur.

It may be stated that the referees are in thorough agreement on the matter and at a conference held between the Lancashire and Yorkshire societies at Leeds on November 19, it was decided to stand firm as a body on the matter. All the first division referees are affected and as in the case of players under certain conditions, it is altogether likely that an edict will soon come forth, in which their demands will be [illegible]. His store has been decorated for the holiday trade with Christmas bells and evergreens, and is sure to do a merry, hustling trade.

It would not be a bad idea if they communicated with Lieut. H .C. Harrison, who at Portsmouth is endeavouring to promote Rugby games to cater for the very strong Rugby interest in the garrison town. He has hopes even of getting up a match between the navy and the army, and though, of course, it could not be anything like a Queen's club match, because of the number of men at the front, both ashore and afloat, it would certainly be popular.

The Canadians should also be a draw at Portsmouth, and most likely a return fixture could be arranged, but events move quickly, and so do regiments. Verb sap!

Meeting of Curling Club

A more than ordinary meeting of the Peterborough Curling Club has been called for this evening to talk over the matter of local and open bonspiels.

Last winter the home club decided not to hold a bonspiel, as it was felt that it might interfere with the big 'spiel being held at Lindsay. For this winter there is strong feeling that an old-time bonspiel should be held, so it is hoped there will be a large attendance of the members to talk this matter over this evening.

The Farmers' Produce Market

Will be Open on Wednesday Next—Price of Horse Feed

The farmers' produce market will open on Wednesday, December the twenty-third. This will be the last market day before Christmas and will doubtless be one of the biggest of the year. There was a few loads of hay on the market to-day. It was selling at from twenty to twenty-one dollars a ton. With hay at twenty dollars a ton and oats at fifty cents a bushel, it costs as much to keep a horse as it would to keep an automobile. A few loads of hardwood were offered at six dollars and fifty cents a cord, and soft wood as four-fifty to five dollars.

HOCKEY PRACTICE TO-NIGHT

The Peterborough intermediate and junior O.H.A. teams will practice to-night at 7 o'clock at Brock Street rink. A full attendance of players is requested.

The rink will be open for skaters on Saturday night, when the band will be in attendance.

Song With A Hug And A Kiss In It Promises To Rival Tipperary In Popularity

IN NORTHERN FRANCE, Via London, Dec. 2, 1914.—However long this war lasts "Tipperary" will be popular with the British soldier at the Front, but the haunting refrain of their recruiting song, the chorus of which begins "We don't want to lose you, but we think you ought to go," and ends "We will bless you, hug you, kiss you, when you come back again," has made such rapid strides in popularity with the British on this side of the Channel that I think it now holds first place. It is a splendid marching tune, and has just that undertreath of deep heart sentiment that the British fighting man loves.

The flash of genius in the "kiss you" at the end of the chorus of the song makes the British soldier's heart glow. For many a man it is the image of the one woman, waiting, hoping, and suffering so far away, that is visualized.

"How many chaps at home can hear that sung to them and not go straight off to a recruiting station beats me entirely," said a sergeant of the Eighteenth Lancers to me. "I'm a professional soldier, and I still believe in a man giving his whole life to the Army and making a proper business of it. We're fighting for our existence, and any man that is a man ought to be proud to come out here along with us till the war is over.

"Let some jolly good bands play that song, 'We Don't Want to Lose You,' in public places all over Britain two or three times a day until every man that ought to be out here doing his bit has it ringing in his ears day and night. Then he'll have to join to get an easy conscience."

British soldiers on the march don't sing all the words of any song or even chorus as a rule. They have a way of humming the tune, often rather low, and then swelling out all together in the words of a particular phrase or sentiment.

To hear them murmuring the chorus of this recruiting song, with its heart-stirring sweetness, culminating in the lingering emphasis of an audible "kiss you" from every man in a battalion, is a rare though saddening privilege, as I heard it on a dark, drenched highway that looked like a swamp and felt like a veritable Slough of Despond.

British soldiers are never ordered to sing as the Germans are. They sing when they like and how they like, except when there are, of course, occasions when singing is out of the question, as it might betray their whereabouts to the enemy.

It is one of the hardships of the trenches that the men may not sing there. Even the ubiquitous mouth organ, which Tommy finds one of the most inspiriting as well as most portable instruments of melody, must there be hushed and still.

Of course, all the soldiers' marching songs are not sentimental. The Rifle Brigade's "I'm Ninety-five"—they were the Ninety-fifth Regiment in Wellington's wars—and the rollicking old ballad, "There was a girl in our town, who loved a squire of great renown," are instances of the jolly sort of song.

British soldiers are very human, and it comes out in their songs. I have seldom heard music that touched me so deeply as "Way Down Upon the Suwanee River," sung by a group of Tommies "in a whisper" at an outpost in Belgium, accompanied by a youngster on a mouth organ, also "in a whisper." "That's my girl's favourite," the instrumentalist imparted to me; "she can play the piano like a toff; I give you my word." And the other Tommies turned their heads away. They weren't laughing.

BOWLING

The Brighten-ups, a new team, have taken the place of the Harriers in the Y.M.C.A. Bowling League, and will play their first game to-morrow night at 7.30 o'clock.

SHIP BLOWN UP BY MINE

LONDON, December 17. — The Austrian training ship Beethoven was blown up by a mine to-day. Official announcement of the destruction of the vessel and the loss of her entire crew of cadets was made.

ATHENS, December 17.—The relations between Greece and Turkey are becoming more and more strained to-day. Advices have reached here that a non-commissioned naval officer, attached to the Greek legation, in Constantinople, has been sentenced to death. Greece demanded the surrender of the prisoner and Turkey has refused.

It Is Proposed To Play More Instead Of Less

Football in the Old Country—Needless Alarm Over Old Country Soccer Situation

Many crusaders who are opposed to games of all kinds, in time of peace and in time of war, "went to the front" in the agitation against football in the old country, a movement that seems to have spent its strength. Many well-meaning and usually well-informed also participated. Such a case was that of the Earl of Durham, whose position has roused much feeling, and stirred the Durham County association to action. A report of the meeting held by the association says that they resented his remarks, and thought his lordship must be unaware of what was being done in Durham county in regard to recruiting amongst footballers. It was reported that the following had joined the forces from 350 clubs, 2,368 players, 594 officials and 2,312 other members, representing an average of 8.78 per club. Of the 350 clubs in the county, 30 had not yet sent a return. Twenty-seven referees had enlisted. It was decided to acquaint Lord Durham of the figures, and also of the amount contributed to the National fund when a complete return had been made up.

Scotland Wants the Game.

In Scotland, too, the worm is turning, and the misrepresentations of he crusaders are rousing the supporters of football to putting the case plainly before the public. Sir James Leishman, the head of the Scottish Insurance Act commission, who was mainly responsible for enlisting the footballers, in an interview deprecated shutting down football and other means of recreation and amusement. They must not lapse into gloom of pessimism or nerves. He wholeheartedly defended football against the charge of want of patriotism. He was informed by army officers that a large proportion of the men coming forward were associated with football, and he would be astonished if it were found that anything less than 15,000 football players in Scotland had joined the forces. He condemned as utterly absurd the suggestion that any man remained at home because of professional football. An Edinburgh paper, by way of endorsement of Sir James' remarks, published some remarkable figures with regard to the enlistments from union clubs in the Lothians and Fife, one club in a mining village sending its president, four committeemen and twelve players, while a rival organization in the next parish sent twelve players, and another sent fourteen players.

League Enlargement and Extension.

That the game is in no serious straits is evidently the opinion of its principal promoters, as it is seriously proposed to play more, instead of less, football. This would be accomplished by enlarging the league sections to twenty-two clubs each, and extending the season, to begin August 15 and play until the middle of May. This would give at least four more Saturdays for fixtures, but the proposition is already meeting with strong opposition, though not yet officially launched.

Old country referees are up in arms against the reduction of fees, which they allege has been done without consulting the approved referees' societies. Not that they are unwilling to carry their share of the burden of the proposed reduction, but they contend that the resolution of the league clubs passed on October 20, is of so overbearing a nature that unless the clubs concerned are willing to receive a deputation on the matter, thereby taking them into consideration, trouble of a serious nature is likely to occur.

It may be stated that the referees are in thorough agreement on the matter and at a conference held between the Lancashire and Yorkshire societies at Leeds on November 19, it was decided to stand firm as a body on the matter. All the first division referees are affected and as in the case of players under certain conditions, it is altogether likely that an edict will soon come forth in which their demands will be plainly stated. Another meeting to be held in Manchester on the twentieth should prove to be interesting reading when details come to hand.

At a meeting to be held on the Thursday following this date between the captains of certain clubs who do not see eye to eye with the powers that be in the proposed reduction of wages will have been held to consider future action, which it is to be hoped will produce something tangible in the way of a satisfactory solution of the matter.

A splendid story of courage, in which William Bibby, the wing three-quarter back of the Rochdale Hornets club was the hero. Bibby, it is stated, ran back amidst a perfect hurricane of shot and shell, and successfully effected the rescue of a fallen comrade, whom he carried to a place of safety, and 'twas a deed that writers in describing the affair say was worthy of the Victoria Cross. Responding to the call of arms, Bibby, who is only 23 years of age, is a grand example which more hesitating players would do well to follow.

The international selection committee met at Manchester, November 23, to choose teams which will comprise a representative English team versus the north. The sides will be composed entirely of professionals, unless H. G. Bache of West Bromwich is at liberty to play. It seems more than likely, however, according to latest news that the game may not take plae.

The following information describing how Canadians are popularizing the game of Rugby at Salisbury Plain will no doubt please local enthusiasts of the rugger code. What a great attainment it would be if after the war is over it led up to the laws of the game of both countries being made to coincide in order that both countries might annually engage in international warfare. There'll be soccer internationals between the two countries before so many more years, and why not Rugby, too?

Canadians and the Rugby Game.

The Canadians have popularized the Rugby game on Salisbury Plain, and while they played at Newport last Saturday they are now fixing up matches with English Territorial regiments. In addition they are endeavouring to arrange games with some of the public schools, but what they would really like is a home match on the plain.

It would not be a bad idea if they communicated with Lieut. H .C. Harrison, who at Portsmouth is endeavouring to promote Rugby games to cater for the very strong Rugby interest in the garrison town. He has hopes even of getting up a match between the navy and the army, and though, of course, it could not be anything like a Queen's club match, because of the number of men at the front, both ashore and afloat, it would certainly be popular.

The Canadians should also be a draw at Portsmouth, and most likely a return fixture could be arranged, but events move quickly, and so do regiments. Verb sap!

Meeting of Curling Club

A more than ordinary meeting of the Peterborough Curling Club has been called for this evening to talk over the matter of local and open bonspiels.

Last winter the home club decided not to hold a bonspiel, as it was felt that it might interfere with the big 'spiel being held at Lindsay. For this winter there is strong feeling that an old-time bonspiel should be held, so it is hoped there will be a large attendance of the members to talk this matter over this evening.

WOMEN TO THE COLORS.

British Girlies, Signallers and Service Units Are Being Organized.

LONDON, Dec. 17. — A meeting was held yesterday at the Mansion House, in aid of the movement for the formation of a woman's volunteer reserve, the object of which, according to the Lord Mayor, who presided, is "to provide a trained and highly efficient body of women, whose services can be offered to the state if required."

"Such women," said the Lord Mayor, "could be trained for signalling, despatch riding, telegraphing, motoring and camp cooking, and thus could replace men who might be more usefully employed on the firing line."

The Rt. Hon. Henry Chaplin, M.P., explained that the corps was intended to be employed in the event of an invasion of this country "by hordes of German barbarians." It was not proposed to arm women for aggression, he added, "but to arm them for their own defence in the last extremity is very different and entirely justifiable."

THE MARKETS

CHICAGO, Dec. 16.—Uncertainty as to what effect the German naval raid might have on the demand for export shipments to Great Britain led to some selling today by nervous holders of wheat. In consequence, the market, altho steady at the close, was ⅜c to ⅝c under last night. Both corn and oats finished ⅛c to ¼c down. The outcome in provisions was irregular, varying from 5c decline to a rise of 7½c.

WINNIPEG GRAIN MARKET.

WINNIPEG, Dec. 16.—In the local grain market today, exporters bought extensively in May futures, and, despite of this, prices turned easier. Wheat futures closed unchanged to ⅛c lower, oats unchanged and flax ⅞c to 1c lower.

There was nothing doing in cash grains, some few scattered cars only being sold. Cash wheat closed unchanged.

Inspections Tuesday totaled 169 cars, as against 319 last year, and in sight were 130 cars.

MONTREAL GRAIN MARKET.

MONTREAL, Dec. 16.—Demand for Manitoba spring wheat abroad continues stronger and higher. Demand is also good for all grades for January shipment, and sales of 200,000 bushels were made today, 47s being paid for No. 3 northern from Glasgow, which is the highest price paid so far on this crop for that grade.

Owing to the more liberal shipments of oats from Ontario and Quebec than was expected a weaker feeling has developed in the market for such and prices have declined 1c per bushel for car lots, but there is no actual change in spot prices as yet. Demand for Canadian western oats is very weak.

Trade in corn and feed barley is quiet, with prices steady. Demand for flour shows no improvement and the market is quiet with a steady undertone. Millfeed is fairly active and firm. Butter and cheese quiet and unchanged. Eggs and dressed poultry in good demand.

There were a few loads of choice butchers' steers on the market, for which the demand was fairly good, and sales were made at $7.75 to $8, but the bulk of the trade was done in stock ranging from $6 to $7, and cows at from $5.50 to $6.50, while a few choice bulls brought $7 per cwt.

AUSTRIANS RESTLESS.

Defeat In Servia Results In Demonstrations in Big Cities.

ROME, Dec. 17.—According to reports which have reached the Austrian frontier whence they have been transmitted to Rome by telegraph, the situation in the Dual Monarchy is approaching what might be called a critical stage.

These reports are worthy of credence, and set forth that, following the news of the defeat inflicted on the Austrians by the Servians, the situation became grave and was rendered more acute by internal disorders, especially at Vienna, Budapest and Prague.

At Vienna, a large crowd gathered in the Ringstrasse and marched to the Foreign Office and the War Office, the people calling loudly in protest against the way the war is being conducted. At Prague there were demonstrations, which assumed a separatist character, in the sense that the Bohemians do not desire to see their sons killed for German or anti-Slav interests, and have not hesitated to express their views along this line.

At Budapest the demonstrations were more violent and almost assumed the character of a riot.

NOBLEMAN GETS AWAY.

Earl of Leven Reaches Safety After Daring Escape.

LONDON, Dec. 17.—The Earl of Levan and Melville has, according to the Central News, arrived in London, after having escaped from German territory.

The earl went to the front in the early stages of the war with his regiment, the Royal Scot Greys, in which he is a lieutenant, and, being wounded on Aug. 22, was left behind when his regiment retreated. He was taken by the Germans to a hospital, suffering from a bullet wound in the thigh.

On Wednesday last, disguised as a Belgian refugee, he traveled across Belgium in a northerly direction, broke through the German lines, and crossed the Dutch frontier without a passport. The earl is still very lame, but hopes soon to be in the fighting line again.

THE SALVATION OF NANCE O'SHAUGHNESSY

The game of life in cities is nerve-racking and strenuous for those most advantageously situated, while for the poverty-stricken, simply struggling for existence, it is fierce and frenzied — particularly perilous for youth.

This play is one of the most remarkable human documents ever drawn from the shadows of a great city. It is impressive in striking situations, inspired by truth, and interesting in picturesque life studies, big and masterful in its move for the betterment of the slaves of environment.

Selig's moving pictures have triumphed so signally because they show all sides of real life and every shade of society. The whole wide world is their study and their stage. Shown at Empire Theatre To-day, Friday and Saturday.

CLOSING MEETING OF N. MONAGHAN COUNCIL

The North Monaghan Council met in the County Council Room on Tuesday, December 15th, for an all-day session it being the last regular meeting of this year's Council. Reeve Howden and Councillors Dobbin, Robson, Forster and Young were present.

A deputation composed of T. E. Bradburn, R. E. Morrow and George W. Hatton came before the Council and asked that Mr. Winn and family, now residents of North Monaghan, be given free transportation to England. Mr. Winn is sick and unable to earn a living for himself or dependents in this country and has assured both the Council and the gentlemen who appeared on his behalf that his relatives in the Old Country would care for them.

Moved by Mr. Young, seconded by Mr. Forster, that this Council furnish transportation for Mr. Winn and his family to England, which will, according to Mr. Bradburn's figures, be in the neighbourhood of $150. This proposal is to be submitted to the Township Solicitor for approval. — Carried.

Mr. E. A. Peck, the Township Solicitor, came before the Council regarding this proposal and said it was quite within their rights to vote the transportation money, the same coming under the head of "Charity".

Short-term Debentures.

Reeve Howden reported that no permission or report had been received from Mr. Hanna, provincial secretary, regarding the raising of two thousand dollars on short term debentures in the way proposed at the public meeting held on November 26. The Council then went to general business.

The Council proceeded to deal with and pass accounts.

WEDDING BELLS

LOGAN—BELL.

The marriage took place yesterday, at noon, at the home of the bride's mother, Mrs. R. Bell, Golt, of Miss Helen I. Bell and Mr. Gordon Logan of this City. The ceremony was performed by Rev. J. E. Mothersell, in the presence of only the immediate relatives of the contracting parties. The bride and groom were unattended.

Mr. and Mrs. Logan returned to the City last evening and have taken up residence on Sophia Street, East City.

CLARK—FICK.

On the afternoon of December 17th, the home of Mr. and Mrs. G. S. McClelland, Boswell Avenue, was the scene of a quiet wedding, when Winnifred M. Fick, youngest daughter of the late P. F. Fick, of Port Rowan, was united in marriage to William G. Clark, son of Mr. and Mrs. Geo. H. Clark, of Orillia. The ceremony was performed under a large floral bell, the Rev. Mr. Marshall of Orillia, officiating.

The bride was given away by Mr. McClelland and was gowned in white silk, with overdress of accordeon-pleated ninon and wore a veil, arranged in Juliet cap effect, caught with lily of the valley. She carried a shower bouquet of white roses and was wearing the groom's gift, a pearl and cameo necklet. Miss E. Pearl Fick was her sister's only attendant and wore a gown of old rose silk crepe.

The wedding march was played by Mrs. McClelland, the bride's cousin, in whose home the happy event took place.

Mr. and Mrs. Clark left at 4.20 for a short trip, the bride travelling in a hunter's green, broadcloth suit, with small French hat to match. They expect to return to spend Christmas in their new home in Orillia.

Those from a distance present at the wedding were: Mr. and Mrs. G. H. Clark, Miss Helen Clark, Rev. Mr. Marshall and Mr. Carter, all of Orillia.

HARRISON—BAKER.

The decorations were artistically carried out in evergreen and Christmas bells, the bridal party standing under an arch composed of evergreen and holly berries.

The dainty little bride wore a charming gown of ivory silk crepe with shadow lace and pearl trimming, and carried a bridal bouquet of white roses with maidenhair fern.

The bridesmaid, Miss Ada Jenkins, of Peterborough, was dressed in shell-pink satin with pearl triming and pink roses.

Mr. Scott Bovair was groomsman. As the bride entered on the arm of her brother, W. H. Baker, of Peterborough, the wedding march was played by Miss Alice Harrison, of Toronto.

At the conclusion of the ceremony hearty congratulations were offered to the happy couple, and the guests viewed the large number of elegant and costly presents, which showed the high esteem in which the bride is held. The groom's gift to the bridesmaid was a pearl sunburst, and to the groomsman a tie-pin. After this all adjourned to the dining-room where a dainty repast was served, after which the Rev. Mr. Brydon made a short speech, which was happily responded to by the groom. The party left on the six o'clock train for Toronto en route for Peterborough and other places, being accompanied to the Schomberg Junction by a number of guests amid showers of confetti. The bride's going-away dress was of Copenhagen blue cloth with hat to match.

Mr. and Mrs. Harrison will reside in Aurora, where they will be at home after the New Year.

OBITUARY

MRS. GORDON KING.

It is with feelings of the most profound regret that it becomes our melancholy and painful duty to chronicle the death of Mrs. Gordon King, wife of Mr. Gordon King of George street.

The deceased lady, who was about twenty-seven years of age, died last evening, shortly after nine, at the Nicholls Hospital from a tumor and complications.

The deceased lady was an Englishwoman by birth, having been Miss Ada Derrick, of Brighton, England. She has left to mourn her loss, her sorrowing husband and one little daughter—Winnifred—aged 9 years, to say nothing of many friends.

Mrs. King was of a particularly lively and amiable disposition, and her loss will be much felt by those who had the pleasure of her acquaintance.

The body of the deceased lady has been removed to Bellegham's mortuary, where a funeral service will be held at 4.30 this afternoon, following which it will be removed to the G. T. Railway Station, and transported on the 5.20 p.m. train this evening, to Mariposa, thence tomorrow to the Little Britain Cemetery, for interment.

The heartfelt sympathy of our readers will, we feel sure, be extended to her young husband in the untimely loss of his young and agreeable wife.

MRS. J. H. PALLIN.

JERMYN, Dec. 17.—On Sunday, December 13th, 1914, death removed from our midst the much beloved wife of Mr. J. H. Pallin.

Deceased, whose maiden name was Caroline Robertson, was 57 years of age, and was born in Norwood, but who for the last 35 years had resided at Jermyn, where she was held in the highest esteem by all who came in touch with her.

Besides a sorrowing husband, she is survived by three daughters: Mrs. F. Kidd, of Indian River; Mrs. J. O. Fife, Peterborough, and Fannie at home, as well as four sons: James, of Oregon; William and Ralph, of Carltadt Alberta, and Percy, of Galt. One sister, Mrs. Robert Easson, of Otonabee, and one brother, Jesse, of Wenichee.

The pall-bearers were six trustees of Bethel Methodist Church, of which the deceased was an ardent member. The Rev. A. K. Edmison, B.A., of Keene, officiated at the services. The place of interment was at Fife's Cemetery, Keene.

In the calling away of Mrs. Pallin the community has lost a valuable resident, one who by her many years in our midst made for herself many friends, who gathered from all quarters to pay their last tribute, and extending to the sorrowing husband and family their deepest sympathy. In the home she was a mother whose wise counsel was always carefully and prayerfully administered.

Calm on the bosom of thy God,
Fair spirit, rest thee now;
E'en while with ours thy footsteps trod
His seal was on thy brow.

Dust, to its narrow house beneath,
Soul, to its place on high;
They that have seen thy look in death
No more may fear to die.

Canada Foundry Co. Brings Action Against Canada Cement Co. —C. G. E. Concerned

The Canada Foundry Co. has entered action at Osgoode Hall, Toronto, against the Canada Cement Co., Limited of Montreal, to recover $75,314.70, claimed due on a contract for structural steel supplied the defendants by the plaintiffs, and on a couple of contracts between the Canadian General Electric Co. and the defendants which have been assigned to the plaintiffs.

A BULLET THAT MIGHT HAVE HAD FATAL RESULTS

While fashioning a wedge out of a piece of freshly hewn tree on the back of his property, Mr. John Harper, of North Monaghan, chopped into a lead bullet deeply imbedded in the wood. It is not likely that this particular tree had been selected as a target. From its position the indications were that it was a stray shot, one of many that are fired aimlessly by Peterborough gunmen amusing themselves in the country. This bullet would have caused a fatality but for the wide element of chance. Rabbit hunters cannot be too careful with firearms, especially with rifles. Mr. Harper is of the opinion that restrictive measures in the form of by-laws prohibiting the use of arms near the city is the safest means of putting an end to this practice.

A WONDER WORKER.

"It heals like magic," is a favourite expression where Dr. Chase's Ointment is used. It works quickly, stops all itching at once, often heals in a single night. For eczema, salt rheum, barbers' itch, skin irritations or eruptions it is a most satisfactory treatment. Being antiseptic, it prevents blood poisoning.

GERMANS SAY BRITISH LOST TWO SUBMARINES

And Cruiser That Also Pursued the Four German Ships Was Damaged—British Admiralty, However, Has No Such Report.

Special Morning Cable:

BERLIN, via wireless to London, Dec. 18.—An official statement claims that two British destroyers were sunk during a running fight in the North Sea between British patrol ships and German cruisers, following the bombardment of Hartlepool, Scarborough and Whitby by the Germans.

In addition to the two destroyers which the Germans claim to have sunk, the statement declares another disappeared badly damaged. They declare that the batteries of Hartlepool were silenced, gas works destroyed and three fires could be seen in town.

ENEMY'S SHIPS WERE HIT.

The statement admits that the German cruisers were struck by shells from the British coast batteries, but says little damage was done.

ADMIRALTY MENTIONS ONLY KILLED.

There is no confirmation from the British Admiralty or British Press Bureau of the German report that two destroyers were sunk. The latest Admiralty statement merely admits of five men killed and fifteen wounded on cruisers and destroyers struck by German shells.

A WARNING ABOUT FIRES

Precautions Should Be Taken in Regard to Christmas Decorations

The following special bulletin from the Commission of Conservation in regard to Christmas fires should be ready by every one:

Christmas Fires.

In many Canadian homes every year Christmas festivities cause regrets and in numerous cases, loss of life among those taking part.

Illuminated effects, as Christmas tree decorations in private homes, are dangerous, and wherever either fire or lights are used, too much attention cannot be given to their safety. The Christmas tree is in itself sufficiently inflammable, but when to this is added decorations of cotton batting, light paper balls and other dangerous material, it is only by the exercise of great care that fires can be avoided. Where Christmas trees are erected in carpeted rooms, sheet tin or zinc should be placed under the tree, to catch the candle drippings. It should be one person's duty to watch the candles, that instant action may be taken if the tree takes fire.

In public halls, Sunday Schools, etc., where numbers of children are assembled, unusual precautions should be taken. Fire extinguishers and pails of water should be in convenient places. Santa Claus costumes should be dipped in a solution of four ounces of phosphate of ammonia to a quart of water. If clothing catches fire throw the person down, and roll him in a carpet, rug, blanket, coat, or anything handy, to smother the flames. The exits should be kept perfectly clear to avoid danger of panics.

In business houses electric wiring and gas lighting for special displays should be carefully inspected. Do not use paper or muslin shades close to the lamps, as they may take fire from the heat. Some one in authority should be given the responsibility of seeing that the fire hazard is not excessive, and that every precaution is taken to protect life and property. Insurance may replace the property, but no insurance can replace loss of life.

The number of British ships plying on November 28 was 9,928, or 98.1 of the whole. Their tonnage was 20,123,173 gross tons, or 97.1 of the whole.

MAY EAT MEAT ON FRIDAY NEXT WEEK

Roman Catholic Bishops Expected to Make Dispensation for Christmas Holiday.

NEW YORK, Dec. 18 — Roman Catholics will be permitted to eat meat on Christmas Day, which comes this year on Friday. Bishops in their respective dioceses may make such a pronouncement. "I have no doubt that every Bishop will do so," said Archbishop Giovanni Bansano.

The delegate said that the Roman Catholic Church has a ruling so that when a Church festival falls on Friday a bishop has a right to give a general dispensation in his diocese.

The usual custom is that when the ban of fasting is lifted from a Friday the preceding day is a fast day. This will change the meat and fish markets of the world, fish being eaten a day earlier and meat a day later, in other words being prevented for all, rather than only some Catholics.

General Pau Gave His Cap To Corporal

THE HAGUE, Dec. 18.—Here is a little incident of the daily life of General Pau, a hero of the Franco-Prussian War, in which he lost an arm:

A dozen French infantrymen, mud begrimed, are resting in a drizzling rain on the wayside under the dripping trees. The corporal sits and tries in vain to light his pipe, at intervals singing lustily.

Suddenly the corporal stands erect; the pipe is hidden behind his back and he makes a hasty salute. Through the fog and rain one of the three great leaders of the French army has appeared.

"Why do you not wear your cap?" asked General Pau.

"I have lost my cap, General."

"Where did you lose it?"

"When we were attacked in the woods this morning. A branch knocked it off and I was too much in a hurry to go back and get it. It is gone."

"Take my cap."

The corporal fears the end of things—he will be punished for losing his cap. "Take it, I tell you, and wear it," says the General.

And the humble corporal does as he is told and becomes resplendent like the sun in the cap embazoned with the glorious golden oak leaves. The General draws rein and canters away.

Since that day the corporal marches along the county roads to the frontier, proud in the cap of General Pau.

"The General himself told me to wear it," he says to those who protest. "I obey the General's orders and the cap stays on my head."

The General knows his soldiers, and the world may understand why this tired bedraggled and weary army goes on marching and fighting and dying for its commanders.

NO BELGIAN PETER'S PENCE'.

Pope Announces that He Will Accept None this Year.

ROME, Dec. 18—The Pope, in a letter to Cardinal Mercier, declares that henceforth he will not accept the money the Belgian Roman Catholics send him every year as Peter's Pence.

"These sums must be devoted to a mitigation of the suffering of the Belgian population," says the Pontiff, who closes with the assurance that he prays for good government for Belgium, for the Belgian nation and for unity in its councils.

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON QUESTIONS

Dec. 20, 1914.

Christmas Lesson — The Reign of Peace. Isa. xi:1-10.

Golden Text—The wolf shall dwell with the lamb, and the leopard shall lie down with the kid; and the calf and the young lion and the fatling together; and a little child shall lead them. Isa. xi:6.

1. Verse 1—Who was Jesse, and for what is he chiefly remembered?

2. What reason, if any, is there to think, that the son of an old, good man, is likely to be a better man than the son of his earlier years?

3. Which is likely to be the better oak tree, one that grows from the roots or stump, or a fallen tree, or one produced direct from an acorn?

4. What does Isaiah literally mean by this simile of the "rod," and "stem of Jesse," and the "branch from his roots"?

5. Verse 2—What three pairs of extraordinary qualities does Isaiah foretell that the Messiah should be possessed of?

6. What are the moral and spiritual qualities of Jesus the Messiah, which God expects us to have, and those, if any, which we may never hope to possess?

7. What is the evidence that Jesus did have the qualities which the prophet here foretells?

8. Verse 3—What was the chief, or paramount, or root quality, in Jesus?

9. How did Jesus decide questions of merit or demerit?

10. Verse 4—What difference, if any, is there in the way Christ judges the poor and the rich?

11. What was one distinguishing quality of the words of Jesus when he rebuked the very wicked of the earth?

12. Verse 5—What is the essence, or root principle, of all God's laws?

13. Verses 6-8—From such a good and Almighty ruler as Christ, what sort of a world may we ultimately expect this to become?

14. If there had been no sin on the earth, would there have been any ravenous, cruel, or savage animals? Why?

15. Many animals live on other animals, and most human beings eat the flesh of dead animals, or birds, or fish, would you say, or not, and why, that God approves of it all?

16. When the mind of Christ has become the mind of all the people what effect will that have, if any, upon wild beasts?

17. When this prophecy is fulfilled and all the people are good, and wild beasts lose their ferocity and cease to kill, or hurt, will man still kill animals for his food?

18. Verse 9—What are the present day indications that war will finally be a thing of the past?

19. Verse 10—"A root of Jesse" means Jesus, and his "ensign" is temporal and spiritual salvation; what then can we do more than we are doing to bring the people to him, and thus bring about the millennium?

RUSSIANS HATE GERMANY

Some Reasons For It, Too—Both Religious and Commercial

The Russian hostility to Germany is akin to the Russian dislike of the Jew. The Russian business man finds himself hopelessly outclassed by the town-bred German, with his keen attention to efficiency, to saving, to all the detail of his business. So there are thousands of Russian merchants who have seen the business of their towns go into the hands of their German rivals.

As far as the peasants are concerned, the Germans are atheists, and for that reason the natural enemies of the most religious people in the world. In Russia it is said and believed that the English Church is very much like the Greek Orthodox Church, and the fact that this is not so does not prevent the Russians from believing it, and from regarding the British as natural allies. German efficiency, moreover, has had to carry a handicap in German lack of tact, as is well shown in the German Embassy building in Petrograd. This enormous and pretentious building, larger even than the Russian State offices, and in striking contrast to the old-fashioned offices of the British Embassy, is surmounted by a monstrous group in bronze, two gigantic horses led up from the west by two naked giants. The Russians have seen in it an allegory of Germany proudly advancing in Russia, and have deeply resented it. One of the first acts of the war was that of the Russian mob that tore down this flaunting challenge.

TURN HAIR DARK WITH SAGE TEA

If Mixed With Sulphur It Darkens So Naturally Nobody Can Tell

The old-time mixture of Sage Tea and Sulphur for darkening gray, streaked and faded hair is grandmother's treatment, and folks are again using it to keep their hair a good, even colour, which is quite sensible, as we are living in an age when a youthful appearance is of the greatest advantage.

Nowadays, though, we don't have the troublesome task of gathering the sage and the mussy mixing at home. All drug stores sell the ready-to-use product called "Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound", for about 50 cents a bottle. It is very popular because nobody can discover it has been applied. Simply moisten your comb or a soft brush with it and draw this through your hair, taking one small strand at a time; by morning the gray hair disappears, but what delights the ladies with Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur is that, besides beautifully darkening the hair after a few applications, it also produces that soft lustre and appearance of abundance which is so attractive; besides, prevents dandruff, itching scalp and falling hair.

RUSSIAN MILITARY BANDS

One feature of the Russian army which from time to time has been brought to the attention of the world is the unusual size and number of bands in the military forces of the Czar. The Russian soldier has more martial music than any other soldier in the world.

There is no regiment in the Russian service without its own band, and at posts where not a regiment, but only a battalion, is quartered, that battalion has its band. And these Russian military bands are big and impressive musical organizations. Within each is a brass band and an orchestra of string and wood instruments, with, of course, the necessary touch of brass and sheepskin. The result is that, while these military bands play primarily military music, they also adapt themselves to the performance of such music as we hear at a symphony concert.

The average Russian army band, or orchestra, has from forty o fifty musicians, and the orchestras of certain guard regiments contain sixty. There are more than 1,000 Russian regiments, and there are in the army about 50,000 bandsmen. Then in the naval and military schools and in the navy there are bands, and if to these are added the twenty to forty musical pupils of a regimental orchestral school and the musical companies of battleships and various cadet schools, the number of military musicians in the armed service of Russia mounts to the surprising total of, approximately, 100,000 men.

A hale and hearty Londoner offered to start a fund towards raising a corps of veterans.

HELIGOLAND A BASE OF GERMAN ATTACK

Millions Spent on Island to Make It Impregnable—Acquired For Offensive Use

When in 1890 Lord Salisbury exchanged with Germany that solid 130 acres of rock shown as Heligoland for some very mythical benefits in Zanzibar, he little imagined the part it was destined to play in Germany's dream of naval power. Yet at the time it was thought that British diplomacy had scored, because Bismarck was frankly furious at the exchange. Yet the possession of that tiny island was vital to the dream already exercising the Kaiser's mind.

When the present Emperor came to the throne in 1888 the German navy consisted of some twelve armored vessels of over 4,000 tons, a small number of other cruisers, and a torpedo flotilla; for ten years preceding his accession Germany had laid down no battleships. But the Kaiser was a believer in sea power, and determined to build up a great fleet, and one of the very first acts of his reign was to remove the navy from military control and to place it under an admiral.

Obviously, however, if the navy were to be confined to the Baltic it could never attain to any offensive strength, because the three exits—the Great and Little Belts and the Sound—could be just as effectively closed to it as the Dardanelles were closed to the Russian Black Sea fleet.

In Commanding Position

In 1843 Prussia had acquired from Oldenburg what is now the port of Wilhelmshaven, and in 1865 she obtained Kiel. The old Emperor William had taken in hand a North Sea-Baltic canal, but with none of those vast dreams of world-power that inspired his successor. The possibilities of the German North Sea were great, but twenty-eight miles away, covering the mouths of the Elbe, the Weser, and also the Jahde, stood Heligoland, and that was in the possession of Great Britain.

Anciently a religious centre of the Frisian race, it came into Britain's possession in 1807, and was, at the time the Kaiser cast longing eyes upon it, quite undefended either from the erosion of the sea, which was considerable, or the attack of an enemy. Britain maintained a coastguard station there, which was occupied by a chief officer and some half-dozen men who did police and other duties as necessity arose. But so long as it remained a British possession it could be turned into a standing menace to German shipping. It has a total area of about 130 acres, and consists of a steep, rocky plateau, roughly 180 feet above sea level, with a strip of sand at its southeast foot. In shape it may be described as an isosceles triangle, and from its north-westernmost point, where Hengst stands out like a lonely sentinel 165 feet tall, down both sides of the triangle to its south-east base it juts straight out from the sea grim and forbidding. Its possibility of fortification was great.

Made It a Fortress

From the moment it came into her possession Germany commenced to fortify it and protect it against the erosion of the sea, and at the same time to develop her North Sea coast. The North Sea-Baltic Canal had already been taken vigorously in hand, though the German people could hardly be said to have risen to the ambitions of their Kaiser. But in 1898 he succeeded in getting from the Reichstag the first of the Navy Acts, and as a result the outlay on the German navy for the year 1899 rose to $33,500,000; the outlay during the first year of his reign was only $12,000,000!

The Boer War and the incident of the Bundesrath were eagerly seized, and as a result the Navy Act of 1900 was passed. This frankly and brutally stated in its Explanatory Note what German intentions and ambitions were: "Under the existing circumstances, in order to protect Germany's sea trade and colonies there is only one means, namely, Germany must have a fleet of such strength that even for the mightiest naval power a war with her would involve such risks as to jeopardize its own supremacy." There was no possibility of mistaking that challenge.

Not All Defensive

Then commenced that feverish activity that was to convert the whole of the German North Sea coast into a stepping-off place for a German invasion of England. So Heligoland sprang into a prominence it could never have attained but for these naval ambitions. Two submarine cables connect it, one with Cuxhaven, the other with Wilhelmshaven. A powerful wireless station was erected, while forts sprang into existence from one end to the other.

In 1908 it was decided to devote a further sum of $[illegible] on the "betterment" of the island, $7,500,000 for the construction of a new harbor for torpedo craft, $7,500,000 for bringing the fortifications up to date, and $175,000 for a new artillery depot and barracks. It was from this torpedo harbor that Germany intended or hoped to launch her torpedo attack against Britain, while the fortifications of the island were to be so formidable as to make it impossible for any fleet to attack in return. Since 1908 much money has been lavished on Heligoland, and though the exact nature of the fortifications has been kept a profound secret, it is known that they mount great number of the latest pattern 14-inch guns in very heavily armored cupolas, together with numerous batteries of light outer torpedo guns.

Lord Curzon said the Kaiser's name would go down to history as "William the Bloodstained" and "William the Assassin."

WIRE ENTANGLEMENTS

Impassable Barrier For Either Charging Cavalry or Infantry

The demands of modern warfare are novel and varied, and at times the exigencies of the situation impose a supreme tax upon ingenuity. It was the South African war which brought home to military minds for the first time the enormous importance of barbed wire entanglements. The Boers protected their defences in an elaborate manner with wires running horizontally and diagonally, and, in order to complete their work, held tightly in place by being strained upon posts. When infantry or cavalry attempted to rush a position so protected, the men and horses caught in the wicked network, floundered and fell. In the case of cavalry the barbs lacerated and stung the maddened animals to a state bordering on frenzy. They kicked so frantically that the whole mass of mounted men were flung into confusion, rendering it an easy matter for the defenders to pick off their assailants by rifle fire. The advance of infantry was possible only after the wires had been cut away, for which it was necessary to equip the men with "nippers." Even then, owing to the delay which arose in clearing away the obstruction, considerable havoc was wrought in the ranks of the assailants.

The German hosts were first brought into contact with the barbed wire method of defence in their attack of Liege. The dense masses of advancing infantry became trapped in this fearful net, and machine guns, commanding the entangled position, mowed down the attackers like hay. It is reported that the formidable character of the Liege entanglements was enhanced by converting them into a huge electrocuting net.

Another useful purpose which wire has fulfilled is in connection with the protection of entrenched infantry from shell fire. The German infantry suffered especially in this connection owing to the deadliness of the French artillery. This has been due to the accuracy of the deadly timing of the fuse and the bursting efficiency of the explosive charge. Several ingenious artifices were contrived to mitigate the effect of flying fragments of bursting shells. Among these was the distribution of coils of wire in the vicinity of the trenches. These coils appear to act somewhat as a buffer, the spraying effect of the shrapnel being appreciably deadened.

Newfoundlanders Urged to Enlist

"I would urge every Newfoundlander here to join some regiment and get in shape for service, either at home or abroad." Applause greeted this statement, made by Mr. E. W. Mudge at the annual meeting of the Newfoundland Society of Montreal.

The great majority of people are familiar with the extraordinary curative powers of Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills. But for the benefit of those who are not, we continue to publish from day to day reports from persons who have been actually cured.

MR. MOSHER.

The case described in this letter was an extreme one, and the writer was in a very low condition when he began the use of these pills. The cure was so marked that Mr. Mosher's pastor did not hesitate to vouch for his statement.

By their unique combined action on the liver, kidneys and bowels, Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills cure complicated cases which defy the action of ordinary kidney medicines.

Mr. W. H. Mosher, Brockville, Ont., writes:—"I used Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills, and firmly believe there is no medicine to equal them. I was troubled for years with kidney disease, and this treatment has cured me. When I began the use of these pills I could only walk from my bed to a chair. Now I can go to the field and work like any other man. Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills are an excellent medicine."

Private of Irish Guard Says the Prussian Guard is Kaiser's Finest

"A finer body of men it would be hard to see. They are very plucky, and appear to be a better class altogether, intellectually and physically, than the men of any other German corps."

This was the tribute of a soldier of the Irish Guards to the fighting qualities of the Prussian Guard, Germany's crack infantry troops. The soldier was Private John J. Smith, of the First Battalion of the Irish Guards, who is wounded and in Deaconess Hospital, Edinburgh.

In an interview published a few days ago in the Edinburgh "Scotsman," Private Smith disclosed two very important facts. The first is that the British Guards regiments are operating together, probably as one brigade. Secondly, it was deemed advisable to meet the furious onslaughts of the Prussian Guard at Ypres upon the fixed bayonets of Britain's crack troop. Incidentally, Private Smith speaks of the Household Cavalry at the Front operating as infantry.

Private Smith participated in the desperate fighting at Mons, says the "Scotsman," and the subsequent retreat, recovery, and fierce battles of the Marne. He was at the "siege" of the Aisne, and latterly he was in the fighting at Ypres, where he received his wound. Ypres, according to Private Smith and other soldiers who took part in the operations in that region, was the tightest corner of them all. For fifteen days he was in the trenches. He described particularly a fierce German attack, the issue which for some time hung in the balance, being decided, as frequently happens, by "cold steel."

"On November 8," said Private Smith, "the Germans started shelling our trenches about eight o'clock in the morning. They kept hard at it for four hours, and then the infantry came forward to attack in great masses. It was terrific. The French were in the trenches next to our regiment, and the Germans broke through their lines at several points. This made it necessary for us to retire to a new position, and in doing so we lost a lot of men.

At Them With Bayonet.

"We formed up, however, and went at them with the bayonet. But it was no use; there were too many of them. We fell back again, and just then the Second Life Guards (Household Cavalry) came on the scene. That decided it. They fixed bayonets and made a tremendous charge, driving back the Germans and taking 200 prisoners. Our losses were heavy, but for every one we lost, it is certain the Germans lost twenty."

On two occasions Private Smith encountered the Prussian Guard. "There is not the slightest doubt," he said, "that the Prussian Guardsman is a superior soldier to any of any other corps in the German army. They are picked men. Most, if not all, are nearly six feet tall and strongly built. When they come to attack they shout loudly and come forward in open order, not in masses as is generally the case."

It probably was this fact that brought forth the remark that the Prussian Guardsmen are more intelligent than the others, as in open order fighting military men insist the men must operate largely on their own initiative.

Speaking of the fighting around Soupler, Private Smith told how he and a friend had a narrow escape from death. "We were fighting at the edge of a wood," he said, "the Germans being a short distance in front. Presently some Germans showed themselves carrying a white flag. But we had been so often 'had' with that dodge that the officers told us to keep on firing which we did. Soon afterward we got the order to advance and crossing the field we came upon a crowd of Germans. A force of us fixed bayonets and charged, and several of the Germans held up their hands. We disarmed them and sent them into the wood.

Ran German Through.

"We then charged across a small hollow and climbed a slope, on the other side of which we encountered more Germans. My chum and I were somewhat detached and three of the Germans came straight at us. One was an officer with a revolver and the other two had fixed their bayonets. One made a lunge at me, but I caught and diverted his bayonet with my rifle and put him out with a knock on the head.

"When I was so engaged, the second German came at me with his bayonet, but before he got close my chum ran him through. The officer fired his revolver at us, but missed. One of the bullets however, hit a Guardsman of the Grenadiers, who were coming up as a reinforcement. We captured the officer."

Concerning the great volume of heavy gun fire directed at the trenches held by the Guards' regiments, a private in the Scots Guards remarked: "Ane diana mind an ord'nary respectable shell, but it's a gey different maitter when ye get Krupp's ironworks chucked at ye." Another man of the same regiment said of the Indian troops:

"There is no keeping them in the trenches; they always want to get on the move. Their night work is remarkable. On one occasion the Gurkhas made a night attack, and the troops in the next trench were quite unaware that the Indians had been out. When they go in for close fighting they leave their rifles and bayonets behind, and rely on their knives for getting there. One of our men wanted a Gurkha knife, and offered to buy one from one of the Indians. The Gurkha was quite willing to sell his rifle, his bayonet, or his ammunition, but with his knife he would not part."

PEOPLE OFTEN SAY

"How Are We To Know When The Kidneys Are Out Of Order?"

EASIEST THING IN THE WORLD!

The location of the kidneys, close to the small of the back, renders the detection of kidney trouble a simple matter. The note of warning comes from the back. The kidneys become overtaxed and fail to do their work at nature's call.

Backache is the signal sent out by the kidneys the minute they become overtaxed. Those who heed the warning when it first comes, usually have but little trouble.

The danger lies in delay. Doan's Kidney Pills stimulate the action of the kidneys, and enable them to perform their duty perfectly.

Mrs. Greig Murphy, Lower Ship Harbor East, N.S., writes: "I have used Doan's Kidney Pills in my family with great success, and don't think there is a better pill for the kidneys. I was very miserable with my back, and could hardly get about. I got a box, and tried them, and found that they were really good, so I took in all about six boxes, and soon found my back cured, and my kidneys as well as ever."

Doan's Kidney Pills are 50c per box, 3 boxes for $1.25; for sale at all dealers or mailed direct on receipt of price by The T. Milburn Co., Limited, Toronto, Ont.

When ordering direct specify "Doan's."

ONE LIFE FOR MANY

Sailor on Mine Sweeper Sacrificed Himself to Save His Shipmates

During a gale that swept the North Sea, one of the trawlers engaged in mine-sweeping was seen to be in difficulties. One of the seamen, James Paton, was astride the gaff at the moment when a great wave caught the vessel, sweeping everything off the deck and carrying away the mainmast.

After this there was only one chance for those on board, and that was, of course, to cut everything clear. But James Paton was clinging, entangled, to the broken spar, and his mates saw that if they cut the tangle away poor Paton must go with it.

They hesitated. But not so James Paton. Seeing that the sacrifice of one might save many, he gave the signal himself, saying: "Chop away, mates!" and "Good-bye, lads!" And thus perished another humble hero on the roll of British fame.

Correct Positions For Rifle Shooting

The infantry soldier does most of his fighting in a prone position; the recruit who gets down for the first time with a real live round in his rifle must, if he is to make a good score, remember the following points:

(1) Body oblique to the line of fire.
(2) Legs separated.
(3) Heels on the ground.
(4) Good rest for the head—either on the
(5) Firm grip of the right hand.
(6) Head straight—eye will then [illegible] the sights.
(7) Sights properly upright.
(8) Body motionless—and unstrained.
(9) Breath [illegible].
(10) Trigger to be held as far as possible with the first joint, and the forefinger not coiled—by a squeezing motion as within the whole of the right hand and fore-arm ought to [illegible].

Enormous quantity of mails to South Africa last year were valued at $300,000, and that of rubber, about $120,000, according to a report of the Department of Trade and Commerce. Canada should make greater use of both these lines in the future.

WOMEN WARRIORS

Even in Recent Times They Have Fought Well as Men

The present war has already produced the inevitable crop of stories, more or less true, of patriotic damsels who, fired with military enthusiasm, have disguised themselves as men, shouldered a rifle, and fought in the trenches. One of these heroines, who did a very gallant deed in rescuing a soldier, was discovered among the Russian forces, and, though probably she will not be allowed to take any further part in the campaign, she will go down in Russian history as a minor star—a follower of Joan of Arc and some of the Spanish heroines of the Peninsular War.

There has been scarcely a war in history, however, in which members of the fair sex have not played a part in the fighting line. During the Balkan War women of all classes in Servia, Montenegro, and Bulgaria, who can handle a rifle as well as they can a teaspoon, fought for their respective countries. A notable case was that of Miss Sophie Yevanovitch, a young Servian girl, who obtained permission from King Peter to fight like an ordinary soldier, and, dressed in military uniform, accounted for several Turks.

A Belgrade schoolgirl, Milena Manditch, was also found among the volunteer forces raised by the Servian Committee for National Defence. She was only seventeen years of age, and went from the high school at Belgrade to take her place in the fighting line, wearing an ordinary soldier's uniform. Another extraordinary case of a woman in a recent war hiding her sex and fighting as a soldier was that of Xenia Kritskaya, a Russian girl, on whom the Czar conferred high military honors for the part which she took in the Russo-Japanese War. No one suspected her of being a woman, and this brave "soldier" gained renown by saving three wounded comrades, dressing their wounds, and then re-entering the firing line, until she herself was wounded.

Another Russian woman, Harietona Kayotkiewitch, donned man's attire, and fought in many battles during the Russo-Japanese War, in order to be near her husband. One day, while riding to the trenches with despatches, a large shell struck and destroyed certain earthworks. Harietona was seen to stagger as the shell exploded, and she was picked up dead. It was only after her death that her sex was discovered.

The British army has had its women soldiers, and two of them are buried in the cemetery of Chelsea Hospital. One of these dames—Hannah Snell, a truculent-looking person, whose portrait is preserved in the Great Hall of the Hospital, served in the siege of Pondicherry, and was badly wounded, her sex being discovered when she was removed to hospital.

Christian Davis was the other female soldier buried in this cemetery. She is described as a "tall, jolly woman." When she acknowledged her sex she resumed some of its privileges, for she married, in succession, three husbands, the third being a Chelsea pensioner.

The most famous Englishwoman "soldier," however, was "Dr. James Barry," who joined the Medical Corps in 1813, and served at Waterloo and in the Crimea. In 1859, after many promotions, she became Inspector-General, and it was not until many years later that the fact that she was a woman was discovered.

Practical Sympathy

Mr. Justice Riddell received from a celebrated member of the faculty of a New England college a liberal cheque for the Patriotic Fund. The learned Doctor stated that of the twenty-two professors in his college but two are not heartily and warmly in sympathy with Britain in the war.

River Full of Bodies

So many hundreds of German dead jammed the Nieman River that German sappers were ordered to dam the stream to keep the bodies from floating into the towns below, thus telling inhabitants of the German defeat.

NOTHING BETTER FOR WEAK WOMEN

"I Never Spent Any Money That Did Me So Much Good as That I Spent for Vinol."

Bellefontaine, Ohio.—"I wish every tired, weak, nervous woman could have Vinol for I never spent any money in my life that did me so much good as that I spent for Vinol. My nerves were in a very bad condition, making me very weak, tired, and worn out and often caused headaches. I had tried cod liver oil, doctor's medicines, and other preparations without benefit.

"One day a friend asked me to try Vinol. I did and soon my appetite increased, I slept better and now I am strong, vigorous and well and can do my housework with pleasure."—Mrs. J. F. Lamborn, Bellefontaine, Ohio.

Nervous, weak, tired, worn-out women should take Mrs. Lamborn's advice and try Vinol for there are literally thousands of men and women who were formerly run-down, weak and nervous, who owe their good health to Vinol.

It is the medicinal, tissue building elements of the cod's livers, aided by the blood making, strengthening influence of iron found contained in Vinol, which makes it so efficient in all such cases.

LIFE IN REAR OF BELGIAN ARMY RECALLS SEVENTEENTH CENTURY

REAR OF THE BELGIAN ARMY, Via London, December 1.—Though our little town near far back of the Belgian army has been bombarded more than once, it has never actually lacked food, never been pillaged, never seen its streets in flames. Life is not exactly gay, but it is endurable. In effect we are back here, a couple of centuries. There are no telegraphs or telephones, except for the use of the army. There is no certainty that a letter, even when sent by sanction of the military authorities, will be despatched. It may be submitted for approval, endorsed for despatch, stamped, consigned to the military post office. Afterward its fate is uncertain. Perhaps it will reach its destination after a week or two; perhaps not.

No newspaper is published here, though papers from other towns filter in, generally by way of hospitals. One of our stock recreations is to forage for food supplies. Occasionally in some out of the way shop the search of diligence is rewarded by the discovery of something eatable, a tin of preserved fruit, a forgotten remnant of some sweetfeat, a little stock of sugar, or, most precious of all, a bottle of mineral water. The town water is more than suspect, and the lack of pure drinking water is probably the greatest hardship. There is a resident of the town who is sometimes seen eating an egg. It gives him almost celebrity. The source of supply is kept a grand secret. One suspects that he has a private hen concealed in his room.

Occasionally some one on official business goes to London, a city where things can be bought—though in dim light—of which we retain memories. He comes back with strange tales of the perils of the path, the posts which must be passed, with repeated minute examination of papers, the ordeals of search which must be endured, the passage across the mined Channel, the traverse of Kent by trains whose lights are shrouded.

But never does he return with enough supplies. There are at least thirty persons with some claim on his courtesy who expect to find in his pockets boots and shirts and socks and sweaters and greatcoats and sardines and plum puddings and cigarettes and jam and biscuits and writing paper and books and papers and mineral waters and cakes. For three days after his return he is unhappy with reproachful glances. Then it is forgotten that he was in London.

There is another city called Paris, separated from us by a hundred posts demanding papers and pink laisser-passers and blue laisser-passers and photographs and the like. But it is not generally suspected that things can be bought in Paris, though surely some shops survive there. Coming back from aPris—if anyone ever does come back—the voyager is not expected to bring supplies. Of the rest of the world we have no actual cognizance. That railways still run, that newspapers are still published, affairs of manufactire and commerce still move elsewhere, we have no certainties; merely suspicions founded on indirect evidence. We have plunged back into the outlook of the seventeenth century, without posts, without newspapers, without any certainty of communication.

One joy and privilege of the seventeenth century has come back—the social life of the town square. By keeping in touch with the town square one can feel the pulse of the world beating. It is a newspaper and a salon and a popular cafe all in one. Soldiers passing to and fro tell by their confidence, as they march towards the enemy, that things are going well, or by their stern set faces as they go back from the front that things are not so well. Gossips go around telling the wonderful stories of the war, always interesting if rarely true. The officials who know facts and are willing to impart them to discreet ears pass to and fro. There is even a little pink thread of gossip of a semi-scandalous kind, and apparitions occasionally of dames of fashion. These apparitions are followed sometimes by proclamations or orders of the day unfavourable to such apparitions in the future. Frivolity is not encouraged.

Occasionally the town square is filled with pomp and music when there is a grand review of troops by some European ruler or great general.

There are anxieties, dangers, doubts. Never a day without its funeral of some brave man. Sometimes there comes the fear that the term has not been set to the invaders' march and that fresh sacrifices have yet to be made. Withal, life here is not unhappy. We have at least three fine buildings to look upon. The simple necessities of life are provided and one learns what can be done without.

HAD INDIGESTION

FOR OVER 10 YEARS.

ALMOST DESPAIRED OF EVER GETTING WELL.

Indigestion is one of the worst forms of stomach trouble. The stomach becomes upset and you have a raw, debilitating feeling in it. After a meal you feel that you must get rid of that nasty, bilious, burning sensation. It is not necessary for you to be troubled with indigestion if you will only try that old and well-known remedy, Burdock Blood Bitters, which is a combination of nature's best known roots, herbs and barks for the cure of all stomach and blood troubles.

Mrs. Mary MacKay, Hunter's Mountain, N.S., writes: "I was troubled with indigestion for more than ten years. I tried several doctors' medicines claiming the power to cure, but all without success. Having heard of the many cures effected by Burdock Blood Bitters, I decided to give it a trial. After taking two bottles I was completely cured. My appetite which was very poor is now good, and I can eat most everything without any disagreeable feelings.

Swiss Women Shoeblacks.

In England the shoeblack's calling has always been a monopoly of the men, but in at least one Swiss town it is invaded by women. On emerging from the railway station at Zurich one sees three middle-aged women kneeling at their wooden blocks, and eager to shine the travelers' boots. When no customers are forthcoming the shoeblackesses of Zurich spend their time knitting stockings, an industry closely allied to the main vocation of their lives. — London Globe.

When Youth Wanes.

Old age has many definitions, and middle age more. But you may take it that you are not really an old man so long as you take an interest in your personal appearance. There is not a nurse who does not know the sign of convalescence—when the patient wants to be shaved and put on a good appearance in this world. And so long as the man of sixty can take an interest in the latest tie—and tie it—he is preserving his youth.—London Chronicle.

Nothing Left Behind.

"Are you afraid to go away and leave your windows unlocked?"

"Not at all. What is there to be afraid of?"

"I should think you'd be afraid that thieves would get in and steal your valuables."

"Oh, no. We don't own more jewelry than my wife can wear."

A Christmas Wish

I. H. Nordeck

"Oh, mamma!" exclaimed Alice, on coming home from school one day about a week before Christmas, "just think of it, poor little Jenny Brown fell from the steps this morning and broke a leg."

"That is indeed unfortunate," replied her mother, "and Christmas so near, too, and her father out of work, and no money coming in. I wonder if we couldn't help her in some way?"

"How can we?" said Alice, "when we are poor, too."

"We will think about it," returned Mrs. Jones. "You know, 'where there's a will there's a way,'"

Alice said nothing more at the time, but her mother noticed that she was unusually quiet the rest of the day, and doing some hard thinking.

Next day she came to her mother, holding in her arms her greatest treasure—her beloved and only remaining doll, named "Susie."

"Mamma," she said, "do you suppose I could fix up Susie so she'd look nice enough to give to Jenny for Christmas?"

"Does my little girl want to give Susie away?" asked her mother in surprise.

Alice's blue eyes shone suspiciously, she gulped hard once or twice, and then merely nodded her head, because somehow or other her voice failed her.

Her mother's hand strayed fondly over the little girl's head curls. "I see," she said. "You don't care to play with dolls any more, and—"

"Oh, yes I do." Alice found her voice again, as she brushed a tear from her cheek. "Only—you know Jenny has only a tiny little doll with one arm broken and one eye out, and—"

"Susie would be such a comfort to her, now the poor girl is sick in bed," finished her mother.

"Yes, she gets so lonely," whispered Alice, "and they are not going to have any Christmas presents, and—"

"But you'll miss Susie, won't you? And you know we can't afford to buy you a new doll, for you need a warm dress and coat, and some stout shoes, and—well," she ended cheerily, "you are very nearly 12 years old now, so I guess you wouldn't want to play with dolls much longer, anyway."

"I wish I had a really truly doll," said Alice, shyly.

"A really truly doll?" echoed her mother, in a puzzled voice.

"Yes; a baby," whispered Alice.

And then Mother took her little girl in her arms and whispered something in her ear that made her eyes shine brighter than ever, and she looked very happy indeed.

Alice helped her mother make new dresses for Susie, and when she was attired in these she looked good enough to delight any little girl, and both mother and Alice were smiling to think of the joy the doll would bring to a sick child. And then they smiled some more because of the great secret Mother had whispered to her girl.

What do you think happened on the 25th of December?

Mrs. Fairfield, the nearest neighbor of Mrs. Jones, awakened Alice early in the morning by saying: "Wake up dearie, Santa Claus brought you something nice."

"Oh! what is it?" cried Alice, rubbing her eyes hard.

"Here it is," replied Mrs. Fairfield, as she carefully placed a soft bundle in the arms of the excited little girl—and what do you suppose it was?

It was a "really truly child"—a live baby—a sweet little brown-eyed boy!

"Your brother," said Mrs. Fairfield. "[illegible] with your Christmas gift."

"Two instead I am," replied Alice happily, as she gently kissed the baby, and there wasn't a happier girl in the whole country,— no, not even Jenny was happier, with Susie for her very own.

Don't you think Alice's unselfishness had much to do with making so many people happy.—Farm and Home.

GERMAN HOSPITAL MEAL ASTONISHES U. S. SURGEONS

Field Red Cross in East Unable to Care Properly for Stream of Wounded

U. S. CORPS IS WELCOMED

GLEIWITZ, Germany, Dec. 14.—The hospitals at Gleiwitz and Cosel, filled mainly with wounded from the battles before Ivangorod and Warsaw, present striking contrasts to those farther from the front, which are not so unattractive.

Here are gathered men who were worn, haggard and suffering long before they were wounded. Many of them had not removed their clothing for four or five weeks, and had slept in mud and filth. Water was scarce and food scarcer. A large number lay on the fields for a day or two after being injured, before receiving medical attention. Followed, then, journeys of a day or more in jolting peasants' carts and three or four days' nerve-racking riding on railway trains, until the base hospitals finally were reached.

These delays caused at least 90 per cent. of the wounds to become infected, making the problems of the surgeons more difficult. Every effort is made in the German hospitals to save as many limbs as possible, regardless of the length of time the patients must be kept. To the correspondent of the Associated Press were pointed out several men who, the surgeon said, could have been discharged days before, if amputation had been resorted to. But bone and skin grafting is thought to be more humane, even though it takes longer.

It is no reflection upon the German sanitary arrangements that the wounded suffer as they do. On the western front conditions are better. The wounded in France and Belgium come back rapidly to comfortable beds in field and base hospitals and receive speedy treatment, which heads off infection. The wounded who are expected to-day or to-morrow from the battlefields just across the Russian frontier, will be in far better shape than their predecessors, because they have been wounded but a few miles from good German roads, and a few hours from clean hospital beds and adequate medical care.

U. S. NURSES WELL LIKED.

Only a few of the wounded will die. Nearly all will recover eventually, although recovery cannot proceed, nor broken bones knit, until suppuration ceases. Many of them will spend Christmas in the hospitals. Some can write postcards, read the daily war bulletins, play checkers, or even shuffle about the wards and corridors. Almost all can eat; and the dietary prescribed food for these seriously wounded soldiers would make many an American physician gasp.

Dinner to-day comprised for each patient two large slices of meat, several large spoonfuls of cooked sauer kraut, several potatoes and a spoonful of gravy, all served in a large bowl. Each man gets a large loaf of rye bread daily which he keeps beside his bed to cut from whenever he is so inclined. Food is served in one form or another five times a day. Not all the wounded, but most of them, get this dietary, which was laid down for the American surgeons by German experts familiar with the needs of the German soldier.

The Americans have been most welcome guests in Gleiwitz and Cosel, for their presence is appreciated not only by the medical and army authorities, but the civilian population. At Gleiwitz the president of the district court, on service with the troops, turned over his villa and servants to the American surgeons, for a residence. The nurses are quartered at the hospital. Surgeons and nurses at Cosel have been furnished quarters at the hotel.

EMDEN MEN TAKE SHIP.

Forty of Them Now Raiding in a Collier With Maxims.

MANILA, Dec. 17.—Forty men of the crew of the German cruiser Emden who were left on Cocos Island when the Australian cruiser Sydney discovered the Emden and chased and forced her to run ashore some time ago, have captured a collier and mounted two maxims on her and are now raiding commerce in the Pacific, according to a report received here.

The report came through officers of the British steamer Malacca, which has arrived at Jolo. The report has not been confirmed officially.

The men of the Emden had gone ashore on Cocos Island to dismantle the wireless and find, but were unable to rejoin their ship when the Sydney put in an appearance. The German party, which is commanded by Lieut. von Muecke, left Cocos Island with a commandeered schooner and plenty of provisions and also their own armed launch and two boats, according to the report. Where they captured the collier is not stated.

British Consul Freed.

ROME, Dec. 17.—The negotiations between Italy and Turkey over the removal of C. A. Richardson, the British consul, from the Italian consulate at Hodeida, Arabia, are approaching a satisfactory solution. The Turks have returned Mr. Richardson to the consulate and presented excuses for his removal.

They also promised to punish those guilty of the breach of diplomatic relations.

Christmas Gaieties

'Tis true that our hearts are saddened with the thought of the awful war, but when old Father Time brings the Christmas season with all its happy memories, don't let us turn that glorious day into a dark and gloomy one. Let us remember that Christmas is the children's time, and this year especially the grown-ups must enter into the play of the younger set and make the day most seasonable in remembrance of the dear child Jesus.

DON'T CUT OUT SOCIAL GATHERINGS

If economy must be practiced this year, don't do away with the social gatherings in the home, which mean so much to the young people of every community. Simplify your preparations. Get away from the idea of feasting and of "give and take." Let us be satisfied with the gifts and pleasures within our means, then our joys of Christmas will not be clouded by a dread of the January bills. Remember there are gifts and pleasures you can give that money could not buy, if you will but give them.

THE KINDNESS GAME

Christmas night usually finds all the families gathered in the old ancestral home having a jolly time, but in every community there are those who have no home and those who are too far separated from their own people to anticipate very much pleasure from the Christmas season. For the sake of these lonely ones play the kindness game.

A CHRISTMAS GREEN PARTY

Make the gathering of greens for trimming the church and school room a neighborhood affair. Let the party go to the woods in one or more big sleds or waggons, and after the greens are gathered, have a cup of hot coffee around a bonfire. Then go to the church or school, and while the wreaths and garlands are being made some one can read Dickens' Christmas Carol. Let all the young folks help and make this a service of real pleasure.

A HOLIDAY PARTY

One of the jolliest Christmas party games is called "Filling the Stocking." Cut paper in the shape of stockings, and write as many numbers thereon as there are guests. Pin on the back of each guest the name of one toy found on a Christmas tree: baby doll, lamb, orange, ball, Noah's ark and so on. The object is to keep any one from seeing the name on your back. As soon as one sees the name she writes it on her list. The one having the most toys and objects in her "stocking list" receives a little Santa Claus pack of sugar plums as a reward.

CHRISTMAS FUSS IN BOOTS

Another novelty in Christmas parties comes from the Scandinavian custom of placing in a row all the shoes of the household on Yuletide night, as a symbol that the whole family will live in peace and harmony during the year. A friend was giving a children's party, so she placed tiny red doll's shoes, filled with bon bons, at every plate. In the centre she put a big red shoe and a white pussy cat peered out from the top and round its neck was a string of bells. From the heel red ribbons led to the small pair of shoes. When the children pulled the ribbons they drew a small favor. After supper they played "Pussy Wants a Corner," and then the hostess produced a game—which was to pin a paper pussy cat on the top of a red boot which was fastened to the wall. The children were blind folded in turn.

RUSSIAN CHRISTMAS FESTIVAL

In far away Russia, the peasants have a beautiful ceremony which they call the "Festival of the Evening Star." It begins just as the evening star appears over the horizon. From this festival have originated many of our Christmas decorations. One very pretty one is to make a large evergreen star, for a centre piece, and outline it with candles, a tall candle in the centre and silver stars scattered all over the table.

GAME OF TURKEY CONUNDRUMS

Provide each guest with a card on which is written the following questions, the answers to which must refer to the much talked of turkey.

2—What does the dressmaker do to the turkey?—Bastes it.

3—Why has the turkey five reasons for being sad?—
(1) He gets it in the neck.
(2) He gets a roasting.
(3) He is much cut up.
(4) We all pick on him.
(5) And after all this he is in the soup.

4—When is a turkey like a small boy who has eaten too much?—When he is stuffed.

5—What feathers find a place on my lady's table or dresser?—Pin feathers.

12—When a turkey is cooking in what country is he?—"Greece."

JINGLES FOR YOUR GIFTS

Every one appreciates a touch of originality or individual thought; the writer does not claim these jingles as original, but I know how tired we get of the same greeting "with best love and so on." To begin with if you are sending a box of home-made candies for example, put this on the card you enclose:

"The shops I have hunted through and through,
For a dainty gift to send to you,
But could not find a gift more meet
Than this, of sweets unto the sweet."

Books make pleasing gifts, and here is a sample of a jingle:

"May this book serve to while away,
Your time some dreary, winter day,
And when you open it, you'll see
Your Christmas greetings there from me."

LUCILLE LOVE
THE GIRL of MYSTERY
BY THE

CHAPTER XIII.

A Pretty Stowaway.

CAME the chugging of the engines, the quaking of every part of the great leviathan, lesser sounds from above, the terrible creaking of the cargo as the vibrations straightened it into place. When Lucille was suddenly aware that they were under way; that she was alone here in the bowels of the boat.

Terror beset her on every side. Rats scampered about, their paws making a dreadful scraping sound like sandpaper being run over a smooth surface of boarding.

But always, when her courage had fairly ebbed, would come another picture. It was as though her horror popping eyeballs had forced poignantly home to her the vision of Manila; of her father, grieving himself to death at her absence; of the shipwreck; her sweetheart, imprisoned, with every hand turned against him, with the girl he loved away. She must bring back the papers which Loubeque carried; she must clear her lover.

Day and night—night and day—there was no difference between the two in this black hole. It seemed to her that they must be near the end of their journey, judging by the torments she had been through, when a swaying light directly over her head made her dart hastily back and strive to hide behind a looming bale. The exclamation of surprised incredulity which sounded in her ears told that she had been discovered. In an instinctive effort to hide she struck against a bale that had partially dislodged itself and sent it thundering against a second stack. In a moment the hold was filled with tumbling boxes and bales, toppling, reeling, thrashing, thundering in every direction. Lucille saw plainly above her a face that framed popping eyes and widened lips.

Swiftly she leaped upon a box that had formed the foundation for a pyramid. As though by instinct the sailor flung the lantern from him and reached down his hands. Lucille felt his fingers clutching at her wrists. Then slowly, so slowly it seemed she would never succeed in getting through that trap, she was lifted up, up to the deck where she lay panting and breathless, the man beside her fairly whistling from the exertion of once more breathing freely.

Slowly a smile spread over his weather beaten face as he scanned the silken suit in which she was arrayed. Lucille saw that she had made a friend already and immediately pressed her advantage.

"Nobody must know you found me there," she began hurriedly, then, as he started to protest, "No, no. Please listen"—

Again the sailor shook his head, a troubled expression in his eyes. Lucille knew that she had lost and, instead of pleading, took the next best course that seemed open to her.

"Then, if you must, bring the captain to me instead of parading me before every one. I would not ask you this, but I have an enemy aboard and—oh, I can"— she closed her lips quickly, as the hint of a gleam of avarice showed in the man's eyes. After a second's thought he nodded briefly and moved hurriedly away.

Lucille had no time for regret at her discovery. She had felt all along that it was inevitable, but had refrained till now from figuring on what explanation she could make in such event. That expression, the swift change on the sailor's face, as he thought her on the point of mentioning money, verified her instinctive knowledge that she must keep her ownership of the magnificent ruby necklace secret. She knew that the best of men would be tempted by such a king's ransom as the marvelous jewels represented. Likewise she felt that it would be unwise, under any circumstances, to entrust any one with the knowledge that she possessed the international spy's diary. This much she had concluded when the captain stamped heavily across to her, followed by the sailor, his face frowning blackly, but with a curious twinkle in his eyes the girl was quick to discern.

"And so the young lady with murderous tendencies was on board my boat all along. Of course you understand that I must put you in irons and turn you over to the authorities at San Francisco."

Some impulse impelled her, an impulse to put on a manner altogether at variance with her nature. She drew herself saucily erect, meeting his eyes with laughter lurking in her own.

"Of course, you don't intend doing any such thing," she retorted boldly. "I was sick and the woman they left to nurse me sneaked in the room late at night and tried to rob me. I saw her slip out and was suspicious of her, so I slipped behind the door and grabbed the thief's fun when he put it on a chair. Anybody would have done exactly the same thing and I know, anyway, that you would never turn an American girl over to those horrible Chinamen."

The captain's frown disappeared. "Well, I guess that's about true," he admitted. "But why didn't you come to me in the first place; why didn't you want to come to me when you were caught; what do you expect is to be done with you?"

"I didn't come to you because the man who acted as interpreter is an enemy of mine who would do anything on earth to be rid of me—I mean Hugo Loubeque, the one who spoke with the Chinese officer when they searched the boat. They frightened me so I crept into the hold. I don't want him to know I am on board—he mustn't know." She looked up into his face with confidence.

"I can pay for my passage when we land," she added quickly.

"Couldn't I do some work, be a cabin boy or something like that?" she suggested ruefully, for the ship's master threw back his head and gave vent to such laughter that tears rolled down his weather beaten cheeks.

"That's a good one," he roared. "By George, I believe that would straighten the whole mess out and make me the master of the first boat that has had a cabin boy since the old sailing days. Young man," he added with mock gravity, "I'll take you to my cabin now, where your enemy will have no chance of seeing you. The steward will be the only one in our secret. He can outfit you and pass his instructions regarding your duties at night."

His Tall Form Was Smothered in an Ulster.

Lucille clasped her hands delightedly, her eyes twin stars of delight at the perfect working out of her difficulties. Working at night there could be but scant chance for Loubeque's recognizing her, if he retained his secretive habits, and it was usually at nightfall that he paced the deck and left him cabin alone. No position could more adequately have given her an opportunity to search the man's cabin for the stolen documents and papers.

The thought of it fairly took away her breath, was still all dominant in her mind while she listened to the steward's instructions. She saw immediately that her position above was little more than a jest of the ship's master, for the mad little to do save a bit of dusting about the cabinets, and, in the event of storms keeping the captain on the bridge for protracted stretches, forbidding him bed too. She laughed with him at her position when she stepped herself before him in a natty white duck suit which made her slender fragility more apparent and more appealing than ever.

That very evening she found the suit occupied by the international spy. Loubeque showed himself at night, not long after the middle watch, in tall form swathed in a long ulster, the upturned collar of which concealed most of his features from sight. She noticed the bulldog grip with which he held the cigar between his teeth, its glowing end revealing the flame in his deep set eyes. She knew the tension under which he labored was probably due to the disquieting news he had received at the last moment regarding her escape.

Every night at exactly the same time he came out upon the deck, and for three nights Lucille tried to bolster up her courage sufficiently to enter the stateroom, but always the sound of that ominous, steady step on the deck dismayed her. On the fourth night she felt herself trembling with subconscious knowledge that tonight was to be the time when she made her attempt. Consciously, she was positive she could not force herself to do it, but something from within impelled her feet in the opposite direction from that taken by the spy. At the door of the stateroom she halted. Loubeque was moving toward her, silent, imperturbable, grim, a fearsome figure. Two bells sounded. Lucille watched the spy. His habits were remarkably regular in their very irregularity. For another bell he would not return to his stateroom.

She turned the knob and entered, closing the door softly. It would be a simple piece to search, the furniture being scanty and Loubeque traveling without much baggage.

Swiftly she worked, turning everything upside down and carefully laying all signs of her search afterward. Her fear of being caught had completely faded before the urge of finding the papers. From place to place, careful as any French detective, thorough and keen as though she had been a thief all her life, Lucille worked. As she went through the last of the spy's personal belongings, a little sob of disappointment and chagrin broke from the very heart of her and halted at her lips. For a hand was rattling the knob, turning it slowly, slowly.

"Ah!" murmured Loubeque silkily, "I thought I could not be mistaken in our little steward! But why, my dear child, did you wait so long to pay a visit to such an old acquaintance? Why such disregard for the ordinary amount of friendship?"

Slowly, without removing the cigar from his mouth, he moved toward her, the hateful smile still upon his lips. He seated himself and studied her carefully, speculatively.

"Lucille," he said slowly, "I saw you on the deck, saw you go into the hold, saw you when the captain came to you, have watched you all the time. Do you know why I did not give you away? It was because I wanted to know exactly where you were all the time, because I wanted the feel of my fingers upon you. I have waited for this moment. You recall what I told you in the open boat. It is no pleasure that now on. I shall have no mercy hereafter. I will know that you are only safe when you are dead."

He rose and motioned to the chair, an eagerness in word and gesture which compelled obedience. Fascinated, panic stricken, she obeyed, while from his pocket he drew a long loop of fine cord which he bound about her wrists and ankles, then strapped her securely in the chair. He stood off a moment, regarding his handiwork, then moved toward the door. "Yes one I have been prepared for the visit," he murmured. "I will just be a little while, so don't be worried—this time." The door closed behind him.

A scant quarter of an hour elapsed to her was interminable and the spy returned, the smile still playing about the corners of his mouth, a smile that matched poorly the agate expression of his cold eyes. He untied the cords that had bound her, watching her curiously as she chafed the blood back to her hands.

"Yes," he answered her unspoken question, "you may go now. I do not care any more whether you heed my warning or not. You have chosen to continue the war. I merely wish you to know what it means to you. I have made arrangements that will look to your being cared for in San Francisco, so the end of this trip means nothing to you. Good night, Miss Lucille Love."

It was as though his mockery, his gibing tones, were giant hands against her chest, pushing her through the door and upon the deck.

She could not imagine how, in a free country, he could do anything. Still, she knew Hugo Loubeque and the knowledge terrified her. She decided to rely upon her women's fragility to gain the master's sympathy. She had reached this conclusion as the astonished captain looked at her wan, miserable face when he answered the knocking.

Swiftly, the words tumbling over one another in the nerve racking attempt at trying to convince the man of the unbelievable things she had gone through at the spy's hands, she poured out her whole story. Slowly, under the spell of an obvious sincerity, the man to was captivated.

Food Sent By U.S. To Belgians Not Used By Germans

Latter Afford Every Facility for Distribution, Says Message From American Minister Whitlock

NEED OF MORE SUPPLIES TO AID STARVING PEOPLE

LONDON, Dec. 5.—J. Rogers Flannery, steel manufacturer, of Pittsburg, U.S.A., has returned to London from an extended tour of Belgium, where, on a mission for the Belgian Relief Commission, he visited the regions which the war devastated, wherein were said to exist famine and great distress.

Mr. Flannery says:

"There is no question of the dire need of the people of Belgium for assistance from America. With what supplies they have available the relief commission is doing splendid work, but much more food is needed from America. The scheme of distribution is good, and the supplies already sent are reaching the proper end.

"I was in one village where the timely arrival of a shipment of American grain from Liege averted starvation.

"I first went to Antwerp, thence to Malines and Brussels, where I spent a week; then Louvain, Aerschot, Namur, Dinant, Liege, Vise, Borndeau, Mouland, Hirve, Battice, and Julement. I travelled in a motor flying the American flag. The German troops were everywhere in large numbers guarding all the main railway lines.

"Industry is paralysed. The steel works in Southern Belgium are not operating. The coal mines are working only to supply urgent local needs. The populace everywhere is out of work. I saw only one manufacturing plant in full operation. It was a zinc plant on the Meuse, near Namur. Where there has been fighting, devastation exists. It is pitiful. At one place, I was besieged by a crowd of old women and half-starved children, begging alms. When I tried to distribute some money, there was almost a riot. They tore at my hands, in frantic efforts to get the money, until one hand was bleeding.

"Once I saw women pushing baby carriages through thick mud, from one town to another, in a downpour of rain. Hundreds are to be seen travelling from town to town, seeking better conditions. They carry with them all they own in little bundles. They all need food and lots of it.

"Formerly Belgium imported five-sixths of her foodstuffs. Now all this and much more must be furnished from the outside. It is a titanic task, the biggest relief work ever undertaken in history. It needs only a glance at the wonderful good done by what American food already arrived to convince one of the tremendous value of keeping up the shipments."

America may have an opportunity to see an extraordinary exhibition, now here, showing what the German invasion has meant to Belgium. It includes photographs of proclamations and relics and battlefields, a large part of which was obtained by Miss Bertha Bennet Burleigh, daughter of the late Bennet Burleigh. She said to-day:

"I want to take this exhibition to America, for I believe it expresses more graphically than words what the Belgians have suffered."

Some things in the exhibition were gathered at the risk of life by the comely young woman, who was assisted by W. Gore in procuring a copy of practically every proclamation issued in Belgium by the Germans between 20th August and the middle of November. A part of a shattered window of the Malines Cathedral is in the exhibition.

TO CHECK A COLD.

It is easy to check a cold if you begin in time. Frequent doses of Dr. Chase's Syrup of Linseed and Turpentine loosen the cough loosen, allay the inflammation and so prevent it spreading to the bronchial tubes and lungs. Mrs. S. M. Moore, Shortsville, N. C., writes: "I wish to state my gratitude for Dr. Chase's Syrup of Linseed and Turpentine, for it cured a cold which a friend said would soon put me in the grave."

THE VANITY AND WEAKNESS OF THE GREAT WAR-GOD— A PATHETIC SUBTERFUGE

The Kaiser's Infirmity First Manifested Itself Some Four Days After His Birth—He Has a Morbid Dread of Illness—"Dogs Would Ye Live For Ever?"

What manner of a man is this Kaiser Wilhelm? People have been asking this question ever since the war broke out, and it is still unanswered. Every day some incident lights up a new facet or some shadow dims the lustre that once attracted the admiring eyes of people of all nations. For Kaiser Wilhelm II. has been a picturesque figure on the world's stage. To-day he is the villain of the piece, or the victim of a hideous skein of folly and circumstance.

To-day his letter to Lord Tweedmouth shows how deeply he plotted against this country of our and his. For he has English blood in his veins.

"The English Part."

In a fit of bitterness once he held his withered arm extended in his right hand and exclaimed. "That is the English part of me!" This phrase may account for much that is now history. His Imperial Majesty has been unfortunate in his courtiers. His friends and intimates have carried favour by playing to his weaknesses. And his crowning weakness has been vanity. Ambition allied to despotic inclinations; pride wedded to haughtiness; an overweening desire for increase of power and influence. Good men, great men, have worked their will with the Kaiser—Bismarck, General von Scholl, Buelow, August Thyssen, the Iron King, Dr. von Heyderbrand, and others. But there have also been round his throne base intriguers and degenerates — the Phil-Eulanburgs, the Hohenhaus Lymars, and Kuno Moltkes, men who made inroads on the weaker metal of the proud theatrical and ambitious ruler. The big men of Prussia saw the storm coming and prepared for the inevitable, prepared for it with searching thoroughness, with bitter enmity towards the nation's rivals, determined to support the War Lord in his weakness for the Empire's sake.

Staggered His Ministers.

There seems to have been something of fatalism in these preparations for "the day." The monarch's vain speeches, his blasphemous appeals to the Deity, his pride of self staggered his balanced Ministers even as they staggered his subjects. Gradually the envy of Britain and British strength grew into violent, if suppressed, hatred. The canker entered early into the soul of the Crown Prince. The quarrel with his own mother, the Empress Frederick. Princess Royal of England, is an old story. The peevish, proudful youth drove her from her home almost at the hour when he ascended the throne.

Her Majesty had turned the chief Royal Palace in Potsdam into a beautiful, artistic English residence — a veritable fairy castle to the German, barracks-ridden mind; but the moment William succeeded to the privilege of adding "I. R." to his signature he gave his mother three days to clear out.

"But your father appointed Friedrichskron my dower."

"He might as well have appointed the moon. This palace belongs to me, and forthwith I will take possession. You and your daughters have leave to retire to Unter den Linden until further orders."

And retire the Royal women did. Afterwards he not only confiscated part of Her Majesty's private property, but he interfered with her rights and prerogative as Dowager-Empress.

Physical Weaknesses.

"If my wife is indisposed I will play Kaiser and Kaiserin both," read one of his rescripts to his mother. And later in her charities in all her endeavours for womanhood and motherhood, he interfered by elaborate police restrictions and petty tyrannies, making miserable the latter years of her life.

"It is his physical weaknesses that make him do such things." Thus one of the Emperor's sisters in accounting for her big brother's moral delinquencies. His constitutional ailments, physical and mental, may be co-responsible.

His pride is his chief stumbling block. From infancy he has had to hide his stunted left arm, which, as a rule, he hugs closely to his body, allowing the hand, which is not deformed, but small like a child's, to rest against his waist, or upon his hip when on horseback.

The fingers of the crippled hand are movable, for, although the head of the radius of his forearm does not set properly in the condules of the humerus, the limb is not altogether inert. This is an infirmity that first manifested itself some four days after Wilhelm's birth, when it was noticed that the child could not move his left arm. Subsequently the surgeons discovered that his elbow joint was dislocated—nothing serious in a healthy child. But in the case of Prince Wilhelm the surrounding soft parts were so injured, and the muscles attached in such a condition, that no one dared attempt to set the bone.

As a matter of fact, the whole left half of the baby's body was weak, and it is weak to this day.

A Pathetic Subterfuge.

And in quiet moments, when his attention is not centred on pose and pose, his left leg is inclined to drag. All his photographs—he has a mania for fancy dress, and keeps the Court photographers busy — show skilful hiding of the weak arm—a pathetic subterfuge with which even the most bitter of his critics will sympathize.

The Kaiser's mental trouble has long been a source of anxiety and irritation to the Court. He has his "bad days," and he lives in a state of terror, always expecting a breakdown. He has a morbid dread of illness, and amazing precautions are everywhere taken to preserve him from all shocks or surprises. The ear trouble, which is said to be hereditary, has driven him into passionate outbreaks which more than once have caused family discords and have given the Crown Prince many anxious days. Their quarrels and separations have been more and more frequent in recent years. The tyranny of the Emperor became intolerable at times, and his freakish nature and despotic manners made him a trying companion in the whirlwind tours of which he is so fond.

The story that Wilhelm at one time admonished his soldiers that it might become necessary for them to turn their steel or rifles against their own "father and mother, brothers and sisters," is literally true. He made that speech at the swearing-in of recruits in Berlin in the fall of 1901. He regards himself as the re-incarnation of Frederick the Great, and the latter's infamous "Dogs, would ye live for ever?" with which he drove back his exhausted troops before the Austrian guns at Mollin, is one of his favourite figures of speech.

Jack-of-All-Pretences.

If one of the Kaiser's smaller vices is more destructive than the other it is his unbridled vanity. How many years do you suppose have been wiped out of the lives of his subjects for the heinous crime of impeaching the Kaiser's skill as a composer, ruler, poet, diplomat, shipbuilder, conqueror, orchestra leader, sportsman, lawgiver, stage-manager, playwright, and what not? Something over 300 years per annum during the first decade of his kingship. Later statistics are not available, the official computers, appalled by the records, refusing to publish them after 1908.

Hear William declaim on the subject in an impromptu speech before a hunting party at Rominton, after a friend asked him to pardon an old forester, jailed for lese majeste:—

"As to this case," belched forth the Kaiser, "the culprit is undergoing most inadequate punishment for the grossest of crimes, seeing that his vile tongue insulted God's anointed. Three years is all he got! May he rot in prison. I will never say the word or raise a finger to give him back the liberty he so scandalously abused."

Feet of Clay.

A strange compound of vanity and cleverness, of ambition and wide dreams of conquest, how much of the real man has the world seen? How much of the real man is it seeing now? Not one envies the War-Lord to-day he is the scorned and pitied of civilized nations. He started life physically incapacitated; he chose his own associates; he quarrelled with his superior advisers and was into lerant of anyone who dared to cross his whims or criticise his desires. They played upon his weakness and flattered his blasphemous belief in the heritage of Heaven. The War-Lord to-day has a mind full of dark shadows and awful images. The England he scorned, and insulted, and deceived, can pity this poor vain mortal, this Prussian war-god with the feet of clay.

BRONCHIAL COUGHS

When the bronchial tubes are affected with that weakening, tickling cough, they need immediate and sensible treatment. The breath seems shorter because of mucous obstructions; usually fever is present and your head jars with every cough. Your chest aches and the inflammation often spreads to the lungs.

The food-tonic that has proven its worth for forty years—in Scott's Emulsion. It drives out the cold, attacks the root of the trouble, and checks the cough by aiding the healing process of the infected membranes.

If you are troubled with bronchitis or know an afflicted friend, always remember that Scott's Emulsion builds strength while relieving the trouble.

An Old Acquaintance.

A resourceful girl, having dipped a pink party frock in ribbons, made what was left of it and made a wonderful soup cloth. The next evening she was entertaining a visitor in the soft light and she said to him quite casually: "How do you like my new long shade?"

William regarded it for a moment pensively, then he said: "The last time I saw that shade I wanted with it."—New York Post.

WHY BUY AT HOME?

Because our interests are here.

Because the community that is good enough for us to live in is good enough for us to buy in.

Because we believe in transacting business with our friends.

Because we want to see the goods we are buying.

Because we want to get what we buy when we pay for it.

Because some part of every dollar we spend at home stays at home and helps work for the welfare of our home town.

Because the home man we buy from stands back of the goods, thus always giving value received.

Because the man we buy from pays his share of the taxes.

Because the man we buy from helps to support our poor and needy, our schools, our churches, and our people.

Because, when luck, misfortune or bereavement comes, the man we buy from is here with his kindly expressions of greeting, his words of cheer, and, if need be, his pocketbook.

Let us make Peterborough a good place in which to work and live.

QUICK HELP FOR SORE THROAT!
ALL CONGESTION MADE TO GO QUICKLY!

Worst Cold or Sore Throat Cured in Quick Order.

RUB ON NERVILINE.

Rub Nerviline plentifully over the neck and chest—rub it in well—lots of rubbing can't hurt. The relief will be surprising.

Nerviline is effective because it is powerful— about five times stronger than an ordinary liniment. Nerviline is penetrating, sinks in through the tissues, gets right in where the soreness and congestion really are. Its action is marvellously soothing. Rubbed on at night, it draws out the inflammation, and before morning takes away that feeling of tightness, and stops the cough entirely.

Where can you find so powerfully searching a relief as Nerviline for a bad cold? Search the world over and you'll discover nothing so good.

For nearly forty years Nerviline has been quickly curing colds, coughs and throat troubles. Thousands use it for rheumatism, sciatica and neuralgia—they all speak well of this grand family liniment, because they have proved it almost magical power.

Whenever you have an ache or pain, be it neuralgia, sciatica, lumbago, joint or muscle stiffness, always remember that Nerviline is the quickest, safest cure. Every good dealer in medicine sells the large 50c. family size bottle of Nerviline, trial size 25c., or direct from the Catarrhozone Co., Kingston, Canada.

Deeds of Heroism at the Front

LONDON, Dec. 16. — In face of raining bullets, Private John Robertson of the Bedfordshire Regiment went out to fetch in a wounded sergeant. Just as he was in the act of carrying him out of the firing line Robertson was shot down, and died in the course of a few minutes.

"He died doing his duty like a British soldier" writes the commanding officer of the regiment, "and his death was a great blow to us."

How a plucky driver, single handed, prevented a battery falling into the hands of the Germans is told by Signaller Lee of the Royal Berks Regiment.

During a fierce encounter at the battle of the Aisne a gun's crew were put out of action, the men being either killed or wounded, but the driver referred to obtained a team of horses, and calmly walked them down to the gun, with shells bursting all around. Having reached the spot he limbered up and brought the guns safely back. Neither he nor the horses were hit.

An unprecedented instance of two brothers being recommended for the French Victoria cross is furnished by the heroism of Sergts. H. and R. Hunt of thee First East Surrey regiment. Near Mons, Sergt. R. Hunt three times went out on to a bullet and shrapnel swept front to bring in wounded men, two of whom were East Surrey officers. Sergt. H. Hunt's battalion, which was acting independently in the valley of the Marne, had penetrated a thick wod, when it was met by terrific artillery, maxim, and rifle fire.

Several officers were wounded, and Sergt. H. Hunt, who was leading his platoon, rushed to their assistance under a hail of bullets and took them to the rear in safety.

Both these gallant sergeants, who were mentioned in Sir John French's dispatches, were subsequently killed.

"Now that we have been reinforced we are giving the Germans something hot." Thus writes Corporal J. G. Johnson, First Middlesex regiment, who has been mentioned in Sir John French's dispatches:

"I am pleased to tell you," he continues, "that I have been recommended for the French Distinguished Service medal for saving the transport and carrying seven men out of the way of the Germans. I think I went mad at the time, but the next morning the General sent for me and told me he had great pleasure in recommending me."

A thrilling story of how a boy of 16 led a bayonet charge is told by Corporal Isherwood of the D Company of the Second Battalion of the Manchester Regiment:

"It was on Oct. 20," says the Corporal. "The Germans were all around us and our trenches had been shelled by their fire. First our lieutenant was wounded, and then the sergeant and we were left without a single officer in command of the platoon.

"While we were wondering what to do Private Preston, a lad of 16, threw up his cap and yelled, 'Fix your bayonets, lads.' We did so and charged, and routed the advancing Germans."

A Desperate Battle Waged in East

CONTINUED ADVANCE BY THE ALLIES IN BELGIUM AND NORTHERN FRANCE

German Trenches Are Captured, Announces Official Communique and at Many Points the Onward Movement of the Allies Continues.

MAINTAIN ARTILLERY ADVANTAGE

SPECIAL CABLE:

PARIS, December 18.—Continued success in the offensive movement in Belgium and northwestern France with the capture of many German trenches, is officially announced to-day.

The communique from the war office states that about Blangy the first line trenches of the Germans were taken along a front of more than five-eighths of a mile.

PARIS, December 18.—The French official communication to-day is as follows:

"The day of December 17 was marked by an advance on our part in Belgium, where every counter attack undertaken by the enemy failed.

"In the region of Arras a vigorous offensive made us masters of several trenches. These are located at Auchy, Labassee, St. Laurent and Blangy. At this last mentioned place we occupied on a front more than one kilometre (16.21 of a mile long) almost all the first line trenches of the enemy.

"In the region of Tracy Le Val on the Aisne and in Champagne our heavy artillery won distinct advantages.

"In the Argonne the Germans blew up one of our trenches to the north of Four de Paris and end eavoured to move out from their position with three battalions of troops. This infantry attack, as well as one they undertook at St. Hubert, was repulsed.

LONDON, Eng., December 18. — The Norwegian steamer Vaaren has been sunk by mines in the North Sea. Advices received by Lloyds from Grimsby today state that 12 members of the crew of the Vaaren and an English pilot were drowned.

LONDON, Eng., December 18.—Mine sweepers are to-day combing the waters along the coast between Newcastle and Flamborough Head. The sinking of three ships in this region by striking mines yesterday, only augmented the anger to which the Britishers have been aroused by the attack upon unfortified cities and the killing of defenceless women and children.

The British are unable to understand how the United States and other neutral countries can further ignore the violations of the laws of civilized warfare, of which they charge the Germans are guilty. Newspapers express the opinion that the United States should protest to Germany against a repetition of such attacks as were made against the three English towns.

Many of the refugees came back to Scarborough and Hartlepool to find the houses from which they fled reduced to a mass of ruins. The authorities of all coast cities are to-day busily engaged organizing the citizens and planning local defence measures. This will consist chiefly in maintaining a constant watch on the coast for hostile warships and arranging for speedy transportation of civilians from the towns should the German vessels appear. At present there are no indications that the Admiralty intends to change its plans for the distribution of British dreadnoughts and cruisers. The coast patrol will be left to the destroyers and light cruisers as before, which means that the fast battle cruisers of the enemy might be able again to reach the coast if favoured by the fog as they were on Wednesday last. One of the German vessels engaged in the raid two days ago is declared to have been the Von Moltke, a sister ship of the Goeben, now part of the Turkish navy.

GERMAN RAID CONDEMNED BY U. S PAPERS

New York Tribune Says Such Ruthlessness Will Come Home to Roost—Shocked the World Says Times

PREJUDICIAL TO GERMANY

NEW YORK, Dec. 18.—Commenting editorially on the German raid on the east coast of England, the Tribune this morning says:

"At Scarborough and Whitby there was no defence made, and the only victims of the German gun fire were non-combatants, including women and children.

"Such ruthlessness will come home to roost. Germany cannot escape the responsibility for having taken the first step towards restoring barbarities which the world had fondly hoped to see eliminated from the practice of war."

The New York Times says:

"The ruthless bombardment of unfortified towns and utterly useless massacre of non-combatants have not only shocked the people of other nations, but have aroused a world-wide feeling of angry resentment which cannot fail to be prejudicial to Germany."

LONDON, Dec. 18. — The Daily Chronicle, in an editorial on the German raid on the east coast of England, asks:

"Is it henceforth to be the recognized practice of a civilized navy to bombard unfortified seaside pleasure towns and kill civilians? Is The Hague convention of 1907 on bombardments by naval forces to be dropped by the civilized world?

"Countries like Geramny and Austria with small coast lines and few ports, need not mind, but the vast length of the Atlantic and Pacific seaboards of the United States will suffer terribly."

Lt.-Col. Macdonnel Thrown By Horse

Seriously Injured at Salisbury Plain —Was General Staff Officer of the First Division

LONDON, Ont., Dec. 17.—Word was received here to-day to the effect that Lieut.-Col. A. H. Macdonell, general staff officer of the First Division, and now on the headquarters staff of the First Contingent, has been seriously injured at Salisbury Plain by being thrown by his mount. Col. Macdonell, who is a brother of Claude Macdonell, M.P., of Toronto, had a distinguished career in the South African War.

Lieut.-Col. A. H. Macdonell is well known in this City, and his many friends here will be sorry to hear of his accident. Lieut.-Col. Macdonell is a brother of the late Mrs. L. M. Hays, wife of Judge Hays, of Guelph, and formerly of Peterborough.

SOLDIERS WILL BE QUARTERED HERE FOR TRAINING PURPOSES

Peterborough to Get One Company of Infantry and One Squadron of Mounted Rifles--Others Go to Lindsay, Port Hope, Cobourg and Belleville.

Examiner Special:

KINGSTON, Dec. 17.—Distribution of the troops for the Third Canadian Overseas Contingent, as far as the Third Military District is concerned, has at last been decided on by the military authorities at Ottawa, and, unless a change is made, the city of Kingston will not be given any portion of the allotment.

The two battalions of infantry and the one battalion of mounted rifles for the Third District will be divided as follows:

Ottawa—Four companies of infantry and one squadron of mounted rifles.

Smith's Falls—Two companies of infantry.

Brockville—Two companies of infantry.

Cornwall—One company of infantry.

Belleville—Two companies of infantry.

Cobourg—One company of infantry.

Port Hope—One company of infantry.

Peterborough—One company of infantry and one squadron of mounted rifles.

Lindsay—Two companies of infantry. Making in all eighteen companies to each of the three battalions.

SHOW HOW TO MANAGE EN ROUTE.

There is good reason to believe that the 21st Battalion will make an early move for the front. Already the battalion has been informed regarding transportation, the price to be paid for meals on trains, accommodation, provision for men and all other things that are necessary for a unit to know when it is about to move. If the 21st Battalion has been officially notified as to all things concerning entrainment and transportation it is reasonable to believe that the whole of the Second Contingent will soon be on its way to the front.

The above announcement will mean that Peterborough will be the training centre for some 250 troops. The infantry company mentioned will probably be recruited in Peterborough, as this City will undoubtedly be called upon to furnish about 125 men. The mounted squadron too will likely be raised here and in this district, with the 3rd Prince of Wales' Dragoons as the nucleus.

Women Knocked Down On Street

Young Fellow Fined $10 And Costs For Reckless Driving —In Police Court This Morning

A young fellow named William O'Brien, eighteen years of age, was fined ten dollars and costs, amounting to $13.00, in this morning's Police Court, for reckless driving on George street, last Monday. He pleaded "not guilty" to the charge, and P. C. Blade was called to give testimony as to the occurrence.

P. C. Blade said that last Monday he was standing at the corner of Hunter and George streets, when the defendant, driving a livery outfit, came down George Street at a fast rate of speed, which he would judge would be about ten miles an hour. He did not slow up at the corner at all, and when crossing the road was driving at a pace altogether inconsistent with the traffic conditions. A young woman and her mother were crossing the street at the time and the youth did not attempt to slacken the pace at all. The result was that both women were knocked over by the horse which ran into them with terrible force. Even then O'Brien did not stop, but drove right ahead as though nothing had happened. Witness picked up the elder of the two victims and carried her into Madill's drug store. The young lady, though badly shaken up, was able to reach the drug store herself. The former, however, was painfully injured and has not yet recovered from the effects of the accident. The two women were taken home in a hack.

William O'Brien said in his own defence that he was only driving five miles an hour and that a young lad eleven years of age jumped on the cutter without diffiulty just at the corner. He could not drive faster because the horse was hitched too close to the cutter. He could not avoid the accident because he did not see the two women crossing in front of the horse and he did not stop because he did not find out that either of them had been hurt until he was half a block past the corner.

The Magistrate gave the young fellow a severe talking to and imposed a fine of $10 and costs.

THE WEATHER

The thermometer last night was down to six degrees below zero—the lowest yet.—W. P.

An enjoyable evening was brought to a close with three cheers for Adjutant and Mrs. McElhiney.

Increase In Freight Rates

WASHINGTON, Dec. 18.—The four years' fight of the eastern railroads for a general advance of five per cent. in freight rates was won with the aid of the European war to-day when the Interstate Commerce Commission allowed the increase with a few exceptions.

The Commission made it plain that its action was taken to relieve the commercial crisis brought on by the world war. Canadian railroads will probably apply to the Dominion Railway Commission for similar increase.

Peterboro' Man Has Invented a Patriotic Game

Mr. G. W. Gilman of Stewart street Peterborough, is the inventor of a new patriotic game called the European War Game, for children and young folks, yes, and the old people, too. It will be exhibited this evening in Charles Banks' store, in the Braund Block, Charlotte street. It is a brand new game, up to the minute, and very entertaining. It is a home product, too, and should have a wide sale.

Mr. Gilman's invention comes at an opportune time. Many of these amusements have been made in Germany, and various companies in the United States and Canada are making a general effort to secure as much of this business as possible. Hence, this new game should be particularly welcomed at this time. The European War game is manufactured by Turner Bros. of this City. The patriotic feature of the game should not be overlooked. It will familiarize young folks with the Allies and will be a means of stamping the present war firmly in their memories.

FATE OF WARSAW DEPENDS ON ISSUE

Most Desperate Fighting of Entire Eastern Campaign is Developing on a Line Within Thirty Miles of the Capital of Poland--800,000 Germans Engaged.

Special Cable:

LONDON, December 18.—The most desperate fighting of the entire eastern campaign is now developing on a line within 30 miles of the city of Warsaw. Berlin is celebrating what is declared there to be a great victory over the Russians, as a result of an official statement that the enemy's offensive against Posen and Silesia has completely broken down.

From Petrograd reports have come that the Russian lines south of the Vistula have been drawn back nearer to Warsaw for strategic reasons. It is evident however that the great battle upon which the fate of Warsaw may rest is now only approaching a climax.

The German official statement here is regarded as covering the campaign more from a defensive standpoint than an offensive. By forcing the Russians to retreat not only in central Poland, but on the southern line, the Germans have relieved the danger of invasion of their territory, but the battle for the complete supremacy is yet to be fought. By re-establishing their main position about Sochasew, the Russians have retreated 15 miles from the Ilow-Lowicz line. The Germans are to-day reported to be vigorously shelling the Russian positions and an important railway town which the Czar's army is now guarding has already been damaged. The German force engaged in the main advance upon Warsaw is now said to number more than 800,000 men. The Russians have an even greater force and reinforcements are still being poured into the battle region.

Peterboro' Boy Is Promoted

Capt. J. H. Fessenden is Now a Major in the Army Service Corps

As announced in yesterday's Examiner, news has been received of the promotion of Captain J. H. Fessenden to the rank of Major in the British Army Sevice Corps. Major Fessenden is a son of Mr. Cortez Fessenden of the Collegiate Institute staff. He graduated from the Peterborough Collegiate Institute, later going through the Royal Military College, Kingston.

Major Fessenden has seen considerable active service, part of it in South Africa, and in the present war, where he was in the battle of Mons, and the subsequent retreat.

Mr. Vivian Fessenden, a younger brother, who went through the local High School, and was a graduate of the R. M. C., is now with the Canadian troops at Salisbury Plain, as Lieutenant in the 48th Highlanders.

This Morning Was the Coldest This Winter

"A green Christmas makes a full graveyard" runs the old adage, and the superstitious are comforting themselves with the fact that the barometer runs unusually high, and the weatherman predicts a spell of clear, cold weather. With the ground all covered with snow and a sting in the air that makes them shiver in their heaviest garments, they tell all who will listen to them, that a white Christmas is prophetic of a full harvest, good health and prosperity. Judging by the impetus given to Christmas buying as a result of the cold snap, the merchants are quite certain the pranks of the mercury will spell greater affluence.

Not since the dry spell of the past summer has the barometer registered so high—29.75—and according to the wiseacres, the street railway company and other big corporations may stable their snowplows for the present.

At 8 o'clock this morning the thermometer read six below zero, this being the record for the coldest day this winter.

Opinion seems pretty unanimous that this is the coldest snap, for the time of the year, Peterborough has experienced in many seasons. The stokers of home furnaces who take the precaution to shut off the water at night are quite sure they can't possibly have the same kind of degrees out in benighted Medicine Hat, where the cold air tap is turned on, that they have down here.

If the reliable local mercury tubes should take a drop of thirty, forty, or fifty degrees, imagination tells them that living, apart from being uncomfortable, would be unendurable.

In the window of Banks' Sporting Goods Store, Charlotte Street, are shown two large photos of the Canadian Expeditionary Forces at Kingston. One group contains over 1,000 men. The other is a photo of "E" Company, in which is shown the Peterborough men who enlisted in the second contingent.

Peterborough Presents Possibilities Unsurpassed."

FRIDAY, DEC. 18, 1914

SAFE BIND, SAFE FIND.

Peterborough is not the only place that suffers from the adverse influence of weather conditions upon power supply for electric and water supply purposes. The Brantford Expositor of Dec. 16, says that "the Western Counties Company got benumbed yesterday morning with the result that the customers were without light or power for several hours," and it adds that "once more is demonstrated the need of some reliable auxiliary service." If the provision of such service is necessary and desirable in the interests of light and power continuity and effectiveness, it is much more important where the water supply for fire extinguishing purposes is concerned. We could do without light for a time, without very great inconvenience, but absence of water pressure for a few hours might easily result in immense destruction of property by fire. It is a pleasure to note that the Utilities Commission is alert to the necessity of providing an auxiliary steam plant, for water pumping. It may cost a considerable sum of money; but we are sure no rate-payer, who owns property that might be imperilled by failure of water pressure, will grudge his share of the contribution necessary to make Peterborough fire-proof—as far as possible to human provision and provision. Safe bind, safe find; is a proverb much more to the point than that which emphasizes the folly of locking the stable after the horse is stolen.

GOOD OUT OF EVIL.

The daring raid of German cruisers upon the unprotected coast of England, was at once a most courageous act and a most dastardly act. They literally took their lives in their hands in running the risk of floating mines and British warships. Nobody will deny to the Germans high animal courage, though in this case there is reason to think the Germans have been forced to some such desperate undertaking. Germany is the chief sufferer from the situation in the North Sea. That country is being bled, white by the destruction of her trade. Shortage of supplies, for war equipment, shortage of food affect Germany fatally, while Great Britain is comparatively free from any actual disability or anxiety on account of her trade interests. Britain has cause to be satisfied with the situation, while Germany was forced to make such desperate demonstration — to force matters, and if for no other reason, make an attempt to get some of her cruisers into the open sea to prey upon British commerce. While the raid was an act of desperate courage, it was an act af dastardly inhumanity. Civilised warfare, justifies severe tactics, practiced upon actual combatants, but civilized warfare does not justify overt destruction of property that subserves no military purposes, nor the wanton distruction of the lives of non-combatants—war upon women and children. The action of Germany in the raid upon the English coast and bombarding defenceless cities, is quite consistent with her whole course of conduct in waging a war of barbarism. The wanton destruction of property and life in England, served no military purpose, or rather it served a very important military purpose. It did not operate to strike terror into Great Britain, but on the other hand served Britain's military purpose to a high degree. It stimulated recruiting as no other appeal could do. It has strengthened, if anything was needed to strengthen, the national and individual determination to fight this fight to the bitter end; to never relax effort or withhold sacrifice, in order to end finally and forever, the reign of militarism and all its works; and remove forever the menace of an ambition that includes the subjugation of all civilized nations to the fiendish cult of force. Every such act on the part of Germany will consolidate the forces of civilization against her and hasten the end; help precipitate the downfall of despotism.

CAN BE "MADE IN PETERBOROUGH."

In last night's Examiner, publication was made of a statement made in discussion at the Board of Trade meeting, which does not quite coincide with the facts, and incidentally does an injustice to a local industry. The statement was that—

"The reason the Lundy Shovel and Tool Company was unable to secure contracts was said to be due to the fact that they are unable to obtain handles for shovels such as would be required by the government."

The Examiner is glad to be able to correct the wrong impression that has been created. The Lundy Company is one of the only three companies in Canada that can manufacture the shovels required. Further this company is the only company that submitted to Mr. F. Stobart, of Montreal—not Ottawa; an important point to be remembered—the proper handle that would meet the government specifications. The only reason the Lundy Company has not secured a contract is because the opportunity has not been presented. The company is in every way prepared to enter at once upon the fulfilment of a contract to manufacture shovels to any number within its capacity: and is also prepared to make extraordinary exertions—overtime work, etc., to meet the requirements of the situation. It can, not only make the blades of the shovels, but the kind of handles required, can be made in Peterborough. So that, instead of the Lundy Company being unable to take a contract on account of not being able to procure the sort of handle required, it is able and prepared to manufacture the whole shovel, complete in Peterborough. The D handle used for the ordinary kind of shovel has to be imported, the lumber to a sufficient quantity not being available in Canada. But the T handle required for the government shovel can be made in Canada—made in Peterborough, too.

It is a pleasure to be able to, and to correct the misleading impression thta has prevailed. This suggests the idea that the industries of Peterborough can be utilized and kept busy in making much of the many kinds of supplies required by the British and other governments. There is a demand, that by the look of things, will persist for a long time; and it seems that it would be well to inaugurate and perfect organized effort to put the situation on its true basis, and to develop the full possibilities of securing in Peterborough, a maximum of government contracts for various kinds of supplies. Should not the whole situation be investigated and organized, so that we shall know to a fraction what supplies—in kind and quantities—the government is likely to require, and to what extent our local industries are able to meet the demand. If we sit down and meekly wait for contracts to be thrust upon us or to pass us by, because our capabilities are not known, we shall gain little. Shakspere, says—"Some are born great; some achieve greatness, and some have greatness thrust upon them." Will it not be worth while to try to achieve contracts? If no other organization or agency is available to this end, why not as their functions are pretty well, as they have been well performed, call upon the splendid organization and spirit of effective work, of the Patriotic Fund Committee?

WHAT THE CHRISTIAN GUARDIAN THINKS

Special to The Examiner.

TORONTO, Dec 18.—After mentioning Mr Rowell's offer to the Government, in view especially of the new conditions arising out of the war, that the Government and Opposition should co-operate in dealing with the liquor question, the Christian Guardian in this week's issue, says:

"Why should not this question be settled apart from party politics? There can be no question that while the Conservative party in Ontario won the last provincial election, there was not a few Conservative voters who cast a Reform vote for the first time in their lives, and there were many others who voted Conservative with a reluctance which had never been felt before. We are not politicians and we may not be good political prophets, but we venture to say that no political party in this or any other province can afford to be looked upon as the friend or ally of the liquor party. Most of our public men are beginning to realize this. Why then should not both parties unite to wipe out the traffic which is universally recognized as both undesirable and dangerous?"

Wounded Frenchmen Back at Front.

PARIS, Dec. 18.—No fewer than 84 per cent. of the French wounded returned to the firing line before Dec. 12, according to interesting figures supplied yesterday by the surgical department of the Ministry of War. Of the remainder 24 per cent. had been given convalescent leave, 17 per cent. were still in hospitals, and 1 1-2 per cent. had been discharged from the army. Three and one-half per cent of the wounded died.

WINNIPEG GRAIN MARKET.

WINNIPEG, Dec. 17.—Wheat opened ⅛c to ¼c higher this morning, caused by firmer Liverpool cables. There was a good demand for wheat and fractional advances occurred. At about noon Winnipeg had gained ⅜c over the opening with a strong undertone. Active sales for export were claimed to be off today, altho reports were to the effect that Italy and France were buying from southern markets.

The close was ⅝c higher for wheat, ⅛c to ⅜c higher for oats and ½c up for flax. Cash demand was good. Barley and flax were in good demand, while flax was slow. Inspections Wednesday 193 cars, as against 767 last year and in eight were 240 cars.

MONTREAL GRAIN MARKET.

MONTREAL, Dec. 17.—The demand from foreign buyers for Manitoba spring wheat was not so keen today, but cables were firm at the late advance in prices, which, however, exporters were not disposed to accept and business in consequence was quiet. There was no further change in the condition of the local market for coarse grains.

The demand for all lines is rather quiet and the volume of business doing small. The feeling prevails in the market for flour, but the demand is still limited from all sources which indicates that buyers are well supplied for the present. Demand for millfeed is fairly good.

There is no change in the condition of the market for butter and cheese. Ergo continue active and firm.

FREIGHT TERMINAL OF C. P. R. AT QUEBEC

By the early spring of 1915, if all goes well, the Canadian Pacific Railway will have one of the finest and most up-to-date freight terminal in America, at Quebec.

The work of construction which is being done by Downing-Cook, under the superintendency of Mr. D. H. Mapes, Supt. C.P.R. Building Construction, has progressed in a most satisfactory manner, and what was once only a section of the C.P.R. yards with its network of tracks has been transformed into the foundations and framework of this proposed structure.

The foundations and floors of the two sheds, one for inbound freight and the other for the outbound variety, are of reinforced concrete while the structure itself is supported by steel rafters and girders. All foundations are on Raymond concrete piles. The "inbound shed" is 50 ft. wide by 600 feet long; the other, for goods outward bound, measuring 30 ft. wide by 300 ft. in genth; transfer platform will intervene between both sheds, while tracks have been laid in such a manner that the freight cars may by 300ft in length. A transfer platform and shed. Another decided innovation, one which is of much convenience to merchants, is the system of doors which will be arranged. These sliding doors are continuous the full length of both track and roadway sides of the shed; they will be installed and manipulated so that an entrance to the shed may be effected at any particular point, and carters who load or unload goods will thus be greatly aided in their work, and the time consumed will be lessened.

Both sheds or terminals are constructed on a system of units, that is to say, each shed will be so erected that if necessity requires it, may be lengthened by additions of further units. The structure will be absolutely fireproof and the cost of erection will amount to approximately a quarter of a million dollars.

Some 115 men are employed at present, mostly local labour, though, of course, there is a certain precentage from other cities.

The 15th of April is the date set for the completion of this contract, as it is the intention of the Canadian Pacific to erect a new station, the work on which will likely commence around that date, thus necessitating the demolishing of the old freight building on which site the erection of the new station is contemplated.

It is the intention of the railway people to have a freight terminal which will be modern in the strictest sense and all the latest ideas of American and Canadian freight experts have been moulded together with this end in view. The structure will be fronted with a two-storey office building 50 ft. by 100 ft. for the staff, and through this access to the sheds may be gained by anyone having business there. There will be no reason to complain of darkness for there is a thorough system of electric lighting and plenty of windows.

Mr. S. G. Newton is superintending the work in the interests of the W. S. Downing-Cook Co. The terminals were designed by the Building and Construction Dept. of the C.P.R., Mr. D. H. Mapes, Supt. The steel work was planned by Mr. P. B. Motley, Engineer of Bridges' Office. The steel used in the construction will be furnished by the Dominion Bridge Co. of Lachine. Messrs. Douglass Bros. of Montreal, have the work of constructing roofing and doors; the painting is in the hands of Schulmerick & Co., Montreal, and the brick work will be attended to by the Citadel City Brick Co. of Quebec.

UNCERTAINTY ABOUT MAILS TO BRITAIN

No definite information can be obtained from the General Post Office about the departure of British mails, because the officials themselves are in the dark regarding sailings.

"The wisest thing for the people to do is to get their letters or parcels mailed as soon as they can, and they can depend upon it we will get them away at the first opportunity," said a post office man to-day.

The movements of the boats are most uncertain, but the mail that closed here last Thursday for the Old Country got away all right and should be at its destination in ample time to add enjoyment to the festive season.

The post office authorities are only notified by the Railway Mail Service a few hours before a British mail closes. They then send along all they have on hand.

REGULAR WEEKLY PARADE OF THE HOME GUARD

Was Held Last Evening—Will be the Last Regular Parade of the Year

CHURCH PARADE

The regular weekly parade of the Peterborough Home Guard was held last evening. There was a large turnout of both officers and men. For upwards of two hours, the twelve companies present practiced the routine drills. The regular march-out was dispensed with. This allowed the men more time for drill purposes. Each week shows a marked improvement in the manner which the various Company formations are carried out. Last night's parade was no exception to the rule. The enthusiasm and interest shown by the men is a source of satisfaction to to commanding officers who are exercising every means within their power to bring the guards up to a high standard of efficiency. Their efforts are rewarded as evidenced by the proficient manner in which the various movements are carried out. With twelve companies drilling at the same time, there is very little room to spare within the drill hall of the Armouries. This makes the work of the instructors all the more exacting, and reflects greater credit upon the rank and file, when the instructions are carried out to a successful conclusion.

Arm Bands Supplied.

Arm bands were served out to the men. This was accomplished by marching the Companies one at a time, into the battery room, where each man whose name appeared on the rolls was served with the distinguishing mark of the Home Guards. The decoration consists of a red silk band, bearing the inscription "Home Guard, Peterborough, 1914"; also the Royal crest. The band is worn on the left arm just above the elbow. It is supplied free. Replacements will be supplied at a cost of twenty-five cents. It will be worn on all parade occasions. The band is not only decorative but it serves to add distinctiveness to the regiment. The officers are supplied with shoulder straps, which are attached to the shoulders of the coat. These are supplied by the officers at their own expense.

The Home Guard will not parade again until the first Thursday after New Year's. On December 10th a Church parade will be held. The shooting schedule will be carried out as previously arranged. Captains of the various companies are privileged to call their companies out for drill at any time between now and the next regular parade.

The Orders.

"Orders of Lt.-Col. J. E. L. Goodwill, Officer Commanding Peterborough Home Guard."

The battalion will discontinue parade through the holiday season. Battalion drill will be resumed on Thursday, Jan. 7th. Company drills will be held by the captain of the company on any evening that suits their purposes. Also on Saturday afternoons. It is expected that the captains of companies will get their companies in such shape that they will be thoroughly organized by the first battalion drill.

The Rifle Ranges will be open for panies will get their companies in Schedule. It is noted that set hours have not been laid out for the companies, the captains of companies are expected to make such arrangements between themselves as will be most suitable for themselves and their men.

It is suggested that on Saturday afternoon that the captains arrange that only one company will be at the range at a time, the balance to be drilling in the Armouries. We would again draw your attention to the fact that the shooting platform must be kept clear, and men not allowed to crowd on the platform. The officer in charge will be held strictly accountable if these rules are not carried out.

The Badges.

Members' badges have been presented to each individual to-night who have signed the Service Roll and sworn in. They will be worn on the left arm above the elbow. It is expected that the badge will be placed on the arm before leaving the member's residence and removed on returning to the residence. It is requested that men who are on duty on Thursday night and cannot attend drill, will wear the badges at their work, we particularly refer to street railway men, firemen and policemen.

Each member is expected to have the badge lined with some heavy material, and the ends hemmed and fastened together with elastic so as to preserve these badges and keep them in good shape. While the first issue has been presented to the men, all replacements will be charged at the rate of 25c each. Officer Rank badges have been issued to the officers, and they will pay the paymaster for the same. Non-Commissioned Officers' badges will be issuel to the company captains next week. Non-commissioned officers are expected to pay for their badges at cost.

A further issue of badges to those who have not yet received them will be made at the Armouries on Saturday afternoon at 3 o'clock, also Tuesday evening next at 8 o'clock.

The Commanding Officer hereby extends to the officers, non-commissioned officers and men, the wishes of a very Happy Christmas and a Prosperous New Year. By order, F. D. Kerr, Vaptain-Adjutant.

Commanding Officer Indisposed.

Col. Goodwill was unable to be present on account of a severe cold, his many friends will be pleased to know he will soon be on deck.

The several companies are beginning to shape up like veterans and by the time the contingent is established in Peterborough, they will be able to show the regulars how to drill.

It is noted that Officers' Rank badges are a shoulder strap on which the ranks are indicated by stars and crowns, as follows:

Honorary Colonel—2 stars, 1 crown
Colonel—1 star, 1 crown.
Major—1 crown.
Captains—3 stars.
Lieutenants—2 stars.

Non-Commissioned Officers' badges are worn on the arms in the regular manner.

Sergeant Major—4 inverted bars, surmounted by 1 crown.
Quartermaster-Sergeant—4 inverted bars, surmounted by 1 star.
Colour-Sergeant—3 bars, surmounted by 1 crown.
Sergeants—3 bars.
Corporals—2 bars.
Pioneer-Sergeants—3 bars with crossed axes.
Musketry-Sergeant—3 bars with crossed rifles.

Who to Salute.

Now that the commissioned officers are indicated by the shoulder straps, it is not only necessary, but also looks very soldier-like that the rules as to saluting be carried out properly. All commissioned officers, that is ranks from Honorary Colonel to Lieutenant, are entitled to a salute when addressed or passed by any other rank. When a non-commissioned officer is addressed, the party addressing should stand strictly at attention, they are not entitled to a salute. It should also be remembered that officers are expected to return the salute in the proper manner; nothing looks so slovenly as to see officers and men standing around addressing each other as Tom, Dick and Harry, instead of in the proper manner by their ranks.

Officers should be addressed as "Captain Jones," and non-commissioned officers as "Sergeant Smith," and private by their ranks as "Private Wilson." It must be remembered that the title of Private is just as honourable as that of Colonel, and these ranks should be used at all times. These rules which have been obtained from one of the lecturers of the corps, should be carefully studied, and as this city is expected to be one of the military headquarters, all slips of this nature will be very quickly noticed, and the Home Guard must be the leaders, and not be considered one of the secondary features of the military organizations of the country.

EARLY LIFE OF GREAT MERCHANT PRINCE SPENT IN PETERBOROUGH

Death of Jas. T. Carew in Cincinnati—Was Born in This City and Commenced Work in Fairweather's Store.

MANY RELATIVES HERE

Many of the older residents of Peterborough will learn with regret of the death of Joseph T. Carew of Cincinnati, whose early life was spent in this City. The late Mr. Carew who has many relatives here, had a phenomenal career, rising from an obscure clerk in the store of Fairweather & Co., formerly of this City, to one of Cincinnati's foremost business men, at the time of his death being a member of the firm of Mabley and Carew, proprietors of a mammoth department store. His illness was of very short duration, the news of his death coming as a great shock in the City where he had attained such prominence and success. Local relatives are J. D. Armstrong, Mrs. D. A. Hunter, Mrs. T. J. Walton, Mrs. P. L. Allison, and Mrs. Robert Sheridan. Other relatives are W. W. Armstrong, Regina, B. S. Armstrong, Cincinnati, and Mrs. A. Laing, Springville.

Referring to the death of the late Mr. Carew, the Cincinnati Enquirer, in part, says:

When the news was conveyed to the great Mabley & Carew stores, at Fifth and Vine streets, the floors were jammed with patrons buying holiday presents. Orders were given to close the doors, and the multitude of purchasers, each expressing a word of regret for the passing of this good and successful man, moved solemnly out and the big establishment was deserted by all except some of the employees.

Everywhere the death of Mr. Carew was regarded as a calamity. He was known and loved in every walk of life. His employees, more than 500 of them, could not hide their tears when they heard the sad tidings, and all over the city, in the clubs, business houses and wherever people congregate, there was nothing but sincere sorrow manifested for the loss of the great merchant, genial citizen, kind and just employer and patron of everything that tended to the improvement and betterment of Cincinnati.

Incidents of His Career.

Numerous incidents of his active career were recalled by those who enjoyed his confidence. His innate modesty and aversion to personal publicity, his constant acts of kindness, and his genius for business, with the rare faculty of securing tidings; and all over the city, in the clubs, these were spoken of along with other splendid qualities which made him a man among his fellows.

Mr. Carew was born in Peterborough, Canada, January 2, 1848. His father, Robert S. Carew, was an Irish gentleman who immigrated to America in the early forties, and the Carew family was one of the oldest and most respected in Erin, dating back to the twelfth century. The early education of Mr. Carew was acquired in Peterborough, but as a very young man he started in mercantile pursuits as a clerk in his native town for the house of Fairweather & Co. After a short experience there he went to Detroit and secured a place with C. R. Mabley in the Star Clothing House of that city. Young Carew developed so much talent that the shrewd Mr. Mabley recognized his possibilities, and rapidly advanced him until he became manager of the Detroit store. Deciding that he wanted to exert his talents in some other city Mr. Carew hit on Cincinnati as the place, attracted hither by advantages which he believed were beyond those of any other community.

Estates in Cincinnati.

In 1877 C. R. Mabley sent Carew to Cincinnati as manager of the Mammoth Clothing House, which was in one room on one floor of the site of the present vast establishment. For fear that Mr. Carew might start in business for himself Mabley made him a partner in the early eighties, and then was laid the foundation of the house of Mabley & Carew, which in 1894 became the Mabley and Carew Company.

While devoting most of his time to the growing business, Mr. Carew was frequently called upon to give his services for the benefit of his fellow citizens. He was prominent in most of the fraternal and civic organizations. He was a member of Lafayette Lodge of Masons, a Knight Templar, Shriner and Elk. No member of the Chamber of Commerce, Business Men's Club, Comercial Club, Piccadilly Club, Merchants and Manufacturers' Club or Queen City Club stood any higher or was more respected than he. Often Mr. Carew used to refer to what he considered the greatest honour ever bestowed upon him, when the Chamber of Commerce, in a body, marched to his store and through Howard Saxby, as spokesman, presented him with a golden key of the City. That was the incident in his life that Mr. Carew valued most, although he held numerous positions of distinction.

He was a member of one of the first park boards ever created in Cincinnati, and was also a director of the Cincinnati House of Refuge. On September 27, 1905, he was appointed a Trustee of the Cincinnati Southern Railway to succeed the late Samuel Hunt, father of former Mayor Henry T. Hunt. The death of Mr. Carew is the second in this board within a month, the other being Judge John R. Sayler."

PROSPECTS FOR THE MUNICIPAL ELECTION

In Havelock, Belmont and Methuen- Few Elections by Acclamation

Municipal matters are exceedingly quiet in Havelock, although nomination day is only a few days away. All the members of the Council, it is said, will stand for re-election, and in view of the fact that a special election will have to be held early in the new year in connection with the Hydro-Electric by-law, coupled with the fact that there is practically no issue to come before the electors, it is extremely probable that no one will have the temerity to force the expense of an election upon the municipality. It is also rumoured upon good authority that Reeve Kindred has been assured of the coveted Wardenship of the County should he be returned as head of the Village, and if such is the case he should certainly be elected by acclamation both as an honour for his work as Reeve during the past two years and to obtain the honour of the Wardenship for Havelock once more.

Messrs. Isaac Barlow, James Barlow and Edward Fennell are the members of the School Board, whose terms expire this year, and it is also altogether likely that three members for the Board will be elected by acclamation.

Township Municipal Affairs.

The prospects of an election in Belmont and Methuen are particularly promising. Rumour says that Reeve Wilde will seek re-election and that he will be opposed by Council lor Jas. Keehen or Mr. Wm. Griffith or indeed that both the latter gentlemen may be in the field. Mr. Marcenna Roylet is said to be out for the Council, and it is altogether likely that the present councillors will seek re-election.

Election matters in Asphodel and Dummer appear to be quiet this year and some are forecasting a return of the officers by acclamation. In Belmont too, election talk is said to be stopped, although Mr. W. Griffiths name is heard in connection with the reeveship as well as that of Reeve Wilde.

The Wider Use Of The Flag

The second meeting in connection with the movement for the wider use of the national flag will be held in the Bank of Montreal chambers to-night.

EGYPT IS TAKEN OVER

Sir Arthur MacMahon Takes Position Formerly Held by Lord Kitchener

LONDON, Dec. 18.—Egypt has been declared a British protectorate. This announcement was made officially last night.

The official press bureau last night issued the following statement concerning the making of Egypt a British protectorate:

"His Britannic Majesty's principal Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs gives notice that in view of a state of war arising out of the action of Turkey, Egypt is placed under the protection of his Majesty, and will henceforth constitute a British protectorate.

"The suzerainty of Turkey over Egypt is thus terminated, and his Majesty's Government will adopt all measures necessary for the defence of Egypt and the protection of its inhabitants and interests.

"The King has been pleased to approve the appointment of Lt.-Col. Sir Arthur Henry McMahon to be his Majesty's High Commissioner for Egypt."

Sir Arthur McMahon has been Foreign Secretary to the Government of India since 1911. He was born in 1862, and has had a long career in the military and political services, principally in India, Afghanistan and Persia. He has had charge of many missions of a military-political nature for the Indian Government and of commissions for the demarcation of boundaries. During the royal visit to India he was Master of Ceremonies to the King.

The proclamation of Egypt as a British protectorate was foreshadowed in recent despatches. On Nov. 3 Egypt was placed under martial law, and Maj.-Gen. Sir John Grenfell Maxwell, commander of the forces in Egypt, was placed in military control of the country.

Big Demand For Pulpwood

Mr. Jas. Thompson, M.P.P., has a contract with a big paper mill for all the pulpwood he can secure this winter, and the consequent labour involved in getting out the wood will provide hundreds with work this winter and help to make better times for those who otherwise would have nothing to do. Mr. Thompson is paying $4.00 per cord for spruce and $3.25 for balsam, or balsam and spruce mixed, at railway sidings. He expects at least 10,000 cords before April next.

RUSSIANS ARE FORMING A NEW BATTLE LINE

Von Hindenberg Has Been Able to Send Two Army Corps to Carpathian to Assist the Austrians—Flanking Movements of the Enemy Have Forced Russians to Alter Positions.

LONDON, Dec. 18—"The Russians are retiring along the entire front in Galicia and Poland."

This statement, officially issued at Vienna is the outstanding feature of last night's news from the battle-fronts.

While there is no confirmation of this from other sources, such a move on the part of the Russians would be quite in line with the announcements in despatches from Petrograd that the Russians, threatened on both flanks, had decided to take up new positions where they would be better able to meet the onslaughts which are being launched against them by the Austro-Germans from the Carpathians to the East Prussian frontier.

Should the Austro-German armies, as on previous occasions follow the Russians in Poland another big battle will soon be in progress, which may decide whether the Germans are to get to Warsaw or whether the Russians are again to threaten an invasion of Germany.

The delay of the Russians in fulfilling expectations that they would prove a serious menace to German territory is a disappointment to the peoples of the allied countries, but military men express the view that it is better for Russia that she should meet her foes in her own territory, where the means of communications would be more on an equality.

Flanking operations on a great scale are going on against the Russian armies in the eastern war area, according to the Petrograd correspondent of The London Times, who says that the German armies have been heavily reinforced, enabling Marshal von Hindenberg to send two corps to help the Austrians drive the Russians from the Carpathian passes.

An official report from Vienna tells of a sortie of the garrison of Przemysl and of successes in South Poland and Galicia.

A Turkish official statement claims a victory over the Russians in the Village of Van, Asia Minor. This is contradicted by a report of the Russian General Staff of the Caucasus. The Turkish statement tells of the shelling by a British cruiser of a Turkish water tower between Jopsa and Gaza Palestine. A British squadron shelled Turkish troops that had concentrated on Sunday on the coast of the Gulf of Saros, north of the Dardanelles.

The retreat of the Austrians from Servia is described as a disaster by a correspondent of The London Times, who went over the route, which was littered with bodies and military material of every kind.

Kaiser Anxious About Warsaw

LONDON, Dec. 16.—Hamilton Fyfe, the Daily Mail's correspondent, telegraphs from Petrograd:

"Over the eastern theatre of war the General Staff has drawn a thick curtain of secrecy. One corner slightly lifted shows the Russian pursuing a defeated German force to the East Prussian frontier. In another place we dimly discern an Austrian army struggling through the snowy Carpathians in the hope of drawing off the Russians from both Cracow and Przemysl.

"Cracow is the key of the German strategy. The Kaiser, for political reasons, also has been imploring his troops to capture Warsaw. According to the Bourse Gazette he has distributed to his soldiers a signed proclamation in which he says: 'Unless you take Warsaw I shall have to make peace for Germany under degrading conditions.'"

A Times Petrograd despatch says: "The Austrian columns are pouring over the Dukla passes into Galicia, and Grand Duke Nicholas records the fact without the slightest comment, and military men fully indorse his attitude of complete equanimity."

FIRST DETAILS OF BRITISH VICTORY ON THE ATLANTIC

About to Take Falklands—German Fleet Was on Way to Seize British Possessions and Did Not Expect to Find Warships

BUENOS AYRES, Dec. 15. — The first detailed accounts of the naval battle on Dec. 8 when four German cruisers were sent to the bottom reached here yesterday from Puerto Gallegos, Patagonia.

According to these accounts the Germans were on their way to seize the Falkland Islands, British possessions, when they came unexpectedly upon a lone British warship. The other members of the British fleet were taking on supplies from neighboring islands at the time. Before the Germans were aware of the strength of their opponents these ships closed in on them and the fate of Admiral von Spee's squadron was soon sealed.

The story of the battle was told by passengers on the British steamer Orissa, which arrived at Punta Arenas from Callao, Chile.

They say the losses of the British were placed at eight men.

It was a formidable British squadron which faced the Germans. Included in it were the battleship Canopus, the battle cruisers Invincible and Inflexible, and the cruisers Kent, Cornwall, Carnarvon, Bristol and Glasgow. It far outmatched in strength the German squadron, consisting of five cruisers — Scharnhorst, Gneisenau, Leipzig, Nurnberg and Dresden.

The British squadron arrived at Port Stanley, Falkland Islands, on Dec. 7, to take on supplies. The next morning the Canopus, which was guarding the entrance to the port, sighted a hostile warship. Four others quickly came into view and were recognized as the squadron of Admiral von Spee. The German warships had left the Chilean Islands of Juan Fernandez Nov. 15 for the Falkland Islands, to take possession of the islands and destroy the wireless station.

Only the Canopus was visible at first to the Germans, who steamed straight to her. The Canopus opened fire and the other British warships rushed to her assistance.

The Scharnhorst, Gneisenau and Leipzig formed in battle line. The Nurnberg and Dresden, however, dropped back from the firing line.

The British warships concentrated their fire on the Scharnhorst, which sank after an hour's fighting. When it became evident that the Scharnhorst, Admiral von Spee's flagship, was doomed, her crew assembled on the forward deck. The Scharnhorst refused to surrender and soon plunged beneath the waves. The crew preserved its formation as the ship went down and cheered as the waters closed over them.

The Glasgow engaged the Leipzig and sank her. The Gneisenau went down eight miles from Port Stanley. The Nurnberg attempted to escape, but after a pursuit of two hours was sunk. The Carnarvon pursued the Dresden, but was not swift enough to overhaul her and the German warship escaped.

After the battle the British picked up 194 Germans, including a few officers. Of these survivors 100 were from the crews of the two German colliers. An opportunity to surrender was offered the colliers, but it was refused and they were sunk.

The cruiser Cornwall was damaged slightly below the waterline. None of the other British warships were damaged.

On Dec. 10 funeral services were held for the eight British sailors who were killed, in the presence of the commanders and crews of the squadron.

The British Admiralty report of the battle stated that only seven men of the British squadron lost their lives.

Can Bankers Work on The Lord's Day

Charge Laid Against Local Clerks Under Old Upper Canada Statute —An Important Test Case

An important test case, and one which Mr. E. A. Peck, counsel for the defendants, says there is no precedent, was heard in the Police Court this morning. Three of the staff of the Bank of Commerce had commenced to ease the great pressure of business upon them, which has resulted from the added work of balancing the concern's books for the end of the year and of the month, by doing some work at the books on Sunday evening. The accountant of the bank made a statement this morning to the effect that he was working Sunday night. The added work of preparing certain statements of the year's and month's business for head office had put them behind in their routine work, and they were checking up the books on Sunday evening. He himself had repaired to the bank for that purpose. The other two young men had just happened in, and he asked them to assist him, which they did. They had just commenced when the police came in and informed them that they were breaking the law. They had no idea, up till then, that they were infringing upon the statutes, and they stopped work at once. It was not by any means a usual thing to work on Sunday, it being the first time he had ever done so in his present position.

Mr. E. A. Peck drew attention to the wording of the Act, which prohibits tradesmen, merchants, mechanics, workmen, labourers, or any person whosoever from pursuing their ordinary calling on the Lord's Day. Mr. Peck quoted certain decisions to show that the strictest interpretation should be placed upon the words "or any person whosoever." He referred Magistrate Dumble to the decision which ruled that lawyers, farmers and others were free to pursue their ordinary vocation on Sunday. He contended that the business of banking was not included in the Act.

The Magistrate reserved judgment until Monday, December 28th. The ruling will be an important one, as, if the banking business is included in the Act, so also are other forms of book-keeping, the business of lawyers and others. The section might even in the broadest interpretation include newspaper men.

Allies Have Made an Important Advance In Belgium.

PARIS, Dec. 18. — The Germans' left centre in Flanders is slowly but surely being turned by the allies.

Last night's official statement contains the following significant passage:

"In Belgium our troops have gained ground to the north of the road from Ypres to Menin."

This, taken in conjunction with the other advances made by the allies to the east of Ypres, shows that the Ypres salient has been straightened to the southeast, and it is now apparent that the line has been connected with that established by the British, which advanced to Passchendaele a week ago.

The advance made at Gheluvelt, where the afternoon statement says the allies have been able to strengthen their positions, enables the troops of Gen. Joffre to strongly support this new battle-front. The fighting in this region has been continuous since the allies resumed the offensive three days ago.

The terrible battle to the north, where, following the debouchment of the French and Belgians from Nieuport to occupy the line from the west of Lombaertsyde to the St. Georges farms, the Germans braved the combined fire of the French land batteries and of the British naval guns bombarding from the sea to attempt recapture of their lost ground, still rages violently.

The advance made to the western suburbs of Ostend Wednesday was in a great measure owing to the activity of the warships. The shelling by the heavy guns of the battleships made the German positions untenable, and owing to the punishment inflicted a number of their trenches were evacuated.

ELLIOT'S

Kaiser's Message To Joffre Saved Life of An Actor

Berlin Player Had Gone to Demand Surrender of Fort and Was Arrested as a Spy

BERLIN, Nov. 15.—It seldom falls to the lot of an actor to play a real soldier's part. But the German Empire takes all her sons into the army fold—from prince to peasant. So it fell out that Carl Clewing, one of the leading actors of the Royal Theatre in Berlin, is serving as a sub-officer with the German army at the Front in France.

His experience in trying to get a French fortress to surrender is as thrilling as any melodrama in which he has played.

After the great battles of Namur and St. Quentin, in both of which battles Clewing took part, he was sent on 2nd September with a small company in an automobile to demand the surrender of a French fortress. They carried an immense white flag and drove slowly, expecting to meet the enemy's outposts. But they were surprised at not seeing a Frenchman until they reached the fortress itself. There they suddenly found themselves surrounded by an angry crowd of French soldiers and civilians. They would no doubt have ended their journey right there had not a French colonel appeared and taken them under his protection.

The commander of the fort held a parley with a general staff officer and they refused to accept the explanations of the Germans and declined to surrender.

FREED BUT SOON SEIZED.

At first the little party with the white flag was conducted out under an escort of French cavalry and infantry, and after they had gone a short distance they were set at liberty. However, they were shortly afterwards seized by the outposts under instructions.

The whole party was blindfolded, and put in an open carriage and all that night and the next day they were driven from place to place along the Marne. At one time they were handcuffed and at another they were thrown singly into prison cells. Then they were conducted to a gendarme's barracks.

After several days of this treatment it was disclosed to them that the French general did not believe that they were parley officers. If they could not produce some better evidence of the truth of their statements concerning their appearance at the fort they were to be shot as spies.

As Clewing puts it in truly theatrical manner, "This was like a pistol pointed at the heart," for how could they offer explanations other than the truth. It was indeed an uncomfortable situation.

But the French had changed their minds by morning. From the Brigade Commander they were taken to the Commander of the Division, and from him to the Commanding General of the army corps, and at last up to the Commander-in-Chief, Gen. Joffre.

SAVED BY GEN. JOFFRE.

Gen. Joffre decided that the prisoners should be treated as parley officers, but that they would have to be detained for three weeks in order that they should not be able to give any information of the dispositions of the French troops which they might have seen during their journeying.

They were sent to Orleans and placed in dark rooms. Close guard was kept. Every step was watched. Two men were always on duty at the entrance of each prisoner's room. There was no courtyard in which to exercise. Thus they spent three uncomfortable weeks.

But the time of imprisonment finally expired and they were conducted under a heavy escort to a place near the Swiss frontier, where they were put down in an open field about 5 o'clock on a cold morning.

As no foreign soldiers in arms are permitted to cross the Swiss frontier without being interned as prisoners so long as the war may last, they were compelled to find their way back to their own army as best they could, skirting along the Swiss frontier. This did not prove as difficult as it at first seemed, because they found that they were only about seven miles from the German outposts.

After Clewing had rejoined his regiment he was summoned to Imperial headquarters at Charleville, near Sedan, and received the order of the Iron Cross from the Emperor's own hand. He also received the unusual distinction of an invitation to dinner at the Imperial table.

During the dinner the Kaiser said to his guest: "Do you know why you were finally released by Gen. Joffre?"

When Clewing confessed that he did not know, the Kaiser said very emphatically:

"Because after the report reached us that you were taken I had a message conveyed to Gen. Joffre through Switzerland that if my three missing parley officers did not return safe and sound within three weeks I would issue an order that 300 French prisoners of war in our hands should be shot."

Sing with all your might;

Drive away her night.
Love alone makes Christmas.
Love makes Christmas cheer,

Local Boy With R. C. D. At Salisbury

Trooper Cummiskey Writes Interesting Letter to The Examiner

The Examiner has received the following letter from a Peterborough boy, Trooper A. V. Cummiskey, who is with the Royal Canadian Dragoons at Salisbury Plain:

C. Squadron, Royal Canadian Dragoons, Pond Farm Camp, Salisbury Plain, England, Dec. nd, 1914.

Dear Friends in the Old Home Town,—It will no doubt interest you to know a little of my doings since enrolling in the R.C.D.'s in the great training camp at Valcartier, and as I have been requested a number of times to send a letter for publication, I will endeavour to give you a few facts.

We, the R.C.D.'s embarked on the White Star liner, R.M.S. Laurentic, with the first battalion (infantry brigade), and some of the Canadian Army Medical Corps. The living was practically the same as in ordinary passenger service, we cavalry men sleeping in the first and second class cabins. The daily routine was run on strict military lines, and strict discipline was maintained throughout the voyage. Physical drill parades filled up the mornings, with probably a short lecture on various points in the field service. The afternoons were generally free for letter writing, reading and brisk walks on the promenade deck. As you no doubt know, we were anchored for a week in Gaspe Bay off the Gulf of St. Lawrence, while the other transports took up their positions day by day. It was indeed a magnificent sight to see these thirty odd great steamships and liners all in position in three long parallel lines with an escort of four cruisers, as we steamed out of the bay. In mid-Atlantic we were joined by two battleships also. For several days we were entertained by the antics of large numbers of porpoises or dolphins — there is some doubt as to which they were. Altogether I enjoyed the ocean trip, and I was not sick at all. We encountered the roughest seas when entering the English channel and you can imagine how eagerly we looked for the first bit of the Old Country.

Passing the famous Eddystone lighthouse we sailed up into Plymouth harbour late in the afternoon, and such a welcome greeting did the Plymouth folks give us. The docks were crowded with people, young and old, women, girls, children, men and boys—everybody cheering and waving hats and handkerchiefs.

During the two or three days we lay at anchor in the harbour, boatloads of people cruised around us, also giving us a cheery welcome.

Our last meal on the boat was a dinner one Saturday. That afternoon we disembarked and marched to another docks to unload the sorry-looking horses from off the "Lakonia." Many of them were very weak and some were sorely wounded—five were shot right on the quay.

We led the frightened steeds (by head ropes, two or three to a man) to feed and water, prepared by the blue jackets. Then we ate our own thin meal of "hard tack" and cheese and washed it down with cold tea from our water bottles. Directly our brief rest and repast was over we started out on the four-mile march to the railway station, still leading the horses, which were already reviving from the effects of their three weeks' sea trip, through the crowded thoroughfares of Devonport and Plymouth. Everyone wanted to shake hands with us, and the pretty damsels filled our pockets with fruit, chocolates and cigarettes. We could not have been received better if we had just returned from the field of battle.

Without much difficulty the horses were entrained, likewise ourselves, and late in the evening we pulled out for the training grounds of Salisbury Plain.

Amesbury was our train destination, and arriving there about 6 a.m. we immediately, with not a bite to eat, started out on the eleven mile trudge to Pond Farm Camp, stopping frequently to feed the animals on grass. They sure were getting spirited, but they were too weak to be mounted.

The middle of Sunday afternoon saw us into our new canvas quarters, in close proximity to a well stocked canteen, which we raided with what Canadian money we had left.

From then till now we have had very few dry days—it is one perpetual season of rain, and we move around in thick, watery mud. We had one spell of hard, frosty weather in November, but not enough to dry things up at all. Constantly, the horse lines have had to be shifted, and it is a wonder how the poor domesticated beasts can stand the long, rainy nights, which are generally accompanied by a howling gale.

The days are spent in extensive cavalry manoeuvres and grazing parades, which constitute scouting, galloping into position and taking cover and charges.

There has been some talk of us shifting into huts or other cosier winter quarters for weeks, but there is not definite prospect yet, and we are still living a reptile-like life in the mud. Most of us have purchased rubber boots and we have recently been issued with overshoes, but we are all fed up with this spot on Salisbury Plain.

I had one real pleasure lately and that was a three-day "pass" to London. That place is "some village" and I sure had a good time. There was so much to see, however, and so short a time, that it all seemed like a brilliant dream when I landed back here ——in the mud!

FIRST HOCKEY PRACTICE HELD LAST NIGHT

The first gun in the hockey campaign was fired last night when the Peterborough Hockey Club had its first practice of the season. A splendid sheet of ice, so smooth that the players found difficulties in getting their "sea legs" was ready, and the squad had a good loosening up. No lineup was attempted but the players had a profitable hour's work. Juniors and Intermediates were out together, with the Juniors in the majority. The Intermediates on the job were Maurice Park, Cyril Giroux, Grover Halpin, Murray Widdifield and Paton. Among the Juniors out were Long, Knapman and Richardson of last year's team, Morrow, who played with the Juniors season before last; Jackson of the Y.M.C.A. Junior City League and C.G.E. tool room teams. O'Connell of the Alerts, Junior City League team; A. Austin, C. Martin and Leo Picard.

CHELSEA OFFICIAL'S STINGING REPLY TO THE ARGUMENT

"A certain newspaper informed its readers that at a particular match there were 30,000 spectators and not one would enlist. The fact was that the attendance was 14,852 and of that number 6,702 were soldiers or sailors in uniform, and 783 were boys under 14 years of age, added to which there was not a recruiting officer on the ground."

Above is the stinging reply of a Chelsea Football Club official to those who are onducting a campaign against the continuance of soccer in Britain during the war.

Shut All Up.

In connection with the same question the "Sporting Life" of Dec. 1st states:

Meetings big with the fate of professional football were held yesterday in London and Manchester.

In the afternoon Lord Kinnaird, accompanied by Mr. F. J. Wall, secretary of the Football Association, and other gentlemen interested in football, had a conference with Mr. Tennant at the War Office, when matters of great importance affecting the national pastime were discussed.

It is understood that the proposed formation of a battalion of footballers was also considered. The proceedings were strictly private.

The Management committee of the Football League met at Manchester and decide to reaffirm the decision to continue the game, and to send a copy of the resolution to the Football Association.

Representatives of London professional clubs held a meeting last night, and unanimously passed the following resolution:

"Whilst strongly of opinion that the present agitation of a certain section of the daily London Press is unscrupulous, unwarrantable, and undignified ,and wholly opposed to English traditions, and an abuse of the liberty given to the press, this meeting of representatives of London professional football clubs is nevertheless prepared to discontinue the game and close the grounds simultaneously with the closing of race-courses, golf links, theatres, music-halls, and picture palaces, and kindred entertainments."

More Facts.

There were at the beginning of the season 306 registered professionals in London, and of those 56 were now serving with the forces, equal to 18 per cent. Of the 250 remaining, 156 were married, leaving only 94 unmarried players, and several of them were responsible for the maintenance of homes.

A London club director writes: 'We cannot get through this season at less cost than £15,000, whether we go on or shut down. Will those who wish to stop the game inform us where we are to get the money from if we stop playing? Do they suggest we should be dishonourable enough to repudiate our liabilities?"

Warren, the Newcastle United halfback, has followed the example of other members of the club, and has joined the colours. Following the precedent established in the case of Hardy, the club have decided to make an allowance to Warren's dependents until the end of the season.

JUNIORS PRACTICE TO-NIGHT

Full Turnout Is Expected At Brock St. Rink

The Peterborough Junior O.H.A. team will practice again to-night at 7 o'clock at Brock Street Rink, and every player who wants a chance should be out to-night as the squad will be weeded out after this practice. With a big crowd on the ice there is little chance for real work and on this account it is necessary that the squad should be cut down to reasonable proportions as soon as possible. Thank to the Junior City League, and Mercantile League the manager has had a good chance to size up the different players, and it will not be a difficult matter to cut down the young players who may not be selected for the first squad this year should not feel discouraged. Their turn is coming and they should try for places on the Church League teams and other local leagues where their work will be watched and from which they will have a chance to graduate into O. H. A. company.

BASKETBALL

Last night saw another fast game of basketball in the Y.M.C.A. when the Bankers and the Excelsiors met to play off their postponed game. The first half was very fast and even game did either team have the advantage to any extent, in fact the game was in doubt right up to the time Bartlett at centre for the Bankers played a most aggressive game and his team but all of the other men on the team worked well and enabled Bartlett to score nine baskets. Smith and Jeppson held down the forward positions for the Bankers while Mulhern and Panter played a good game of defence. The Excelsiors showed their old time pep and their score machine started right from the first to do business. Knapmann and Long divided the honours at forward while Stuart with his long reach was a tower of strength for them at centre. What Hamilton and Lewis lacked in size they made up for in grit and sticking ability at guards and both proved themselves to be able to hold down their job in good shape. First half ended with a score of 13 to 12 in favour of the Excelsiors while the final score was [illegible] in favour of the Excelsiors.

In the Intermediate League Jones' Highlanders clashed with Hamilton's Allies and one of the fastest game in this league was the result. During the most of the game it was a see-saw back and forth, first one team and then the other leading. It would be hard to pick any individual stars, as the boys all played well and proved that there is a great future in basket ball for the local Association. The Highlanders succeeded in winning by the small margin of 2 points, the final score being 12 to 10.

Line up of Seniors:

Intermediates:

Allies: Hamilton, Pringle, Lebar, Dorrill, Blake. Highlanders: Jones, Pidgeon, Thorndyke, Gray, Williams

Commission To Inquire.

LONDON, Dec. 18.— A committee composed of Viscount Bryce, Sir Frederick Pollock, Sir Edward Clarke, Sir Alfred Hopkinson, Professor Fisher and Harold Cox has been appointed by Prime Minister Asquith to make an inquiry into the accusations of outrage and breaches of the laws of war committed by Germany.

The Premier had promised Parliament that he would appoint such a commission.

Inquest Held At Hartlepool

Pathetic Episodes Revealed at Probe Into German Raid

HARTLEPOOL, Eng., Dec. 18.— (Via London.) — An inquest began here yesterday over the bodies of 78 victims of the German bombardment, killed in Hartlepool and West Hartlepool.

In opening the court, the coroner said that never before in English history had an inquest been held under similar circumstances, and that he hoped the occasion would never occur again. The shelling of the Hartlepools, he added, afforded a faint idea of what Belgium and France had suffered through the German invasion.

The evidence, though mostly of a formal character, brought to light some pathetic cases: An old woman was picking up coal dropped from cars on the railway embankment when she was killed by a shell. An old man and his two daughters were just starting breakfast in the kitchen when a shell burst in the room, killing all three of them. A young woman went to the house of her aged mother, intending to conduct her to a place of safety. Entering the passageway she stumbled across her mother's body. A shell had pierced the roof and killed her. An elderly man, who thought the gun-firing was that of British ships at practice, sat down unconcernedly to breakfast. A shell carried away the corner of his house, killing his two little grandchildren.

The verdict rendered by the coroner's jury was that the deaths of the 79 persons weer due to bombardment of the twin boroughs "by an enemy who, under cover of a dense fog, fired shot and shell into the towns, killing many unarmed civilians."

Although at a late hour last night the official estimate of the casualties was 82 persons killed and about 250 injured, many of the wrecked houses have not been explored, and it is believed the list of dead eventually will reach 100.

Mr. Burnham On Contract

Member Confesses He Did Not Get Any Orders For Local Manufacturers

To the Editor of The Examiner:

Sir,— The trouble in which your noble soul is travailing with regard to the propriety of ""The Member's" going "right down" to Ottawa and signing contracts for local firms will probably never be allayed in this world. I agree with you that if the firms themselves want business they have got to go after it, but when they are invited to do so and not before. A nice mess things would be in at Ottawa if 225 M.P.'s accompanied by half a million employers of labour and probably the employees themselves, the local clergymen and the Salvation Army and any others you can think of—say, for example, the Fire Brigade—marched on Parliament Hill. No, even government business is positively not done in that way. The way in which it is done is this: Those firms which want government business (and I have sent three to Ottawa in the last two days) apply to the member for a "recommendation" whisch means a statement by the member that in his opinion the applicant is worthy of confidence. In Peterborough I have placed all (Grit and Tory) on who have asked me. They have all been reputable people. After that it is "up to" them. Did I get Mr. Kendry his contracts; Mr. Ackermans his, the Lock Works, Turner & Sons, their's, the Wm. Hamilton Co., or Mr. Gunsolus his, etc., etc.? I certainly did not. If I started to "represent" business of all kinds I might get tied up if asked a few difficult questions. Now, the only other supposition, viz., that the government, as I said above, is open to pressure en masse by members, etc., etc., is plainly absurd. Reports in newspapers are often made for political purposes, and plainly are not intended except for the innocent. Then again, Peterborough is getting all the government work she can handle. This city has not been neglected by anybody. But as you say, if people want to get on the "recommended" list let them get on, and I promise to place them on if of good report, for I will not compromise myself by "careless" work. Then let them show their wares in the proper place. But that's their business, not mine. That is the usual and proper way of doing business, both the British and American way, and the way that appeals to governments as to individuals, and to all people who have been in business over a week. I am aware that your criticism is not acid or wanton, but you lay yourself open to a multitude of charges when you suggest that an M.P. can by mere political pull or brass, "compel" a government to do the "right thing" by a constituency. Our "table manners" appear to have been neglected. We really must not expect everything. Let us be content with our share. There are others. I am aware it is often apparently plain that push and pull will get the door open, but take my word for it that is NOT the way government business is done; at any rate at such a time as this.

Thanking you,

J. H. BURNHAM.

TO TREAT MAD SOLDIERS

Russia Is Recruiting a Corps of Nerve Specialists

WARSAW, Dec. 18.—A new first aid corps consisting of nerve specialists for the treatment of soldiers who have become insane during battle has been organized.

The necessity for this form of treatment is growing as the result of the intensity of the nervous strain under which the soldiers are fighting.

An instance in point is the case of a second lieutenant who escaped unwounded from a fight in which there were only thirteen survivors out of 240 men. He is a mental wreck.

It is said that there are many similar cases.

Ty Cobb's Birthday

Georgia Peach Is 28 Years Old To day

To-day is Ty Cobb Day, for the Peerless Peach, who has had the title of "Greatest Baseball Played in History," wished on him by adulatious fans, was born in the eighteenth of December, 1886. As 1886 from 1914 leaves twenty-eight, we dope it out that Tyrus Raymond Cobb is holding his twenty-eighth birthday. Let mathematical experts who disagree with those figures speak up now or forever hold their peace.

The birth date of the greatest of modern heroes is well authenticated and beyond dispute, but two different towns in Georgia claim the distinguished honour of being the scene of the arirval in this world of the great and only Ty. Royston, a village in Franklin County, Ga., is usually specified as the birthplace of the Peach, and the citizens of Royston have never done anything to dissipate that notion. There seems to be good ground for the belief that the glory really belongs to Narrows, in Banks County. In any event, Ty is a Georgian, and the innocent bystander will be perfectly willing to let it go at that and permit Royston and Narrows to settle their own feud. 'Tisn't always healthful to butt into quarrels like that.

While Tyrus, for a consideration said to be the largest ever given to a ball player, wears a Detroit label on his buzzum during the summer months, he is still a Georgian, suh. He will accept the filthy lucre of the no' the 'nehs, and play ball for 'em, but his heart dwells ever in the Empire State of the Southland. He is fiery and impetuous, as he demonstrated a few months ago when he waded into a Detroit butcher after a dispute over the purchase of some fish. Ty had to pay a $50 fine imposed by an unfeeling Detroit police magistrate, but he proved that it isn't safe to "rile" a son of Georgia.

Cobb usuany spends his winters in his native State. Next to playing ball, he likes to hunt. Not long ago he made a hunting trip which netted numerous wild turkey and a deer.

Ty came of an excellent Georgia family, his father having been a country editor who also served as mayor of Royston and member of the Georgia Senate. Cobb's younger brother, Paul, sought to emulate Ty's record, but he has never climbed higher than a minor league berth. Ty's eminent friend, Christy Mathewson, also has a kid brother, Hank, who has performed at first base on minor league clubs. It would be too much to expect the lightning of such genius as Ty's or Christy's to strike twice in the same family.

WANTED—A LIMITED QUANTITY OF HOME-MADE SOCKS

A LETTER OF HAPPINESS

A Message to the Mismated and a Question

A Message to the Mismated and a Question.

Welcome the following letter to the "Letterbox," as it is a refreshing glimpse of a happy married life and tells us also why these two fortunate people are happy. With a wife with such an ideal of married life, how could it be different?—Boston Sunday News.

To "One Who Knows Not," Auburn Avenue:

This is the answer—love, love, love!

This blessed old world is dying for a litle bit of love. Fathers and mothers, how are you teaching your sons and daughters to regard the marriage relation? Is it simply a legitimate gratification of certain physical inclinations, and possibly a financial benefit for one or both parties concerned? Are you instilling into their nature by precept and example that it is the most sacred bond in the world, next to the tie between the soul and its Redeemer?

That it is the union of two hearts loving each other supremely, bearing and forbearing as the years roll by with their measure of joy and sorrow?

A beautiful, peaceful blending of two natures and two lives into one divine tie, that time or grief or pain but makes the stronger?

"Oh, it is love, love, love we need here as everywhere. I have heard it said that there were several young married women in Buffalo, who had become dissatisfied with their homes because their husbands could not give them all that Peggy had.

If you married for what your husband could give you, you are worthy of nothing.

Let me tell you of one woman who is perfectly satisfied.

Do you know there is nothing in this world that satisfies but love? In this home I want to assert of there is comfort—not luxury; there is a world of love there, and we are not ashamed to say each day as we take up the routine of life, "I love you, Dear."

I know it sweetens the whole day for me as I plan things for his comfort and pleasure, and I believe it helps him as he works for me. Here is the key, the answer to the whole problem, and it is our life motto: "The House Beautiful."

Where there is faith there is love.
Where there is love there is peace.
Where there is peace there is God.
Where there is God there is no need.

MRS. F., 89 Edna Pl., City.

Not a Government Measure.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 18. — Assurances have been given the British Government by the State Department that the bill introduced by Senator Hitchcock to prohibit entirely the export of munitions of war and arms and war supplies to belligerent countries was not fathered by the administration.

Secretary Bryan declined yesterday to make any comment upon the merits of the measure, and no other official of the administration has discussed it.

German Vessel Sunk.

PETROGRAD, Dec. 18.—It was officially announced yesterday that the steamer Derentie, of the German Levantine Line, was found navigating off the Turkish coast, near Kerasunt and was sunk by a Russian warship after all on board the merchantman had been ordered to leave.

Only two Turkish officers and twelve soldiers obeyed the order, and the others went down with the ship.

Kerasunt is a seaport of Asiatic Turkey, 70 miles west of Trebisond, on the Black Sea.

RECORD FOR SPEED

New British Light Cruiser Caroline Was Laid Down on Jan. 28.

LONDON, Dec. 18. — A record in the building of war vessels was announced by the Admiralty Office yesterday.

The shipbuilding firm of Cammell, Laird & Co., of Birkenhead, yesterday delivered to the British navy the light cruiser Caroline, which was laid down in the Cammell, Laird & Co. yards on the Cheshire side of the river Mersey, opposite Liverpool on Jan. 28, 1914, was launched on Sept. 21 and proved satisfactory in her trials on Dec. 15.

The Caroline is the first of a new type of light cruiser in the British navy. Appropriation for eight vessels, which will burn oil and develop a speed of twenty-nine knots an hour, was made at the same time. The completion of the Caroline gives the British navy a faster boat than any in the German squadrons. The seven sister ships of the Caroline, all of which are now building, are the Gallhope, Carysfort, Champion, Cleopatra, Comus, Conquest and Cordelia.

MAKING THE MOST OF IT.

Gallant German Fleet Shelled Fortified Places, Say Berlin Papers.

BERLIN, Dec. 18. — (Via Amsterdam and London.)—Concerning the shelling of Scarborough and Hartlepool, The Berliner Tageblatt says:

"Again our naval forces, facing the danger of the scattered mines in the North Sea, shelled English fortified places."

The Deutsche Tages Zeitung expresses satisfaction with the attack, especially immediately after the naval battle off the Falkland Islands.

The Berlin Neusten Nachrichten has this comment: "This time it is not a daring cruiser trick with the transitory throwing of a bomb, but a regular bombardment of fortified places, which is a new voucher for the gallantry of the navy."

Two British Fatalities.

LONDON, Dec. 18.—Major Baxon, Worcestershires, is killed and Lieut. Aitchison, King's Own Lancasters, is dead of wounds, according to last night's British casualty list.

Berlin Loses Heavily.

AMSTERDAM, Dec. 18. — (Via London.)—Berlin newspapers reaching here declare that a majority of the 70,000 residents of Berlin who went to the front have lost their lives.

Other statistical information given by these papers is that of the organized workers of Germany, who number 661,000, about 31 per cent. are now in active military service.

War Insurance Reduced.

LONDON, Dec. 18. — The Government yesterday announced further reductions in the premiums on marine insurance under the war risks insurance scheme. The rate on a single voyage is reduced from twenty to fifteen shillings, and on a round voyage of three months the policy is reduced from forty to thirty shillings.

Allies Advanced Nearly Three Miles

Allies' Gains Most Important Since The Battle of The Aisne

Have Driven Lines Several Miles Northeast of Arras And Are Getting Close to Ostend--Are Also Within Striking Distance of Important Lines of Communication--German Assaults Repulsed.

Special Cable:

PARIS, Dec. 19.—Moving northeast from Arras in force the French and British troops to-day hold ground representing the most important gain they have made since Arras was occupied following the battle of the Aisne.

ADVANCE OF TWO AND ONE-HALF MILES.

For the first time in two months positions east of Arras are in possession of the Allies. Fighting is reported in progress to-day in the outlying districts of St. Laurent and Blangy. This represents an advance of two and one-half miles for the Allied trops. Importan advances also are reported from Armentieres.

Roulers is again reported to have been captured by the Allies, and fighting is reported in progress in the outskirts of Lille.

The Allied advance along the coast is declared to continue to-day, and the Germans are back within ten miles of Ostend.

THE IMPORTANCE OF THIS DRIVE.

The greatest importance is attached to the advance from Arras, however. At that place the railway which serves as the main line of communication from the French branches off northwestward, where it runs into the German lines and becomes the trunk of the German's railway system for transportation of supplies and ammunition. The Germans have kept great forces in the region of Arras because of the importance of guarding this portion of the line.

Between Arras and La Bassee repeated attempts have been made to pierce the Allied line. All have been repulsed, and the attack of the French and British is now carrying them in an advance along the River Scarpe and the railway leading from Arras to Douai.

Russian Line Holding Firm

German's Claim of Victory is Very Much Premature

LONDON, Dec. 18.—There has been no great Austro-German victory in Poland, such as the people of Berlin celebrated yesterday. This much is made clear by the news both official and unofficial to-night from the Russian, German and Austrian capitals. Undoubtedly the Russian forces have been made to retreat on the front between the Vistula and the Carpathians before tremendous concentrations of the enemy west of Warsaw and south of Cracow. The invasion of Silesia has been rendered impossible for the time being. That the Russians have been crushed is, however, amply disproved by the official statements of both sides, and it appears to-night that a stubborn, and so far quite successful, opposition to further German advances is being made by the Russian army in front of Warsaw.

North of the Vistula to the East Prussian frontier the offensive movement of the Russian troops in that region seems to be continued without interruption, while at the other end of the line in the Carpathians there are indications that the expedition of a new Austrian army through the passes from Hungary as met with disaster, and that the promised relief of Przemysl is as far off as ever.

Greece and Turkey On Brink of War

Special to The Examiner:

LONDON, Dec. 18.—A despatch from Athens states that Greece has decided to declare war on Turkey.

A despatch from Rome says that it is reported in diplomatic circles that Greece will declare war on Turkey within twenty-four hours.

NO BRITISH SHIPS LOST IN THE RAID

Special to The Examiner:

LONDON, Dec. 18.—The Admiralty has issued a statement denying that any British warships were lost during the recent raid by a German squadron on the east coast of England.

The German account claims that two British destroyers were sunk by the raiding vessels.

Trades and Labour Notes

Peterborough, Dec. 18, 1914.

There was a good turn out again this week, being the final meeting for 1914 of Peterborough's Trades and Labour Council. President J. J. Hartley was in the chair. It is worthy of note that the presiding officer of the past year has been absent from his post but once, with the very good reason of his being out of town on that occasion.

The Musicians' Delegate.

In response to a missive from Secretary Wm. Stevens, George Chambers of the local A. F. of M. referred that official to Mr. Nicholls of the same local. Mr. Nicholls reply was a curt letter which amounted practically to a pointed injunction that Mr. Stevens should mind his own business. More than this will be expected from Mr. Nicholls later on.

Underpaid Workmen.

The committee appointed to look into the case of an employee at the Auburn Woollen Mills reported that no notice had been taken of the solicitor's letter sent the firm. Another employee of the mills received the sum of $4.50 for 96 hours' night work, this man having entered his production in a private book and finding at the end of two weeks' effort that his amount and that of the office differed widely.

Another complaint is that a day's pay was donated the Patriotic Fund without the men's consent.

McGregor a Labour Candidate.

A representative from the Pattern Makers' announced that R. McGregor would run as aldermanic candidate. A committee was named to assist and appeared anxious to work for Mr McGregor' success. The Council have other men who are willing, but have not the necessary property qualification. During the discussion it was mentioned that Mr. Burnham was strongly in favour of abolishing this handicap, and legislators of a similar build are desirable from the workers point of view.

One Man, One Job.

There was a kick coming about the Council's choice of poll clerks. This job was given to men who already had sufficient, apparently, of lifes' necessities. Why not give the job to men who are minus employment through no fault of their own, of which Peterborough possesses its full quota.

Election of Officers.

The annual election of officers will be held the second meeting in January. It was felt that probably all new delegates for 1915 would not be nominated by the date of the first meeting.

Another Misguided Barber.

The Henderson barber shop, next the Little Windsor, on Brock Street, has surrendered its card.

A Treat in Store.

Mr. Carey, Ontario representative of the A. F. of M. is to be asked to pay Peterborough a visit, with which request he no doubt will accede.

An Irishman's Raise.

The boys who assisted our gallant posties with sleighs at Christmas during the rush, were recompensed at the rate of 75c. per day in past years. This year it is thought that married men out of work may take the job, so the sum has been increased to $1.00.

Labour Hall is Open All Day.

The Labour Hall is open to all who may care to enjoy its shelter whilst idle this winter.

The Season's Greetings.

The President closed the last meeting of the year with a few appropriate remarks, concluding with the old familiar greeting, "Happy Christmas and a glad New Year."

DON'T LET CORNS TORMENT YOU.

Use Putnam's Corn Extractor, which cures Corns in one night, without pain. For 30 years Putnam's has been the standard cure of Great Britain and America. Try it.

"THE BATTLE CRY"

Charles Neville Buck

CHAPTER I.

At that particular moment Juanita Holland could feel nothing but pride and love for the young man whose figure mingled with the other seven in a picture of spirited colour. Against the verdant background of the polo field there were eight, but all save one seemed negligible.

The afternoon sun was sloping in amber drifts across the space where the ponies kicked up the turf and the silks of the team colours snapped like pennants about the straining shoulders of the players. It caught and edged the new springtime greenery with a margin of soft yellow. It flashed brightly upon pongee helmets and blue silk caps and splashed against the reeking flanks of the ponies. Of the hats and gowns along the white flagstoned terrace of the Bryn Mawr club-house, it made a great bouquet of nodding flowers, a bouquet which it caressed.

Juanita Holland sat near the front and as some of the other girls smiled knowingly at her parted lips and fixed eyes, their glances travelled to an engagement ring and the fashion in which the slender hand it adorned clenched itself in the tensity of her interest.

The board announced a score of four to three and a quarter in favour of the Reds and the man whom her eyes followed played Number Two for the Blues. In the fraction of another minute the referee's whistle would end the last period and the game would be over. So when, from a tangled scrimmage and a stamping confusion in midfield, the girl saw the comet-like outshoot of a willow ball followed, close as a shadow follows, by the shapes of a pony and a man she knew, it is not wonderful that her blue eyes flushed into sparkle and the tender curves of her lips tightened, then parted.

There was now a chance: a small, remote embryo of a chance for turning defeat into victory just on the fringe of the combat—with a truly driven goal.

Juanita Holland herself knew the feel of a polo mallet and the intricacies of the game, and she knew that such a reversal of the issue could come only from a jockey's judgment of pace and a blacksmith's power of hitting.

The blossoming hats nodded like an old-fashioned garden stirred in a sudden breeze. The men broke off talk with words half finished. The white ball had risen and soared like a wingless bird and had come to earth rolling onward in a true line toward the goal posts. Seven ponies wheeled, scampering, and dashed with eight mallets held forward and upstretched above their necks, but a few yards in their lead raced a blood-bay mare with her forelegs tucked under her safe from the mallet's play. Across the field one could make out the red spot of an eagerly distended nostril and the strain of satin-coated muscles. Bending forward from her saddle with his eye fixed on the travelling ball, rode Roger Malcolm, menaced a length behind by the Red Number Three, who was driving his mount to its last ounce of stamina. There, too, cutting out at an angle to meet them, came the Red goal guardian making a heroic effort to get up and slash the ball back out of peril. It was one of those tense, hard-breathing, leather-creaking moments when the issue hangs on a split-hair balance of steady nerve and lightning speed. Then as the Red Number Three brought his pony's muzzle to the blood bay's rump, the Red goal guardian slashed viciously at the willow sphere — and passed by with a misjudged stroke. A cry went up from the gallery and again the sharp, clear impact of mallet on ball snapped across the field like the crack of a mule-whip and again the ball rose and soared—this time cleanly between the goal posts. As the man who had saved the day for the Blues wheeled his pony and started to canter back to the centre of the field, the final whistle shrilled the finish.

"One of Roger Malcolm's miracles," commented a Red Sympathizer with a shrug. "Four and a quarter, to four; but I'm bound to say they won it neatly. The man's a wiz."

Leisurely the crowd began drifting from its centre toward club-house and parked vehicles, but as Juanita Holland's glance fell on the diamond she wore her eyes abruptly lost their trance-like eagerness and deepened into involuntary betrayal of pain, as of one who is awakened from a pleasant dream to unwelcome reality.

"He was at his best then," she said to herself without words. "He is always at his best—when he plays."

She stood idly waiting for him while the crowd thinned, and her face still wore a troubled abstraction. She saw him dismount and turn his pony over to a groom. She watched him shouldering his way toward her, impatient even of the delays caused by those who insisted on handshakes of congratulation. Though she was much younger than he, the curve of her lips shaped a faint smile of indulgence, such as one may wear for an eager child, as she read the boyish glow of his eyes and realised how much all this meant to him.

He was a clean, fine type—if all a man need be is honest, courteous and accomplished. He was strong and played his games with reckless abandon, if the strength of courage can exist in a soul that demands nothing more than the playing of games. He had always been deferentially anxious to do whatever she had asked of him—except to grow up. Of these things she thought as he made his way to her side.

"Dearest," he whispered, "will you wait for me while I change and let me drive you home?"

She shook her head, and realizing that she alone had not congratulated him, forced a radiant graciousness into her smile.

"It was splendid, Roger," she declared with an echo of transitory enthusiasm in her eyes, which lighted them like violets in the sun. "I don't believe any one else could have done it."

The young man's face glowed though he responded with self-depreciation.

"We all have our lucky moments. It was pretty much of an accident."

"In polo—" the thrill for a moment died in the girl's voice—"one must make the lucky moment. You do it uncommonly well—in polo."

He caught the separate emphasis of her last two words and his brows contracted in an expression of sudden pain. "Meaning," he inquired quietly, "that I do only the trivial things well? I cite you the Biblical injunction, dear. 'What thy hand findeth to do—'"

"One's hand might hunt for things to do, but I'm not going to lecture you now. I'm saving that for this evening."

"Meanwhile may I drive you home?"

"Not to-day, Roger. I want to think and so I'm going to walk, but you can come over to dinner. There won't be any one else, the evening will be devoted to—" she paused, then added—"to your lecture."

The man smiled and made an impulsive movement to reach for her hand, then realizing that the terrace was not yet quite deserted, he restrained the impulse and laughed.

"Is it so serious as all that?"

The girl met his laughter with wide and very serious eyes. It even seemed to Malcolm that there was a little catch in her voice.

"It is to me," she said quietly. "I shall look for you at seven."

Juanita nodded and started toward the gates, and after a moment the man also turned and made his way to the showers.

As she followed the gravel walks roses were massed along her way and hedges sparkled with a delicacy which the sun had not yet burned. The last of the polo ponies went by, blanketed and led by grooms. As they paraded to the stables they picked up their feet gingerly and pranced in dainty scorn of fatigue. In them as in their riders there seemed to dwell the paramount instinct of sportsmanship.

It was all very pleasant and full of charm: the charm of glad young summer and trimmed lawns and lengthening velvety shadows: of opulence and ease.

At the stone gateposts of her own grounds where honeysuckle clambered and where a little stream trickled down through the trimmed box-rows, her great Dane stood waiting to meet her, wriggling his tawny body as he waved his tail in greeting.

He lumbered about her and thrust up his huge muzzle to her cool fingers while his eyes glowed with an affection that gave a ludicrous lie to the ferocity of their reddened haws. When she handed him a glove to carry he set it gingerly betwen his leonine fangs and strutted at her side with the exaggerated pomp of a canine cake-walker.

"Dany Holland!" she suddenly exclaimed, and a choke came into her voice. "Roger gave you to me the same day he gave me my ring. That was a year ago and I was very happy. I'm not happy any more, Danny-dog, and you are the first person I've told about it. In that year you've grown up from a puppy, but in many years he hasn't grown at all."

She glanced about her, but she and the dog were between the shrubberies of the lawn and cut off from the turnpike by the tall box hedge. They were quite alone. Suddenly the girl dropped to her knees and seized her great, clumsy confidant about his mastiff neck.

"I'm afraid—I'm terribly, sickeningly afraid, Danny Holland, he never will grow up—and so I'm going away to leave you both."

If the dog realized the true enormity of that threat, he masked his grief as a chivalric dog should mask his deeper emotions. He waved his tail with grave, unhurried dignity and thrust his head around to gaze sympathetically into his mistress's face. If for the moment he forgot his low caste and the high estate of the beautiful lady and allowed himself to caress her bowed chin with his big tongue, the impertinence may have been pardonable.

At all events she did not rebuke him. She only picked up the glove he had dropped and gave it back into his keeping. She dashed her hand self-contemptuously across her eyes and when she went into the door to dress for dinner no one could have guessed that a few minutes before she had been on the verge of tears.

* * * * *

The moon was near her fullest argency that evening and the clambering roses nodded in her light in Juanita Holland's garden. Shadows laid black velvet patches across a stretch of silver grey.

From the nearest house, separated by grounds that were in reality small parks, came a happy chorus of young voices, and the songs that they sung were suited to the night; a night when spring fancies itself summer.

In the soft luminance and the dusky shadow-smudges the girl and the man came out to a stone bench, and as Juanita Holland took her seat she fell for a moment into an attitude of drooping misery. Then immediately the shoulders that showed above her dark evening gown came back with a military stanchness and she held them so; as firm and white as ivory, and raised her chine resolutely. Malcolm, a wraith-like shape in his flannels, drew out a cigar and lighted it, and as the match died it caught a whimsical smile on his lips. With one foot on the stone bench and an elbow resting on his knee he began banteringly.

"So now it's the lecture, dearest, is it? Proceed. I've a heart for any fate."

"Have you?" She put the query quietly, almost listlessly, and after that she was silent for a moment. Then she drew the engagement ring from her finger and held it out to him. A little splinter of light was tossed from one of the facets.

"That's the first thing, Roger," she went on. "It isn't an easy thing either, but I've got to do it."

Her companion did not extend his hand. His face in the white light was suddenly rigid and stunned. At last he asked, pronouncing each word very carefully and distinctly, "Have you stopped loving me?"

CHILD BORN WITH HARD COLD

Remarkable Statement of Girl's Mother. How She Suffered Until Six Years Old. How Finally Cured.

Pittsfield, Mass. "My little girl now six years old was born with a hard cold and very delicate. Every winter she would suffer from croup and poor digestion. Dr. Currier recommended Vinol and within a week she had improved considerably, and her appetite increased so she wanted things to eat that had disgusted her before.

"On the first bottle she gained one and one-half pounds, and now at the age of six Vinol has made her a solid, healthy, good-natured child, and while sick she was so cross and fretful I grew discouraged and was worn out taking care of her."—Mrs. GEORGE WAGNER, Pittsfield, Mass.

Vinol, our delicious cod liver and iron tonic, is a wonderful appetizer, and you can see delicate, ailing children improve day by day under its use. It enriches the blood, builds up the body, making pale, delicate children rugged and rosy.

We ask all parents of weak, sickly, delicate children in this vicinity to try Vinol, with the understanding that if it fails to benefit your little ones, we return your money.

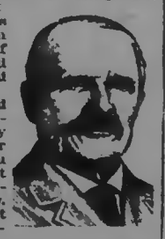
Operation Decided On As Only Means of Relief

But the Writer of This Letter Resolved to Try Dr. Chase's Ointment First and Was Cured.

This is not an isolated case, for we frequently hear from people who have been cured of piles by using Dr. Chase's Ointment after physicians had told them nothing short of an operation could bring relief and cure.



MR. BEAUVAIS.

If you could read these letters, coming as they do, day after day and year after year, you would realize what a wonderful curative agent Dr. Chase's Ointment really is. Few ailments are more annoying or more persistently torturing than piles, and when this suffering is promptly relieved by the application of Dr. Chase's Ointment there can be no doubt as to where credit is due. Friends and neighbors are told of the results and so the good word spreads, and Dr. Chase's Ointment is becoming known far and wide as the only actual cure for piles or hemorrhoids.

Mr. Charles Beauvais, a respected citizen of St. John's, Que., writes:—"For 14 years I suffered from chronic piles or hemorrhoids and considered my case very serious. I was treated by a well-known physician who could not help me, and my doctor decided on an operation as the only means of relief. However, I resolved to try Dr. Chase's Ointment first. The first box brought me great relief, and by the time I had used three boxes I was completely cured. This is why it gives me such great pleasure to recommend Dr. Chase's Ointment to everybody suffering from hemorrhoids as a preparation of the greatest value."

THE TALE OF A LONE MAN'S DEED

PRIVATE RICHARDSON, OF THE 17TH LANCERS.

It's a simple sort of a story,
The tale of a lone man's deed;
But it's proof once more, if it's wanted,
Of the grit in the British breed:
He was only a private soldier
And, saving a comrade at hand,
With a regiment of foemen around him,
He stood proud for his native land.

He'd walked in advance of his fellows,
Out scouting and thinking no harm,
The country looked nothing but peaceful,
No sign to cause any alarm;
Round a bend in the road he had vanished,
A happy-go-lucky young chap,
And before you could say "knife" he tumbled
Bang into an enemy's trap.

There were scores of the Germans upon him,
It wasn't much good to show fight;
There were hundreds more in the bushes
Tucked clean away out of sight;
They fell on him quick and disarmed him,
There was rage and despair on his brow;
One moment ago free and careless—
An important prisoner now.

They taunted the private, reviled him
As English, and one of the scum!
It's hard for a soldier to hear it,
To shut his lips tight and keep mum.
But he just cursed himself for a stupid;
In his eyes was a dangerous gleam,
Till an officer came up proposing
What seemed like an innocent scheme.

"You are free," said the German, "go scathless;
Return on the very same track;
We've disarmed you, you haven't a weapon,
But safe to your comrades go back;
Only this take heed to remember—
Give no single sign we are nigh.
Walk carelessly back like a free man:
If you dare give a hint, then you die!"

The private with joy was so staggered,
He thought such good luck couldn't be,
But they fell to the roadside and left him
Alone and unguarded and free;
Astonished, dazed like a man drunken,
A crazy plaything of the fates,
Running out not the why and the wherefore,
He started to walk to his mates.

Not three yards had he walked when he halted;
They ordered him "Forward!" again,
But he stood plumb there in the roadway,
For the truth had bit into his brain;
He saw in a flash what the game was.
He saw, with a catch in his breath,
That his troop, while he stood there in safety,
Would come riding on to their death.

"If you make half a sign," cried the German,
"Then we cut you down where you stand;
March forward and live! Life is pleasant!
But speak not and don't wave a hand."
O God! Life is sweet and 'tis precious—
In the shadow of death doubly dear—
But the private threw both his arms upward
And screamed "Back!—the Germans are here!"

His comrades were saved from destruction—
With pride for an instant he thrilled,
Then foul frenzy fell on him in vengeance,
And with his own blade he was killed;
He died, in his honour refusing
To act as the foeman's decoy,
But the moment of death for that private
Was one of ineffable joy!

"Fruit-a-tives" Helps Young And Old to Splendid Health

J. W. HAMMOND Esq.

SCOTLAND, ONT., Aug. 25th, 1913

"Fruit-a-tives" are the only pill manufactured, to my way of thinking. They work completely, no griping whatever, and one is plenty for any ordinary person at a dose. My wife was a martyr to Constipation. We tried everything on the calendar without satisfaction, and spent large sums of money until we happened on "Fruit-a-tives". I cannot say too much in their favor.

We have used them in the family for about two years and we would not use anything else as long as we can get "Fruit-a-tives".

Their action is mild, and no distress at all. I have recommended them to many other people, and our whole family uses them".

WHAT NEUTRALITY MEANS

Nation Not at War Must Follow Definite Course of Action

The main principle of the doctrine of neutrality is that, while other nations are at war, those which are at peace are able, without molestation, to pursue their ordinary business. Neutral countries, however, must show absolute impartiality in their dealings with the combatants, while the latter must scrupulously respect the neutral position of countries at peace. Germany's great crime is that she, in defiance of all international law, ignored the neutrality of Belgium, because that country stood in the way of swift invasion of France.

A neutral State is not permitted to give armed assistance to either belligerent, even though such aid may have been promised before the war. Neither must she lend money to either side, guarantee a loan, or allow the passage of belligerent troops through her territory. The reason why thousands of British Naval Brigade and Belgian troops are interned in Holland is because a neutral State is bound to intern and disarm any troops which attempt to traverse her country. Should a neutral State not observe this law and assist any belligerent force which may be driven into her country, the enemy is entitled to treat such a deviation as a just cause for war.

On the other hand a belligerent is not permitted to carry on hostilities in neutral territory, nor use neutral harbors for the purpose of fitting out expeditions against his enemy.

The ships of neutral nations are entitled to go about their business in the usual way, provided they are not carrying contraband of war; but they are liable to be searched by belligerent ships. Belligerent ships may not be fitted out in neutral waters, but if they are driven by force of circumstances into a neutral harbor they may be supplied with sufficient coal to enable them to proceed on their voyage. They must, however, leave a neutral port within twenty-four hours, or be "interned" for the rest of the war—that is to say, the neutral authorities must see that the ship is dismantled until the end of the war.

The term contraband applies to articles which may be regarded as likely to help belligerents to prolong the war, and the transportation of such articles by neutral ships is prohibited by international law. The list of articles includes arms of all kinds, explosives, military clothing and equipment, boats and in certain circumstances foodstuffs, bullion, field apparatus, horse equipment, and all kinds of nautical instruments.

Dodging the Doctor

Men burning with zeal to serve their country in her hour of need sometimes resort to amusing and ingenious ways of hiding from the hard-worked medical officer their physical defects. A man failed to enter Kitchener's army owing to the fact that he was a fraction of an inch under the required height. He went straight home to bed, and stayed there for a week, knowing that rest would lengthen him a little. He then rushed back, before he had had time to shrink, and passed with flying colors!

Will of Years and Patriotism

S. T. Dvoynikov, the Czar's oldest soldier, born in 1811, recently walked a distance of 120 miles with the avowed intention of enlisting as a volunteer, though he was not accepted. He lives in the village where he was born, and has in his time taken part in many campaigns, having begun his military career under the Emperor Nicholas I. For his valor in the Polish war he was raised to the rank of sub-lieutenant.

COLDS OR COUGHS

Should Never Be Neglected.

If They Are, Some Serious Lung Troubles Are Sure To Follow.

DR. WOOD'S NORWAY PINE SYRUP

CURES COUGHS AND COLDS on their first inception, and will thereby prevent you from becoming afflicted with some serious lung trouble, such as bronchitis, pneumonia or even consumption.

When you ask for "Dr. Wood's" see that you get it as there are many imitations on the market.

"Dr. Wood's" is put up in a yellow wrapper; three pine trees the trade mark; price, 25c and 50c; and manufactured only by The T. Milburn Co., Limited, Toronto, Ont.

Mrs. Thomas Bridges, Gorrie, Ont., writes: "I was so bad with a cold I gave up work, and I was in bed four weeks being unable to do anything. I thought the cold was turning to bronchitis, so I changed my medicine to Dr. Wood's Norway Pine Syrup. I used three bottles, and they completely cured me, and I am as strong as ever. I highly recommend it to all sufferers.

RUSSIANS FALL BACK FROM CRACOW FORTS

LONDON, Dec. 17—"The Russians are retiring along the entire front in Galacia and Poland." This statement, officially issued at Vienna, is the outstanding feature of tonight's news from the battle-fronts.

While there is no confirmation of this from other sources, such a move on the part of the Russians would be quite in line with the announcements in despatches from Petrograd that the Russians, threatened on both flanks, had decided to take up new positions where they would be better able to meet the onslaughts which are being launched against them by the Austro-Germans fro mthe Carpathians to the East Prussian frontier.

Should the Austro-Germanic armies as on previous occasions, follow the Russians in Poland, another big battle will soon be in progress, which may decide whether the Germans are to get to Warsaw or whether the Russians are again to threaten an invasion of Germany.

The delay of he Russians in fulfilling expectations that they would prove a serious menace to German territory is a disappointment to the peoples of the allied countries, but military men express the view that it is better for Russia that she should meet her foes in her own territory where the means of communication would be more on an equality.

"THE LAND THAT IS VERY FAR OFF"

A child who had had some instruction in a Christian Science Sunday school was learning by heart the description in the Revelation of the New Jerusalem, charmed, as children always are, by its imagery of the pearl gates and foundations of precious stones. On being asked if he thought that St. John was referring to a place, he said at once, "Oh, no, it was a vision which he saw," and seemed to understand perfectly that it was a state of mind which the apostle was describing. He then went on to say how "funny" it was to talk to people who still thought that heaven was a far-away place, and then to come "to the people who know, and can tell you all about it." The phrase caught the attention of one who was listening and started a train of thought which led back to the exquisite lines of the poet-prophet, "Thine eyes shall see the king in his beauty, they shall behold the land that is very far off."

The child's simplicity of thought had unerringly detected the difference between the old material view of heaven and the future life, and those of "the people who know" and could give him something which satisfied him as being true.

In making use of that illustration it is at least probable that the prophet had in mind the experience of Moses who, at a supreme moment, saw the promised land afar off, but could not enter into it on account of the sins of the people, and he proceeded to lift the whole idea out of the region of the material into the spiritual, explaining that this perception and fruition of beauty and holiness comes to those who through righteousness are able to endure the purgings and purifyings which come through sins destruction. Isaiah gives no hint that this state of blessedness has to be reached through death; it is to him the inevitable result of living in obedience to God. In successive phrases of great beauty he draws a picture of this ideal state as a "quiet habitation" where "the glorious Lord" will nourish and sustain His people, and ends by saying, "And the inhabitant shall not say, I am sick; the people that dwell therein shall be forgiven their iniquity."

How strange and pathetic it is that all these promises of relief from evil should for centuries have been looked upon as mere pictures, figures of speech, pointing to a vague idea of a place to be arrived at after death. The years have been watered by rivers of hopeless tears shed both for the living and the dead, whose springs have lain in these sad misconceptions of od and of life, until men have revolted in their despair and have cried that there can be no God after all.

The text-book of Christian Science, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mary Eddy, has been for forty years working a silent revolution in human thought on this subject, and it is not uncommon no find in religious and philoso writings statements to the effect heaven and hell are states of m and that we can make out own he or the reverse, as we choose. It is that many such statements are r without any reference to a relig bias, but still they point to a change in the general view of matters.

Jesus said quite unequivocally, to know God is eternal life (or h en). Not be it noticed, to do so thing or to go somewhere, or to and rise again, but simply to kn and to know God, is to see the in his beauty so that the land ma seemed so very far off has bee quite clear, "at hand," in fact, Jesus said.

Many people who with even a v faint perception of this knowled have had to face the experience parting with those who have been parently essential to their happine will say that no words can expr what sustaining power they have in this one statement, that eter life is to know God, realised throu the light which Christian Scien throws upon it—how a sense of the broken continuity of life has remov the sting of death and grief of pa ing in a way that has seemed mi eclous, and how they have been rais

The response was proportionately generous in the other schools of the city and the idea proved not only a good one theoretically, but of much value when actually put to the test. The spirit in which the edibles were given by the pupils was one of the admirable things about the carrying out of the plan.

Gifts For Poor "Kiddies"

Interesting Feature of Murray St. Sunday School Entertainment

A pleasing feature about the Christmas entertainment in the Murray Street Baptist Sunday School, last evening, was that the children, instead of receiving presents, brought gifts to be distributed among the poor youngsters of the City. In this way, articles valued at $40, were collected, and will bring joy to many children. Last night's event was very enjoyable. Mr. T. F. Matthews entertained the little folk with a talk on the war, illustrated by many excellent stereopticon views, some of which were shown here for the first time. Aldi. Duncan also addressed the children. An interesting programme was given by the children themselves, and tea was served by the ladies of the congregation.

An Englishman has invented a machine which splits the most knotty and crooked remnants of wood into evenly sized kindlings.

Such were the impressions as your correspondent saw the Kaiser here today. He looked fresh and in good health. But he was more grave, more earnest than the Kaiser whom I have seen in Berlin. His face was much thinner. He walked as straight as ever, but when I saw him first he was looking downward in deep thought.

It is forbidden to give the name of the town in which the Kaiser has his headquarters; but it is less than seventy-five miles from that of the Crown Prince, where I spent three days this week. The German Emperor lives in a beautiful little town and a half-storey private house. A little private park, with numerous walks, completely shut off from the streets connects the Chancellor's place with the Kaiser's. And it is here the Kaiser takes his daily walks.

The Kaiser has resumed his old practice of sawing wood, just as he used to do in Sanssouci Park, in Potsdam, and in Bellevue Park, in Berlin. I was told by one of his suite that he saws wood for one or two hours daily. He thinks this exercise one which keep him in the best physical trim. After a vigorous assault on a log, he sits down and rests. He smokes a cigarette and loses himself in thought. Then he turns to a again later and saws more.

This letter was written, of course, before the Kaiser was taken ill.

ECONOMY IN THE MANAGEMENT OF AN AUTOMOBILE

Those who have studied economies in the running of their motor cars have no idea how much saving can be accomplished by various methods, such as careful driving, the keeping of accounts, and foresight exercised from time to time.

Of course, there is a certain number of rich owners of motor cars who lease everything to their paid drivers—in these days far more trustworthy an competent than they used to be—and do not care to go into details or even inquire what a particular motor car is costing them per month or year. But there is a much wider circle of motorists to whom economy or at any rate the stoppage of waste and extravagance is important, and some of the hints given below may be useful to them. Perhaps they may not be new and have been mentioned before in the press or books daling with the subject.

Tyres Chief Cost.

To begin with, the tyres are the most expensive wearable part of a modern car. Varying as they do in price, it should be noted that the original cost of the tyre is no criterion as to its cost per mile run, and cheap tyres are often the most expensive from this point of view. But economies in the wear of tyres can be accomplished in very simple ways if thought is given.

For example, the stopping and starting should be gradual and neither hand nor foot brake should be adjusted violently. Patches of unrolled stone should be avoided and careful watch should be maintained for broken glass.

The tyres should always be sheltered as much as possible from the fierce rays of the sun, and kept blown up to the proper standard, and not allowed to run half inflated. Grease is also an enemy to rubber tyres, producing rapid disintegration. Finally bad cuts should be filled up at once by vulcanizing.

Many motorists allow their tyres to wear too far, and when recovered the new tread breaks away from the under part. If the car is not going to be used for a considerable time it is advisable that all the outer covers and tubes should be taken off and hung in cool, dark places.

The second most expensive item in motoring is gasoline. The ordinary driver little knows how to economize with fuel, for the commonest fault is that the carburetor needs air, the absence of which not only soots up the plugs, but also wastes his gasoline. Again, the running on top gears tends to produce economy. Then the engine should never be left running when the wheels are not actually in motion, for nowadays, when most of the cars have been equipped with electric starters, there seldom is reason why this should be done.

Other possible economies include protection against lengthy exposure to wet and dust, which cause the appearance of ugly cracks, rattling of door hinges, window and removable tops, which may result in expenses in repairs.

Use of Proper Oils.

Last, but not least, comes the economies in the use of lubricating oils, which, unless carefully regulated, cause the unnecessary emission of smoke from the exhaust, much to the annoyance of the pedestrian and in violation of the law. Numerous drivers do not seem to heed the dropping of oil underneath the car, showing that not only will the lubrication costs be high, but it also indicates that there is something strained or in bad repair which needs looking after.

As regards other matters, all care should be ensured, for in respect to fire, accidents, or third party risks the most careful and competent driver is liable to suffer at any time through no fault of his own.

As was stated at the outset, the above suggestions are not made for the benefit of millionaire owners, but for the average motorist, who is naturally and perfectly rightly trying every year to run his car at a greater mileage for less money and enjoy a pleasant tour at the least possible cost compatible with comfort and reasonable expenditure.

HEART WOULD PALPITATE.

HAD WEAK and DIZZY SPELLS.

Palpitation of the heart is one of the most common of all heart troubles. The heart will beat fast for several seconds, then slow, then start to flutter, and a feeling of utter depression will come over the system accompanied by weak and dizzy spells, making you feel that you are surely going to die. When you feel this way what you require is a real good heart and nerve tonic; one that will strengthen the weak heart and build up the nerve system. For this purpose we know of nothing that can equal Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills.

Mrs. J. S. Nicholls, Listowel, Ont., writes: "I was weak and run down, my heart would palpitate, and I would take weak and dizzy spells. A friend advised me to try your Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills so I started at once, and found that I felt much stronger, and my heart was ever so much better within a short time. I cannot praise your medicine too highly for it has done me a world of good. My husband has also been bothered with heart trouble ever since childhood and finds great relief in using your valuable pills."

Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills are 50 cents per box, 3 boxes for $1.25, at all dealers or mailed direct on receipt of price by The T. Milburn Co., Limited, Toronto, Ont.

These two new Gillette Sets are priced as usual—$5.00 in Silver Plate, $6.00 in Gold Plate.

Then there are the favorite Standard Sets and the handy Pocket Editions, in a great variety of Plated Metal and Leather Cases, at prices from $5.00 to $6.00.

Or you can pick out a Combination Set, as elaborate as you wish at prices up to $25.00.

CHRISTMAS BRINGS GOLDEN MEMORIES

A story is told by one of those roving Scots to whom the wsole world is a patrimony, of two old emigrants in the highlands of Argentina who had left the old world for the new so long ago that they had almost forgotten their native tongue.

But one Christmas Eve when the shrill wind blew about their windows and as ilver veil about the moon held a threat of snow to come they slipped back into the language of the land of their birth and began to put into words those endearing thoughts which in all countries are prefaced with "Do you remember?"

Thus they recollected the day when her hair was likespun flax, and he was a notable wrestler; the day when they were married; the days before the first of their children was born—the children who now had sought far-distant homes of their own. "And do you remember," said she, "how in the Old Land I put out my shoes one Christmas Eve to see what luck the fairies would bring me?" He remembered, and—for they wer growing sleepy, these old people—there was a long silence.

"Shall we put them out again?" she whispered. "What's the use," he said. "Perhaps it might bring luck—who knows?" urged the old woman. And when the old people woke next morning he went half expectantly to the door, and presently returned rather ruefully. "Look," said he, "here's all the luck we've got." The shoes were filled with snow. But that was not forgetfulness of fortune. The gift that came to the old people had reached them the night before, and presently you will guess what it was. Their case is the case of all of us, the young, the middle-aged, the old.

Powers Are Wide In War Time

Everybody Must Comply With War Regulations—Severe Penalties

LONDON, Dec. 17.—In view of the German attack on the Yorkshire coast, general interest attaches to an order signed by the King in Council, and published in the London Gazette, setting forth the measures which in cases of necessity, may be taken by the military and naval authorities for the defence of the realm.

Very wide powers are conferred by this order, with which it is the duty of everybody to comply immediately when so requested. Failure to obey means trial either by court-martial — when the punishment is penal servitude for life, and in certain cases death—or by courts of sumary jurisdiction.

Among the powers of the naval and military authorities defined in the new order are the following:

May by order require the whole or any part of the inhabitants of any area specified in the order to leave that area for naval or military reasons.

May by order require every person within any area specified in the order to remain within doors between such hours as may be specified.

Warns Scaremongers.

No person shall by word of mouth or in writing or in any newspaper, periodical, book, circular or other printed publication, spread false reports likely to cause disaffection to his Majesty or to interfere with the success of his Majesty's forces by land or sea or to prejudice his Majesty's relations with foreign powers, or spread reports, or make statements likely to prejudice the recruiting, training, discipline or administration of any of his Majesty's forces.

The order forbids any person to trespass on any railway or loiter on, under, or near any tunnel, bridge, viaduct or culvert, or on any road, path, or other place to which access has been forbidden.

The serving of intoxicants to soldiers and sailors is thus dealt with:

If any person with the intention of eliciting information for the purpose of communicating it to the enemy or for any purpose calculated to assist the enemy, gives or sells to a member of any of his Majesty's forces any intoxicant, or gives or sells to a member of any of his Majesty's forces any intoxicant when not on duty, with intent to make him drunk or less capable of the efficient discharge of his duties, or when on sentry or other duty, either with or without any such intent, he shall be guilty of an offence against those regulations.

It is further provided that any person, if so required, must stop and answer to the best of his ability and knowledge any questions which may be reasonably addressed to him by military or police.

Drastic Punishment.

It is admitted that persons who commit offences against these regulations may be tried either by a court-martial or before a court of summary jurisdiction.

A person found guilty of an offence against these regulations by a court-martial shall be liable to be sentenced to penal servitude for life or any less punishment, or if the court finds that the offence was committed with the intention of assisting the enemy to suffer death or any less punishment.

A person convicted by a court of summary jurisdiction will be liable to be sentenced to six months imprisonment and a fine of £100

If you are in a crowded city or a small town and the climate or sanitary conditions are not conducive to buoyant good health, get out.

Let me tell you a little stories about two men. One was sick and discouraged because he was shut up in the house during a cold winter when the snow was very deep. He wrote to the Club for advice and n his description o
at from his age he should b salt water in a warm and h at pleased both him and his n farm in the north was very and they readily sold it for price and went south. They been living within four rods of water for about 4 or 5 years
all they are growing all kinds o and vegetables that they are and oranges, peaches, do
, but they
, can live
year and they are strong and well.

Now, about the other man. He was young. A great big fellow, but he lived in a southern town where they had not yet wakened up after the disastrous civil war. On account of the insanitary conditions, the fever had attacked him and hookworm as well. Of the latter he was easily cured, but I advised him to go north. A clear head a little ambition was about all he had to take with him, but the energy of the northern climate soon drove the fever out and ambition and energy took its place. To-day his big homestead is one of the show places of his country, but the health and happiness afforded by a change to conditions and climate that are natural for him are worth more than the material prosperity.

Some people never have good health in the climate where they were born, but in a locality suited to them they are well, happy and contented. In nature it is the same. I know an old apple tree which grew up as a seedling in Indiana. The fruit had a peculiar flavour and was liked by many, although the apples was not large or well coloured. Scions were taken from it to a nursery and new trees were grown and planted in an etirely different soil and climate. The fruit is a splendid size, beautifully coloured and amny times better in every way than in its native state. A few years ago an enthusiastic man paid 75 cents apiece for a box of choicest of these apples and gave them to the president of the U. S. as samples of the finest apples ever grown.

Your sickness may be natural to you as long as you continue to eat unnatural food in an unnatural way or to live in a climate that is not congenial or amid surroundings that are not sanitary.

Christmas of the Past.

Once more we approach what ought to be the happiest day in the year, and yet for many of us it will be only the culmination of a period of mean worries, heart-burnings and unattained hopes. Is it necessary that we so debase it?

Consider the Christmasses that are past. Are any of them sweeter to remember than those of your childhood? And is it the multitude or the value of the gifts you received that made them dear? On the wonderful morning that you remember so well, there may have been some pop corn balls and home-made candy, or an orange or two, or a pair of mittens, or a set of paper dolls. Perhaps if you were a boy, there was a pair of stilts that your father had made, or a sled; or if you were getting into young girlhood, a little traveling toilet case or a jewel casket, or a workbox. There was nothing elaborate or expensive, only simple things, most of which were home-made.

Your happiness was owing not to the events of the day, but to the spirit of it; to the rosy light of imagination that lay upon you, and the feeling of mystery that lifted the day to a height above all others; the mystery of a benign presence that had been working to make you happy, and, unseen and unheard had entered the house in the night to leave its tokens of an unselfish love.

In the story of the wise men who came out of the East, the words are these, "And when they had opened their treasures, they presented unto Him gifts." It does not say that they gave themselves up to repining over what they could not bestow or went about searching anxiously for something that they did not have, but only that from their treasures—the things that they did have—they gave simply and with love. And the world has called them wise.

The old fashioned Christmas, the best that the world has ever known—the only true Christmas—goes back more than nineteen hundred years, to Bethlehem of Judea. Let us restore and keep the spirit of it.

Why We Hang p Stockings.

The custom of hanging up the stocking on Christmas eve arose from an incident in the life of the good St. Nicholas. One day, when he was overtaken by a severe storm, he took refuge in a convent, and the next day being Christmas he preached a sermon to the nuns which they liked so much that they asked him to come the next year and preach to them again. On his second visit, which was also on a Christmas eve, before going to bed he asked each of the nuns to lend him a stocking, and he filled the stockings with sugar plums in return for their hospitality.

Limp And Empty Stockings.

Christmastide should not be cheerless for any boy or girl in this Christian land. Many a man or woman can recall the bitter disappointment brought on Christmas morning with the chilling effect it had upon the heart. If such have come to enjoy a comfortable income, they should not forget the poor at this season of good cheer. Right at the next door may be children whose stockings will hang limp and empty on Christmas morning unless some kind neighbour remembers them and remembers the stings of poverty at this season of gifts and gladness. The cup of cold water given in Christ's name, entitling the giver to a distinction among the saints includes the thoughtful provision for some poor child's joy on Christmas morn. The opportunity for bringing good cheer to some desolate household is yours now. Improve it and it will bring you joy.

When Shepherds Watched by Night.

Some historians contend that the shepherds could not have watched by night on the Bethlehem plains in December, it being a period of great inclemency. In answer to this a well known student says: Bethlehem is not a cold region. The mercury usually stands all the month of December at 46 degrees. Corn is sown during this time, and the grass and herbs spring up after the rains, so that the Arabs drive their flocks down from the mountains into the plains. The most delicate never made fires till about the end of November, and some pass the whole winter without them. From these facts it is established without doubt that our Saviour was born on the 25th day of December, the day which the church throughout the world has united to celebrate in honour of Christ's coming in the flesh.

Christmas.

All hail, Spirit of Christmas. Fill our hearts with freshness, joyousness and hope.

Open our eyes to a world filled with new and interesting things.

Attune our ears to the general song of good cheer and make our hearts and voices responsive to its message.

Let us know in its full measure the blessedness of the privilege both of giving and of receiving, the interchange of the Christmas message of love and remembrance.

Help us to put aside the fear, the worry and the petty strife of yesterday, and to face to-morrow with the radiant face of those who have seen the star in the east and who have heard the angels' message, "Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace good will toward men."

RASH ALL OVER HEAD AND FACE

Of Baby. - Could Not Sleep. Fretful and Cross. Itched and Burned. Hair Came Out. Cuticura Soap and Ointment Healed.

Darnley, P. E. I.—"When my little girl was three days old a fine rash came out all over her head and face. At first I thought it was baby rash but after a week or two I found that it was very itching and she could not sleep. She was getting very fretful and cross and it made her sick. It itched and burned so much that she used to scratch it until it became one solid mass of sore eruption and it made nearly all her hair come out. It was getting worse all the time and it spoiled her looks.

"I was told she had eczema and I got some ointment to use on her but it did no good. By the time she was four months old the eczema was all over her face, head and neck. I then decided to send for a sample of Cuticura Soap and Ointment. The first application relieved her of the itching. I then bought a box of Cuticura Ointment and two cakes of Cuticura Soap and used it according to directions for eczema. I bathed her face and head with the Cuticura Soap and put the Cuticura Ointment on gently and by the time the box of Cuticura Ointment and two cakes of Cuticura Soap were gone there was not a sign of eczema and she was completely healed." (Signed) Mrs. Philip Roach, May 12, 1914.

CHILDREN'S TEETH.

When They Should Appear and the Order in Which They Come.

The milk teeth (first teeth) are twenty in number. The time at which they appear is subject to considerable variations, even under normal conditions. The following table gives the order and average time of appearance of the different teeth:

Two lower central incisors, six to nine months.

Four upper incisors, eight to twelve months.

Two lower lateral incisors and four anterior molars, twelve to fifteen months.

Four canines, eighteen to twenty-four months.

Four posterior molars, twenty-four to thirty months.

At one year of age a child should have six teeth.

At one and one-half years it should have twelve teeth.

At two years it should have sixteen teeth.

At two and one-half years it should have twenty teeth.

It is not easy to explain where there are so often variations from the average. The order in which the teeth appear is more regular than the time of their appearance. Marked irregularities in order of the appearance of the teeth are the rule in idiotic children or those suffering from slighter mental effects.

Delayed dentition is generally caused by rickets. Many healthy children, however, frequently have no teeth appear until the tenth month of age.—Philadelphia Record.

The Legend of the Holly

Did you ever as you took part in the osculatory rites under the mistletoe wonder just what superstition, myth or tradition gave you that privilege?

Did you ever stop to think in the midst of your ardent ceremonial that you were perpetuating one of the most hallowed and exalted religious rites handed down through the ages in rendering such tender homage to the mistletoe?

Would you be surprised to learn that our very word "marry" and that our most impassioned of dances, the waltz, are traditionally conected with the pearly-berried mistletoe?

The mistletoe is a freak plant. It is what is known as a parasite, because it grows on another plant, generally a tree. Both its berries and its leaves grow in clusters of three, united on one stock, therefore its sacred place in religious rites as a symbol of the Holy Trinity.

The Druids and other ancient people in Northern and Western Europe believed that any tree to which the msitletoe was attached was selected by God himself for special favour and that all that grew on it was sent direct from heaven.

The mistletoe, contrary to general belief, is found more rarely on the oak tree than on the apple, ash, elm, poplar, willow and hawthorn. It was due to its scarcity that it was vested with exceptional reverence when discovered clinging to the sacred tree of the Druids.

Even the ancient historian Pliny has mentioned the mistletoe. He says: "When the mistletoe is discovered it is treated with great ceremony. When certain tribes discovered it they called it by a name "good heal," which in their language means the curer of all ills. After they have well and duly prepared their festival cheer under the tree, they bring thither a milk white cow and a bullock, hitherto unyoked; then priests in white vesture climb into the tree and prune off the sacred herb with a gold hook, bill or sickle. The branches fall beneath into a white sheet. They must never touch the ground. The common people remain at a distance, formed in a circle, while the priests approach with trembling awe the bloody victims, which were carried around the omen fire. After this the animals are slaughtered as a sacrifice—doubtless to the goddess of fecundity, for the mistletoe is a symbol of the prolific."

The spirit of Christmas is most magnanimously manifested in York, England, where they carry mistletoe boughs to the high altar of the cathedral and proclaim "a public and universal liberty, pardon and freedom to all sorts of interior and wicked people." They suspend it under the chancel arch and bear it to the city gates, toward the four quarters of heaven.

In the varied nomenclature of the word "mistletoe," according to the nationalities concerned, do we discover the magical virtues with which the weird plant is invested. Dr. Johnson says the word is derivod from mistion, state of being mingled tod or toe, bush. In German it mistel, mixed, and Saxon tan (Danis tiene, Dutch teene); twig, sprig. I American, Welsh and Irish, it is a yach, or its equivalent for all hea and Pliny calls it omnia sanans, term of similar import.

In upper Germany on Christma morning they go about knocking o each other's doors, shouting "Gu hyl," the synonym for the Druid name. In Brittany it is the herb de la Croix, which heals fevers and gives strength for wrestling. At the time of George I. it was called lignum sancta crucis—wood of the holy cross—so highly were its medicinal properties esteemed.

Hung about the neck it renders witches powerless. It is used in houses to drive out evil spirits. It is an amulet against poisons, and the inhabitants of Elgin and Moray keep it as charms. Throughout Britannia it had a place assigned to it in every kitchen, and a young man was deemed to have the right to kiss any lassie caught beneath the cherished branch, plucking off a berry with each kiss. If a maid were not kissed under the mistletoe it was a sign that she would not marry during the ensuing year, a tradition still prevailing. Even Mr. Pickwick availed himself of the pleasant privilege despite his oft-quoted injunction. To dream of mistletoe presages wealth, and in the language of flowers it signifies: I surmount all difficulties.

The Cymric, Celtic, Gaelic, Teutonic and Norse traditions all emphasize the exercising as well as the amatory propensities of the waxen spray. The Scandinavians have it consecrated to Freya, or Freja—"from whom flows every blessing, the winning smile, the melting kiss." She is the Venus of the Norse pantheon, the goddess of love, of peace, joy, laughter, fruitfulness, bringing increase "to field and stall," and also the tutelary deity presiding over nuptials and child birth.

The response was proportionately generous in the other schools of the city and the idea proved not only a good one theoretically, but of much value when actually put to the test. MOTHERS AND MARRIAGE.

Does the Parent Want Her Daughter Wed and Her Son Single?

Women have the marrying habit; men do not. This is not strange, for generations of girls have been taught that every woman should be married and that to remain unwed is a disgrace. Being a "married woman" has been a sort of boast of superiority on the part of wives. Naturally, because their mothers and almost every other person of their own sex puts a great deal of emphasis on the desirability of being married and none at all on the desirability, which sometimes exists, of remaining unmarried, girls looked on marriage as the goal of ambition and bent their whole energies to getting husbands.

Rather than endure the unjust stigma of being "old maids" they took the first man who gave them a chance. Their object was not love, not a husband, but simply to acquire the status, privileges and deference which they had been taught were denied to all of their sex except the "married woman."

Can you imagine anything more disastrous?

Yet this is only half the story. The other half consists in the fact that the very same mothers who fairly drive their daughters to marry are singularly reluctant to see their sons wed. The mother who is em-

Such were the impressions as your correspondent saw the Kaiser here to-day. He looked fresh and in good health. But he was more grave, more earnest than the Kaiser whom I have seen in Berlin. His face was much thinner. He walked as straight as ever, but when I saw him first he was looking downward in deep thought.

It is forbidden to give the name of the town in which the Kaiser has his headquarters; but it is less than seventy-five miles from that of the Crown Prince, where I spent three days this week. The German Emperor lives in a beautiful little town and a half-storey private house. A little private park, with numerous walks, completely shut off from the streets connects the Chancellor's place with the Kaiser's. And it is here the Kaiser takes his daily walks.

The Kaiser has resumed his old practice of sawing wood, just as he used to do in Sanssouci Park, in Potsdam, and in Bellevue Park, in Berlin. I was told by one of his suite that he saws wood for one or two hours daily. He thinks this exercise one which keep him in the best physical trim. After a vigorous assault on a log, he sits down and rests. He smokes a cigarette and loses himself in thought. Then he turns to again later and saws more.

This letter was written, of course, before the Kaiser was taken ill.

Gifts For Poor "Kiddies"

Interesting Feature of Murray St. Sunday School Entertainment

A pleasing feature about the Christmas entertainment in the Murray Street Baptist Sunday School last evening, was that the children, instead of receiving presents, brought gifts to be distributed among the poor youngsters of the City. In this way, articles valued at $40, were collected, and will bring joy to many children. Last night's event was very enjoyable. Mr. T. F. Matthews entertained the little folk with a talk on the war, illustrated by many excellent stereopticon views, some of which were shown here for the first time. Ald. Duncan also addressed the children. An interesting programme was given by the children, themselves, and tea was served by the ladies of the congregation.

Bluffed His Way Past the British As An American

German Newspaper Man "Got By" in Egypt With Uncle Sam as Alibi

BERLIN, Dec. 14.—A lie at the expense of Uncle Sam saved a German newspaper man from being made a prisoner of war by the English, or possibly from being shot as a spy.

The man, formerly the staff correspondent in Egypt of the Berliner Tageblatt, tells in that paper how he deceived British officers who tried to interfere with his departure from Egypt for Italy by telling them he was an American citizen.

"The departure from Egypt for Germans had already become a near impossibility as early as the middle of August," writes the correspondent.

"The British officers threatened to inspect the names of passengers even on neutral ships. I tried to obtain an American pass, as I had some 'fundamentals' for it from my former stay in Chicago. As this was too impossible I decided to leave without a passport, for the prospects of having to eat Malta potatoes as a British prisoner of war did not look alluring to me at all.

EMBARKS AS AMERICAN.

"I succeeded in getting aboard a Greek vessel, but I could only get a ticket as far as Piræus. In Alexandria I embarked as an American.

"Two British officers stood at the gangway. I had put on a tropical helmet, so as to get a little more of the American type about me. As I came nearer, the two khakis were eyeing me. I acted as though I noticed nothing. Apparently deeply engaged in thought, staring 'absentmindedly' at the ship before me, I put my foot on the gangway.

"'Sir!' began one of the officers. I turned around.

"'Pardon?' I asked.

"'What nationality?' he grumbled.

BLUFFS WAY THROUGH.

"My heart began to beat lively. The moments that followed were the most exciting of my life, and I've seen some exciting times. If I would tell him that I was German, and if he found my military papers, my fate as British prisoner would be sealed, and I would go straight to Malta. I could well imagine, incidentally, what would happen to my British gold coins in that case.

"On the other hand, if I said I was an American, and then could not show a passport, they could treat me as a spy, in which event I might as well make my will. So I preferred the chance to the risk, and, looking straight into the British officer's eyes, I replied:

"'American citizen.'

"'Where to go go?' was the next question.

"'To Italy on a business trip.'

"'Your papers all right?'

"'Yes, sir, all right.'

"That ended the examination. They let me go. Then came the British harbour police, the medical examination, and at length the ship sailed."

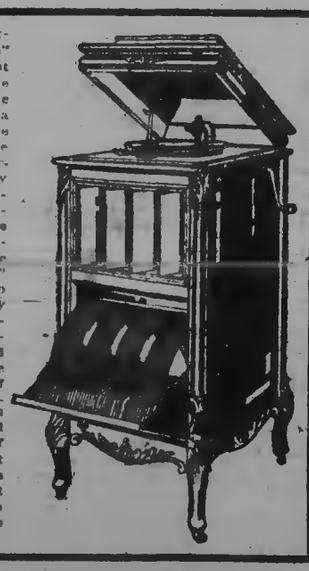
THE "Mignonette" for $130 most resembles the $250 "De Luxe." As a compromise between the bigger, higher-priced, fully cabineted, elaborate uprights and the smaller instruments, the "Mignonette" has proved to be exactly what thousands of careful people had in mind. We are proud of the "Mignonette" and you will be proud of yours if you select it and let its music start the day on Christmas morning.



SIXTY-FIVE dollars will place in your home the model that has been sold, as we believe, to more people than any other instrument, regardless of name, price or make. "Favorite" in name, and favorite in fact. We present it here in its improved ... better worthy of its "Favorite" name and of its reputation than ever before. It has every Columbia tone-feature, including the tone-control "leaves" at the front instead of the little double doors, which are now out of use on all Columbias.

AT $30, the "Comet"—a Columbia, like all the others, and that means its tone is natural, its motor is reliable, its appearance is faultless. For the man who has never owned a modern "talking machine" and hardly realizes what a continuous pleasure such an instrument becomes; and for him, if you have nothing in mind but an instrument for as little money as possible, that will play any record, and play it absolutely evenly, and that can be carried around anywhere, the "Comet" is truly the ideal gift. You can add four double-disc records to the $30, and for just $37.40 be sure of one present that is a present.

Now, take them all in all, which is to be your "star" Christmas present? Only be sure that the instrument you select is a Columbia, for otherwise you will not be able to enjoy that very different and superior tone. Prove it by hearing, for in this case "hearing is believing."

Be sure to hear the two new Columbia Double Disc Records, entitled "Tangled Tunes." Over 100 selections on the two records. Price 85c each. Will play on any disc instrument. Makes a splendid Christmas gift. On sale at all Columbia dealers.

Thousands of Records for you to choose from in the Columbia catalogue—mostly double-discs, at 85 cents each. CHAPTER XIV.
Lucille Finds a Friend.

He summoned a steward and dispatched him for Loubeque, demanding an answer. Evidently the spy had been waiting some such thing, for he appeared quite promptly, his face worn and harried. He started violently at seeing Lucille, then took both her hands in his own and patted them soothingly, his voice the cajoling one with which one soothes a child. The captain's stern countenance had fallen, and the good man looked rather foolish.

"Mr. Loubeque," he began abruptly, "this young lady has made complaint to me that you have threatened her with death. Have you anything to say?"

"Certainly, I shall be more than pleased to look after her if the poor child has escaped the surveillance of her relatives. No friend could do less," the spy answered suavely, and he touched his hand lightly to his head.

The captain nodded, and Lucille, seeing now the maddeningly unbelievable quality of the story she had told regarding her adventures, felt hot rage fairly burning her up. She sprang at the captain, taking his coat in her hands and shaking him fiercely.

"I am not insane—it's the truth—every word," she cried.

Then a slow crunching as the great ship swung into her moorings. Hugo Loubeque slowly lifted the cigar from his mouth and waved it in a deliberate circle that ended with its tip pointing toward the slender girl. He caught her eyes and smiled at the expression of terror, of fear in them, as he saw she had marked his gesture.

Came a crowding forward in the center of the throng upon the deck. The gangplank thrust its nose out, out, until it rested upon the dock. Some of the passengers looked about in surprise at sound of a guttural oath. They saw a tall, somber, saturnine passenger smoking a cigar, his eyes fastened upon a squad of slipcoated policemen edging their way from the rear of the throng into the exact center. They wondered.

Lucille tripped down the gangplank. Once more the man who had uttered the oath lifted his cigar. Came a quick upheaval in the throng. The spy smiled to himself, then moved toward the plank. He looked down upon the crowd of men surrounding the slip of a girl, surrounding her so closely she was hidden from sight. The policemen were fighting their way to the ship. Came a scream in a woman's voice. Loubeque bent forward, his knuckles showing a blue whiteness from the fierceness of his grip upon the liner's rail.

"Help, help! Cap"—

The officers whirled in the direction of the girl's voice. The crowd of men jammed closer, resisting, without the appearance of resistance, the shoulders of the law. From outside the jam darted a woman clad in deep mourning. Easily the throng of men gave way before her. Her arms were about the neck of the girl who had screamed, smothering her lips with kisses.

"My poor, dear sister!" she sobbed uncontrollably, her arms about Lucille's waist, bearing her through the crowd of men.

The captain stood at Loubeque's elbow, his face troubled. The policemen ought their way to the center of the romp to find no woman there. Their leader, a sergeant, stepped toward the captain.

"You sent a wireless, sir, regarding a young woman"—

The captain turned to Loubeque, his eyes threatening.

"The girl," he demanded. "What has become of"—

Hugo Loubeque lazily pointed his cigar toward a black, high powered motorcar leaping out into the city's street.

"The insane girl?" he smiled. "I believe I saw her step into that machine, captain."

The sergeant waited curiously. Knowing there was something between two men, scenting the atmosphere of hatred, he waited.

"No use now, sergeant," sighed Lucille's friend.

"Something told Lucille as she stood at the ship's rail that trouble awaited her once her feet were set upon the wharf. And her hand closed about the diary hidden in the bosom of her dress, the diary she had read so many times she knew it well nigh by heart, the diary with its tale of gigantic power and unscrupulousness in the accomplishment of one purpose, the destruction of her father. What chance did the honest, simple minded captain have, what chance did the officers of a mere municipality have when they opposed themselves to one who overthrew nations and their rulers by the lifting of his hand?

Her steps were laggard as she marched down the plank. Almost immediately she felt a pressing forward in the fore ranks of the crowd, a pressing forward that tended in her direction. She looked about her and found a man's face staring into hers from every direction. There was no enmity on those faces. They were not brutal, not even evil. But there was a fixed purposefulness about them, a grim regard of her that told her instinctively they were the minions of Hugo Loubeque. Yet not a hand was laid upon her, not a voice lifted. She tried to force her way forward, but a steady resistance met her. Then just as a heavily veiled woman pressed toward her, with eyes that glittered a menace matching poorly the affectionate pose of her form, Lucille lifted her voice only to have her appeal smothered by the fierce embrace of the woman, who continually referred to Lucille as "her poor sister."

She did not know how it was worked, but the crowd of men opened readily for the escort and herself—not only opened, but assisted them along their way. The door of a great limousine stood open before her. Swiftly she was hustled into the car, and before her companion had closed the door the car shot forward, gaining speed with every rod.

The futility of further resistance made her sink back against the cushions, sick with apprehension of what was to come, a dull apathy gradually closing about her and soothing her tired eyes. After all, she had known that Hugo Loubeque would be able to do as he said.

The car leaped like a living thing through the streets of the city and then doubled upon its tracks so that she might have no chance to place certain sites and gain some idea thereby what her ultimate destination was. Lucille studied her captor from under cover of her heavy lashes. She could see but little of the face for the heavy mourning veil swathing it. She only made out that she appeared apathetic, disinterested, now her portion of the work assigned to her had been carried through. It seemed a characteristic attitude of all who worked for the man. They were but cogs in a vast machine, responsive to the master's touch.

Only at the end of their drive, when the chauffeur opened the door, did the woman speak.

"Any attempt to escape would be quite useless," she said in a dull, mechanical tone of voice. "If you are wise you will not make the situation any more difficult for yourself by being foolish."

As the motorcar ceased purring at the curb, the woman pressed the door bell. Came a scuffling along the hall, a shadow fluttered there a second, then the door swung open. Lucille stepped across the threshold with her captor, surprised to see no one in sight. Apparently the door had opened of its own volition. Before her was a straight stairway, appearing to end at the second flight. To her left was a living room into which she was ushered. Again the woman pressed a bell.

"You will want some tea and cakes," she said quietly.

Lucille turned at a suggestive clink of china. She had heard no one enter the room, yet, in the shadows, she saw an attentive butler holding the tea tray while the mysterious veiled woman poured. The man moved toward her, moved silently, swiftly, surely. There was something about his manner, his perfection, strikingly reminiscent of some one she had seen before.

"Thompson!" she gasped. "Thompson! You here! What are you doing here?"

"Yes, Miss Love! Thank you! I am employed by Mr. Loubeque, Miss Love! Thank you!"

And then gradually she understood, knew who had stolen the papers from her father's safe, realized how completely they had all been fooled by this cunning servant.

"Go away!" she muttered brokenly. "Go away! I can't bear to look at you!"

"Yes, miss. Thank you!"

When she looked up he had disappeared.

Swiftly she gathered herself together. Such childish tricks must not be permitted to shatter her courage for even an instant. She slipped stealthily to the door through which she had entered the house. In the hall she looked cautiously about, then put her foot upon the stairs and proceeded to move to the first flight. Midway, she was paralyzed into inactivity by finding the stairs to be in motion.

Horror seized her. Then once more she braced herself. Only another trick of Loubeque's it was. The stairs seemed to fold up within themselves like a miniature escalto. They grew steady once more, and the girl looked about an unfurnished room of stone walls. But she did not see these walls, did not mark the lack of decorations or furniture in the room, for a company of men formed a crescent facing her, one tall figure—that of Loubeque—standing apart from the rest, immovable, silent.

The solitary figure lifted his hand. Then, frozen with terror though she was, Lucille saw that each figure was swathed in a black robe and that a plain silk mask of black covered every face. Masks through which threatening eyes glared out upon her, masks so right they fattened against the wearer's features with hideous significance.

Slowly the company passed her, pausing before her to peer narrowly into her face, as though impressing her every feature indelibly upon their minds. When she regained her power of observation the line had passed and paused and disappeared. She looked about her.

She was alone.

PORT OF ANTWERP LONG DOMINATED BY THE GERMANS

To Maintain Its Supremacy After the War Belgium Must Have Industrial Rhenish Provinces

LONDON, Nov. 30.—It is held by certain people that Belgium must include after the war the industrial Rhenish provinces if the port of Antwerp is to maintain its supremacy and an economic victory is to be won.

It is contended that Antwerp if deprived of its position as an outlet of the German markets will lose much of its importance as a seaport while German commerce gradually revives through German ports.

A prominent shipping authority of Antwerp recently said:

[illegible] opportunity of contributing to the Christmas cheer of the more unfortunate families of the city. They responded in a noble manner and more than enough was secured to insure the replenishing of the tables of the poor with palatable viands for the Christmas week. In the Central school the pupils brought several car loads of fruit, vegetables, etc., which are being distributed to-day. The response was proportionately generous in the other schools of the city and the idea proved not only a good one theoretically, but of much value when actually put to the test. The spirit in which the edibles were given by the pupils was one of the admirable things about the carrying out of the plan.

citizens to come out as a candidate but with three in the field he decided to finish out his two year term as alderman. At that time Mayor Buller stated that he would only serve as mayor for one year, and until the last few weeks has let it be understood that he would not run in the coming elections, and that the public position to which he was appointed would remove him from municipal affairs.

It was for this reason, Ald. Duncan states, and because many of the ratepayers had urged him to accept a nomination for Mayor that he entertained the idea.

Regarding Acclamation.

Recently there has been some talk of returning the present Council, School Board members and others by acclamation, but it has not been generally supported. Ald. Duncan states that he consented to receive the nomination for Mayor on the understanding that if there is no other election except for mayor he will not force an election and the resulting expense of several hundred dollars. In the meantime he has been making inquiries and finds that while there is not the keen interest manifested last year, there is considerable difficulty. He has been informed that the Trades and Labour Council intend to have a representative or two in several wards, that some former aldermen and several newcomers are going to contest their divisions, that the vacancies on the School Board are not going to be filled by acclamation. In the face of these prom[illegible] of an election for other positions, Alderman Duncan is assured that the mayoralty will not be the sole contest and that being the case, he is in the field. And while others are commencing work in their interests he has decided to permit no further time to elapse before placing his position squarely before the ratepayers.

His Municipal Experience.

If an election is held, Ald. Duncan will bring eight years of service as an alderman as one of his qualifications as a candidate for the mayoralty. For three years he has chairman of the Property committee and was chairman of the Board of Works during 1907 and 1914. He has an intimate knowledge of the requirements of the city, of the work that is under way and of the problems still to be grappled with. He has had plenty of experience and workings of the Council. Hence, with the probability of an election before him, Ald. Duncan is in the fight for the mayoralty, but he wants the ratepayers to know that the cause of the elections. If all the other positions go by acclamation, he is satisfied to fall in line. But in the meantime he is taking no chances.

IF KIDNEYS AND BLADDER BOTHER

Take Salts to Flush Kidneys and Neutralize Irritating Acids

Kidney and Bladder weakness result from uric acid, says a noted authority. The kidneys filter this acid from the blood and pass it on to the bladder, where it often remains to irritate and inflame, causing a burning, scalding sensation, or setting up an irritation at the neck of the bladder, obliging you to seek relief two or three times during the night. The sufferer is in constant dread, the water passes sometimes with a scalding sensation and is very profuse; again, there is difficulty in voiding it.

Bladder weakness, most folks call it, because they can't control urination. While it is extremely annoying and sometimes very painful, this is really one of the most simple ailments to overcome. Get about four ounces of Jad Salts from your pharmacist and take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast, continue this for two or three days. This will neutralize the acids in the urine so it no longer is a source of irritation to the bladder and urinary organs which then act normally again. Jad Salts is inexpensive, harmless, and is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and is used by thousands of folks who are subject to urinary disorders caused by uric acid irritation. Jad Salts is splendid for kidneys and causes no bad effects whatever.

Here you have a pleasant, effervescent lithia-water drink, which quickly [illegible] ments. This farmer visits the Peterborough market about twice a year. He drives a distance of twenty-two miles, and in sixteen years, has only missed the Christmas market once.

In conversation with many of patrons of the market, it is learned that a large percentage of the farmers are taking to heart the advice coming from the government respecting the increase in crop acreage. Many have sown a larger quantity of fall wheat than was originally intended, and are contemplating cultivating in the spring considerably more land than is usually the case. This may be one form of patriotism, but it is also a realization of the exceptional opportunity presented by the war to obtain good prices.

To-day's Prices.

There was very little change in prices. If anything, the more plentiful lines of produce such as fowl, vegetables, etc., were a little cheaper. Eggs could hardly be had at any price. One lot of fresh eggs brought forty-five cents a dozen. Storage eggs were offered at thirty-five cents. There must have been a good many tons of fowl disposed of judging by the crowded condition of the market and the overloaded tables which fairly groaned under the burden. Chickens predominated and the prices

INVENTIONS

Steam shovels play an important part in Kansas coal mining by stripping the soil from on top of the veins of fuel, which lie but a few feet from the surface.

Recent government figures show that only one person in every 1,000 in Denmark is unable to read and write, compared with seven in each 1,000 in the United States.

A patent has been granted a New York inventor for whels for shafting, automobiles and many other purposes that are made of two sheets of steel pressed together.

Resembling a miniature stone cutters' hammer, but hollow, is a Massachusetts inventor's pick to split ice ice with the sharp end and cut it into cubes with the other.

A coasting sleigh for use on Swiss mountains is equipped with both runners and wheels, either of which may be lowered to the ground by levers operated by a driver.

Boiling in a gallon of water to which has been adeed four ounces of phosphoric acid and an ounce of iron filings will give iron and steel a black, rust proof coating.

A Vermont woman has patented an automobile wind shield with a small window in one side which will keep out rain, but can be adjusted to admit as much air as is desired.

A Russian inventor's swimming suit is provided with compartments for food, a weighted keel to keep a diver upright in water and fins on the legs to assist him in moving.

Embodying something like the principle of the gyroscope, a new device will detect the portion of a revolving mass, such as an engine fly wheel, that may be out of balance.

Goggles for quarrymen, miners and metal workers that a Pennsylvanian has patented are reinforced with wire gauze that is intended to prevent flying fragments breaking the glass.

For cleaning the ouside of ships an Englishman has invented a huge scrubbing brush, to be driven by an electric motor while a vessel is in port without the necessity of drydocking.

To prevent a lifeboat capsizing in a heavy sea, an inventor has patented semicircular wings to be fastened to the gunwales, the idea being that they will spread and hold a boat steady.

To produce the effect of breezes in advertising displays there have been invented perforated flag poles and imitation trees through which air is pumped to make the flags wave or leaves shake.

The fact that its receiving tank and al lconnections must be air tight to enable it to be operated is an advantage claimed for an English inventor's pneumatic machne for emptying cesspools.

Two Oregon inventors have patented a garment that includes coat, hood mittens and slippers, all of which are filled with electric wires supplied with current from a storage battery to warm a wearer.

An electric floor-scrubbing machine that a New York Hospital attendant has invented is featured by a brush that revolves vertically instead of horizontally, thus helping to pick up the water that has been used.

BROCKVILLE, Ont., Dec. 17. — A double drowning occurred in the St. Lawrence river at Ogdensburg, the first fatality of the skating season on the St. Lawrence, when Gordon Runion, 23 years old; Kenneth Runion, 17 years old, and Clara Runion, 11 years old, broke through the ice. Clara Runion perished and the other two were brought ashore by John Mashaw. Gordon died within a few minutes and his brother is still in a precarious condition from shock.

Are All Filled

Between sixty and sixty-five men are engaged in the construction of sewers, both in the South End of the City and on Victoria Heights. In conformation with the policy laid down some time ago, the gang is changed every two weeks. Only married men are employed, preference being given to those with families. When the gang was changed a couple of days ago, the City Engineer had a notice posted at the corner of George and Simcoe streets, asking for men to replace those who have been in charge of the trenches for the past two weeks. The first fifteen men that appeared on the scene were Italians with two or three exceptions. It was then that City Engineer Parsons decided to place a sign on George Street asking for reinforcements. A couple of the natives of Sunny Italy were given a job, it being claimed that they are equally as deserving as any citizen who may be out of employment. It was not until the sign had been up for a day and all the jobs had been filled that any real interest was manifested. They came around a day after the trenches were filled with new men.

Are Seeking Work.

It is interesting to note that City Relief Officer Miller seldom has to administer relief to an Italian family. They are apparently thrifty enough to withstand a hard season. Out of one hundred and fifty men of all nationalities that the City Engineer has on his list every day,

MORE IMPORTANT GAINS BY THE ALLIES

German Losses Are Reported at 1,200,000

ALD. G. H. DUNCAN
If there are Municipla Elections he will be a candidate for Mayor.

ALD. DUNCAN FOR MAYOR IF THERE IS AN ELECTION

Will Fall in Line if All the Positions Go by Acclammation, But Otherwise Will Be a Candidate

EXPLAINS HIS POSITION

Ald. Duncan stated to-day that he would be a candidate for the mayoralty. At the same time he said he wanted the ratepayers to clearly understand his position in regard to the proposal to allow the elections to go by acclamation. Months ago Mayor Buller had led him to believe that he would not accept a second term, that he intended to retire from municipal affairs and leave the field to others. On that understanding Ald. Duncan told the ratepayers of the south ward who asked him about 1915 that he intended to run for the mayoralty. Even a year ago he had been urged by many citizens to come out as a candidate, but with three in the field he decided to finish out his ...6 year term as alderman. At that time Mayor Buller stated that he would only serve as mayor for one year, and until the last few weeks has let it be understood that he would not run in the coming elections, and that the public position to which he was appointed would remove him from municipal affairs.

It was for this reason, Ald. Duncan states, and because many of the ratepayers had urged him to accept a nomination for Mayor that he entertained the idea.

Regarding Acclamation.

Recently there has been some talk of returning the present Council, School Board members and others by acclamation, but it has not been generally supported. Ald. Duncan states that he consented to receive the nomination for Mayor on the understanding that if there is no other election except for mayor he will not force an election and the resulting expense of several hundred dollars. In the meantime he has been making inquiries and finds that while there is not the keen interest manifested last year, there is considerable difficulty. He has been informed that the Trades and Labour Council intend to have a representative or two in several wards, that some former aldermen and several newcomers are going to contest their divisions, that the vacancies on the School Board are not going to be filled by acclamation. In the face of these prospects of an election for other positions, Alderman Duncan is assured that the mayoralty will not be the sole contest and that being the case, he is in the field. And while others are commencing work in their interests he has decided to permit no further time to elapse before placing his position squarely before the ratepayers.

His Municipal Experience.

If an election is held, Ald. Duncan will bring eight years of service as an alderman as one of his qualifications as a candidate for the mayoralty. For three years he has chairman of the Property committee and was chairman of the Board of Works during 1907 and 1914. He has an intimate knowledge of the requirements of the city, of the work that is under way and of the problems still to be grappled with. He has had plenty of experience and workings of the Council. Hence, with the probability of an election before him, Ald. Duncan is in the fight for the mayoralty, but he wants the ratepayers to know that the cause of the elections. If all the other positions go by acclamation, he is satisfied to fall in line, But in the meantime he is taking no chances.

MYSTERY ABOUT GERMAN "VICTORY"

Alleged Disaster to Russians Which Caused Demonstration in Berlin Has Not Been Explained---No Details of the Fighting or Anything in Regard to its Locality.

SPECIAL CABLE:

NEW YORK, Dec. 19.—A cable to the Herald from London this morning says:

The scene of the reported victory in Poland which caused such great celebration in Berlin on Thursday night and yesterday, when even school children were given a holiday to join in the demonstration, remains shrouded in mystery. Nothing from Berlin or Vienna localizes the battle, provides the details of fighting, or gives any tangible results.

A despatch from Amsterdam still further clouds the situation by quoting the Berlin newspapers as expressing their disappointment that in announcing the decisive victory no battlefields were mentioned, and no information of any kind on which to base a report of the event had been offered.

GENEVA, Dec. 19.—Swiss and German journals to-day publish statistics showing that the German losses to date exceed one million men. The figures published show that the losses in dead, wounded and prisoners are 1,200,000.

Several Tons Of Produce Changed Hands

On the Farmers' Produce Market —One More Market Before Christmas

TO-DAY'S MARKETS

It was a good natured crowd that invested the market this morning. The holiday itself may be nearly one week away, but that does not alter the fact that a large proportion of this morning's crowd was composed of people who were out to do their Christmas buying or from the farmer's standpoint, to sell produce under what is come to be considered the most advantageous circumstances. There are not a few farmers who hold that it is better to market produce a week before Christmas than on the day before. Prices are said to be higher and the demand greater. Besides, there is not the same frenzied rush in evidence. It's a case of shop early and avoid the rush. The doctrine of Christmas merchandising that the merchants have been imparting to the buying public ever since Adam was a boy scout. Procrastination is no less common to the rural districts than it is in the cities, all things being equal. It is to be supposed then that there will be a proportionate number of farmers who will delay their buying until the eleventh hour so that the market on Wednesday next will see as large, if not a larger crowd, than was the case to-day.

Increase in Acreage.

It is just as well that the farmer is no less a victim to procrastination than his city brother. He has not so much to lose and more to gain if the demand for produce happens to be brisk, which is usually the case. It ensures him a market and a supply of coin of the realm with which to meet his Christmas shopping account. It was only this morning that one farmer volunteered the information that he seldom failed to market on the Saturday before Chistmas, enough produce to meet his holiday disbursements. This farmer visits the Peterborough market about twice a year. He drives a distance of twenty-two miles, and in sixteen years, has only missed the Christmas market once.

In conversation with many of patrons of the market, it is learned that a large percentage of the farmers are taking to heart the advice coming from the government respecting the increase in crop acreage. Many have sown a larger quantity of fall wheat than was originally intended, and are contemplating cultivating in the spring considerably more land than is usually the case. This may be one form of patriotism, but it is also a realization of the exceptional opportunity presented by the war to obtain good prices.

To-day's Prices.

There was very little change in prices. If anything, the more plentiful lines of produce such as fowl, vegetables, etc., were a little cheaper. Eggs could hardly be had at any price. One lot of fresh eggs brought forty-five cents a dozen. Storage eggs were offered at thirty-five cents. There must have been a good many tons of fowl disposed of judging by the crowded condition of the market and the overloaded tables which fairly groaned under the burden. Chickens predominated and the prices ranged from 60 cents to a dollar. Turkeys sold at from $1.50 to $3.00 each, geese, $1 to $1.50 each, and ducks, $1.40 a pair. Butter was plentiful at 28c to 30c. a pound. On the outside market, business was equally brisk. Potatoes changed hands at 65c and 70c a bag. Apples as from $2 to $4 a barrel; pork at 12c a pound and beef at 12 and 13 cents.

Two Hundred Enjoyed The P.B.C. At Home

The annual At Home of the staff and students of the Peterborough Business College was held in their rooms last night and was an exceedingly enjoyable function. In the neighbourhood of two hundred students and their friends spent a most pleasant evening, every arrangement possible having been made for their happy entertainment by the members of the different committees in charge of the At Home. The room had been skillfully and tastefully decorated with pennants and evergreen, and made a beautiful setting for the affair.

During the evening the programme given below was very successfully presented, after which a promenade was held. Huycke's Orchestra supplied music of the most acceptable character, and delicious refreshments were served.

Overture—Orchestra.

Reading—Miss Rosabel Brooks.
Violin solo—Miss Dorothy Dobbin.
Vocal solo—Miss C. Hanson.
Piano duet—Miss M. Crough, Miss F. Johnston.

The short stay permitted only a brief conversation.

ESCAPED SPY HAILED FROM PITTSBURG PA.

Pte. Victor Cobb Suspected of Espionage Enlisted in Hanover Ont., And Was Attached to Highlanders

ESCAPED COURT MARTIAL

Special Cable:

TORONTO, Dec. 19— A long-distance conversation between a 'Star' reporter and S. X. Korman, Proprietor of the Reid House, at Hanover, Ont., this morning, revealed the fact that Private Victor Cobb of the 48th Highlanders, who is reported to have escaped while awaiting court martial on a charge of espionage at Salisbury Camp, is an American, hailing from Pittsburgh, Pa., and lived in Hanover for three or four months, engaging in the photo enlarging business. He joined the 31st Regiment of Owen Sound, whose contingent was later attached to the 48th Highlanders Regiment of the First Canadian contingent. Korman said Cobb had the appearance of a German Jew.

Grasshoppers Were Plentiful

Therefore Turkeys Are Numerous —Old Timer Says Sign Never Fails

Grasshoppers were very plentiful this year, hence it is to be concluded that there will be no scarcity of turkeys for the Christmas and New Year's dinner this year, and if there is no scarcity it is further evident that the prices will probably be lower than last year.

But back to the grasshoppers and the turkeys. What rubbish the casual reader will say, and how can grasshoppers have anything to do with the number or the price of turkeys. An old-timer who has been a close observer of conditions for years told the Examiner this morning that the grass hopper sign never lies. If there are large numbers of grasshoppers in the country in the summer time, it is a sure sign that in the fall there will be an abundance of turkeys. It is not because turkeys live on grasshoppers or that the insects exercise the poultry by leading them a merry race through the fields of newly mown hay. It is simply this. Turkeys are perhaps the hardest kind of poultry to raise properly. If the weather in the spring and early summer happens to be wet and disagreeable it is a ten to one shot that many of the young turkeys will die from one cause or another. If the weather is wet the grasshoppers will also be killed. But if it happens to be warm and in other ways favourable, grasshoppers and turkeys both prosper.

Few people believe nowadays that cheapness is necessarily economy. Cheap tea loaded with dust is a poor bargain at any price. Salada tea is all clean, whole leaves and is marvellous value.

ALLIES ADVANCE AT MANY POINTS

Gain a Mile at Labassee and at Other Points Have Made Appreciable Gains--Second Line of German Trenches Captured in Night Attacks.

SPECIAL CABLE:

PARIS, Dec. 19.—The statement to-day asserts: "On the 18th the French advanced in the region of Dixmude and Ypres, despite the marshy condition of the ground. In the region south of La Bassee a gain of a mile was made. Gains were also made in the regions of Corency and St. Laurent and between the Lys and Oise, despite violent counter attacks. In night attacks in the region of Albert we won to the second line of the German trenches. These were protected by wires. Several trenches were taken in the region of Matitz and Lihons. The Germans took a French trench north of Maricourt by hand grenades."

Mr. Tom Brown is Mentioned for The South Ward

It is stated that Mr. Thos. Brown, Lock street, would act as Aldermanic representative of the South Ward if he should be returned by acclamation, but is not particularly seeking a contest.

ALSATIAN IS FLAGSHIP

The Steamship "Alsatian" of the Allan Line, newly fitted and armed with eight six-inch guns and a number of quick-firers, has been chosen as the flagship of the "Mercantile Cruiser Squadron under command of Admiral De Chair, according to a recent dispatch.

Officials of the Allan Line, questioned about the matter, say that she was probably chosen because of her speed of 21 knots an hour and her seaworthiness.

The sister ships, "Alsatian" and "Calgarian," of the Allan Line are the first transatlantic steamers built with the "cruiser-stern," which makes them steadier in heavy weather, and consequently more suitable for this work.

That the Government should choose her is considered a great compliment to the Allan Line as well as to the "Alsatian" herself.

FINE ATTRACTION

The management of the Grand Opera House take great pleasure in announcing to their patrons, the appearance of that prince of comedians, Tom Marks, and a Company of merit for six nights, commencing Monday, Dec. 21st to 26th. The management feel justified in recommending this splendid attraction to their patrons, for the aim of the Tom Marks Company has always been to give the public the best that brains and money can bring them, and this season is no exception. Mr. Marks' careful selection of the case to faithfully portray the different roles and also the splendid vaudeville offered between the acts, makes the Tom Marks Company rank high in public favour.

On Monday night the company will present the clever four-act pastoral comedy, "The Golden Rule," a play that reaches the heart and teaches a lesson that could be classed, even better than a sermon.

The Rev. W. H. Dape, Manilla, will conduct services at the St. James' Methodist Church to-morrow. The Rev. Mr. Clarry will conduct the anniversary in the Manilla Methodist Church.

New Men Have Been Employed

By the City—Men Were Slow in Responding to the Call—Trenches Are All Filled

Between sixty and sixty-five men are engaged in the construction of sewers, both in the South End of the City and on Victoria Heights. In conformation with the policy laid down some time ago, the gang is changed every two weeks. Only married men are employed, preference being given to those with families. When the gang was changed a couple of days ago, the City Engineer had a notice posted at the corner of George and Simcoe streets, asking for men to replace those who have been in charge of the trenches for the past two weeks. The first fifteen men that appeared on the scene were Italians with two or three exceptions. It was then that City Engineer Parsons decided to place a sign on George Street asking for reinforcements. A couple of the natives of Sunny Italy were given a job, it being claimed that they are equally as deserving as any citizen who may be out of employment. It was not until the sign had been up for a day and all the jobs had been filled that any real interest was manifested. They came around a day after the trenches were filled with new men.

Are Seeking Work.

It is interesting to note that City Relief Officer Miller seldom has to administer relief to an Italian family. They are apparently thrifty enough to withstand a hard season. Out of one hundred and fifty men of all nationalities that the City Engineer has on his list only fifteen or sixteen are known to Relief Officer Miller. This is considered a good showing, as it indicates that the men are seeking work rather than charity.

CONTRIBUTED TO CHRISTMAS CHEER

Pupils of Local Public Schools Gave Very Generously of Fruit, Vegetables, etc., Yesterday

Yesterday all the pupils in the Public schools of the city were given an opportunity of contributing to the Christmas cheer of the more unfortunate families of the city. They responded in a noble manner and more than enough was secured to insure the replenishing of the tables of the poor with palatable viands for the Christmas week. In the Central school the pupils brought several car loads of fruit, vegetables, etc., which are being distributed to-day. The response was proportionately generous in the other schools of the city and the idea proved not only a good one theoretically, but of much value when actually put to the test. The spirit in which the edibles were given by the pupils was one of the admirable things about the carrying out of the plan.

THE WAR HAS AGED KAISER SAYS REPORT

Special Correspondent Who Saw Wilhelm In France Says That His Face is Much Thinner

SOME IMPRESSIONS

Special to The Examiner.

General Headquarters of the Kaiser in France, Nov. 21— (By courier and mail to New York).—The war has aged Kaiser Wilhelm. His hair is very white. The War Lord does not have the appearance of one who glories in or takes pleasure in the European war.

Such were the impressions as your correspondent saw the Kaiser here today. He looked fresh and in good health. But he was more grave, more earnest than the Kaiser whom I have seen in Berlin. His face was much thinner. He walked as straight as ever, but when I saw him first he was looking downward in deep thought.

It is forbidden to give the name of the town in which the Kaiser has his headquarters; but it is less than seventy-five miles from that of the Crown Prince, where I spent three days this week. The German Emperor lives in a beautiful little town and a half-storey private house. A little private park, with numerous walks, completely shut off from the streets connects the Chancellor's place with the Kaiser's. And it is here the Kaiser takes his daily walks.

The Kaiser has resumed his old practice of sawing wood, just as he used to do in Sanssouci Park, in Potsdam, and in Bellevue Park, in Berlin. I was told by one of his suite that he saws wood for one or two hours daily. He thinks this exercise one which keep him in the best physical trim. After a vigorous assault on a log, he sits down and rests. He smokes a cigarette and loses himself in thought. Then he turns to again later and saws more.

This letter was written, of course, before the Kaiser was taken ill.

Gifts For Poor "Kiddies"

Interesting Feature of Murray St. Sunday School Entertainment

A pleasing feature about the Christmas entertainment in the Murray Street Baptist Sunday School, last evening, was that the children, instead of receiving presents, brought gifts to be distributed among the poor youngsters of the City. In this way, articles valued at $40, were collected, and will bring joy to many children. Last night's event was very enjoyable. Mr. T. F. Matthews entertained the little folk with a talk on the war, illustrated by many excellent stereopticon views, some of which were shown here for the first time. Ald. Duncan also addressed the children. An interesting programme was given by the children, themselves, and tea was served by the ladies of the congregation.

An Englishman has invented a machine which splits the most knotty and crooked remnants of wood into evenly sized kindlings.

TWO WAYS.

Culture and civilization and humanity can be expressed in two ways. The British way was shown by the British rescuing 194 German combatants—who had a few minutes before been thirsty for, and shedding, British blood—from the sea after the Falkland Island naval battle. The German was was shown a few days later by German cruisers, in an utterly useless and unmilitary way, and for the mere sake of working destruction of life and property, shelling English coast cities and killing non-combatants, men, women and children, and destroying homes, churches and schools.

THE WHELPS' HELP.

It is not unpleasing to note that the lion's whelps are doing something to help. The Australian "separatist," "tin-pot" navy, sought and found, sunk and downed, the daring German raider the "Emden." Part of the crew of the Emden escaped and seizing a collier, hoisted the black flag, and began to prey on peaceful commerce and now we see that a Canadian "converted cruiser," the C.P.R. steamer, the Empress of Japan, taken over by the Admiralty on the outbreak of the war, has captured the collier corsair, having on board three officers and forty men. All's fish that comes to our nets.

THE MADE IN CANADA IDEA.

"Made in Canada," "Canada for Canadians," "business as usual," are appealing slogans at the present time. The two first rather contradict the third. If we give the two first effect we must aim further than doing "business as usual." We must adopt unusual methods of business. In the matter of shovel-making it appears that in Canada the wooden hnadles—the D handles for shovels—are imported from the United States by all the shovel-making firms of Canada. Isn't this something to think about? Canada is classed as a "wooden country," but it seems that we can't supply, or don't supply from our great forests, enough timber to put handles to a few thousand shovels. Why do we not find some effort made to utilize our own growth of ash to provide in Canada the handles for the shovels we make? Sir Robert Borden, in the first discussion of Canada's duty in the matter of naval provision, advocated, the building of our own ships in Canada—"of Canadian material, with the skill of our own workmen." There he struck the key of a true national policy, which we might well apply to shovel handles, nickel, lumber, and pulp production, and every other blessed thing that Canada has the raw material of, and can produce and manufacture. Canada is as much justified in importing, wheat and flour, as she is in importing shovel handles. We have the material here and we should use it in all things up to the last practicable stage of manufacture. We should apply the "Made-in-Canada" idea all through the gamut. We must do our Christmas buying, our general buying in Peterborough. The man or woman who buys outside the town, anything that can be obtained in town, is a traitor to the "Made-in-Canada" ideal. If we don't work together, pull together, we are not doing our duty to ourselves, nor to the country, nor to the Empire, which is pulling together in the greatest tug-of-war in the world's life.

THE GREATER GOOD.

An evening contemporary announces "another scheme to assist the poor of the city." The mayor "has arranged with the Federal member to have the land purchased for new public buildings utilized for a public skating rink." The Scriptures illustrate warped paternalism and futile giving, in the asking for bread and getting a stone. Somewhat in the same class is asking for bread and getting a slide. The spirit behind this inexpensive beneficence is of the right kind, but at the best it is cold comfort; our impulses to kindness might find better expression than in the form of "a frost." When we have by practical measures met all the demands for supplying the necessaries of life, to the poor, we can consistently cater to the pleasures and luxuries. The provision of a free skating rink, while it does not help "business as usual," with commercial enterprises of the same kind, is a good thing as a settled and permanent policy; but to suggest it as a 'x'cheme to assist the poor" doesn't warm us up to enthusiasm. If "the poor" have all their wants met—fuel, food and clothing — they will gladly dispense with the pleasure of skating. Nobody objects to anybody enjoying all the pleasure possible, but this is a practical world, and the provision of essentials seems to be the first call upon practical beneficence. Much of the hardship now being suffered in the city, as well as a good deal of the straitened circumstances that make the problem of getting the ends together a difficult one, comes from too arduous pursuit of pleasure at a season when provision should be made for meeting the demands of winter. This war and its evils are by some regarded as a visitation, as a stern reminder to a world too much bond up in pleasure seeking and the worship of, and the struggle for, material success. It provokes consideration of a readjustment of our attitude towards the most claimant demands of a higher plane of living, higher ambitions; to making moral improvement in its wider sense, the true obsession, rather than the pursuit of pleasure and money-getting. King Albert, of Belgium, said, in regard to the material injury he had suffered by the destruction of his country—"I have lost everything but my soul." With this as a text we can preach a great sermon to ourselves and teach ourselves a lesson as to what is the greatest good—the true ambition.

BANK OF OTTAWA EARNS $620,000.

Net profits of $620,691 are reported by the Bank of Ottawa for the fiscal year ended 30th November, 1914. These profits are some $86,000 less than they were for 1913, but in view of the world-wide depression must be regarded as satisfactory. Altogether the bank has $923,480 available for distribution made up of the balance carried forward of $202,000 and net profits of $620,000. This has been apportioned as follows: Four dividends at the rate of 12 per cent. per annum, $480,000; bank premises account, $75,000; officers' pension fund, $15,000; patriotic fund, $25,000, and transferred to rest account, $228,000.

A notable feature of the bank's report was the increase in its coin, Dominion notes and other quickly available assets. These amount to $16,180,000 or one million more than for the previous year. This provision of keeping a large proportion of its assets in liquid form was a wise one in view of the uncertain business conditions prevailing throughout the year, and must be regarded as good banking practice. The bank's total assets now stand at $68,529,000, or slightly over a million less than a year ago. In view, however, of the existing conditions, this was to be expected.

The decrease in net earnings noted above while partly the result of the business depression is also due to the provisions made by the management in regard to the shrinkages in the values of the bank's investments. The auditors call particular attention to these provisions which are a further evidence of careful management. Mr. Lee Knight is manager of the local branch.

THE BOURASSA INCIDENT.

Within the past few days we have had two examples of outroge of British ideals. One was the barbarous and murderous assault of German raiders upon peaceful British places and upon non-combatants, women and children, contrary to the principles of chivalry and humanity for which Britain stands. The other was the refusal of an assemblage of British citizens, of the right of free speech to a British subject. Mr. Henri Bourassa, a political free lance, was announced to speak at Ottawa and was refused a hearing. Now Mr. Bourassa, is not a Britisher to the liking of loyal Britishers. He is not loyal to British institutions and ideals; but he is a British subject in a British country, and however bizarre his opinions; no matter how repugnant to British ideals his way of giving them expression, he is as a British subject entitled to the right of free speech—the boast of British freedom. As Tennyson puts it, to live in a British country gives a man the right "to speak the thing he thinks"—to express his opinions. Thousands of times in the parks of London men are allowed to say the "things they think," and many things that come of not thinking—men are allowed to assail the government, to denounce royalty, and slander the institutions under which they live. And no harm comes of it—nobody is compelled to listen, they are as free to refuse to listen as these people are free to speak.

Another anti-British thing was to try to compel Bourassa to "wave the flag." His refusal to do so "under compulsion"; as he said, was not to his discredit; he did not act the hypocrite. If we judge by his words and writings, he has no great love for the flag, and to wave it under compulsion would not have made him in any way a more loyal or bteter British subject. Coercion of any kind is hostile to British principles and practice.

Mr. Bourassa is a clever man, a man of unusual ability, and on that account all the more dangerous. From the orthodox point of view he is not a good Briton, nor a good British-Canadian, nor a good Canadian of any kind. He is a political Ishmaelite, and stands as protagonist and acknowledged leader of the only organized disloyal element in Canada, one which denies, as Mr. Bourassa does, in effect and sentiment, the supremacy of British authority—British ideals. Mr. Bourassa, as the Nationalist leader, may talk treason and disloyalty, and be refused a hearing. This seems strange when three of his acolytes and co-workers in the cause of Nationalism, as fiery and outspoken as himself, if not more so at one time, were considered worthy of seats in the cabniet of a British Dominion, as constitutional advisors of the royal ruler of the great British Empire.

Mr. Bourassa is unworthy now; not fit to speak from a public platform in the capital of a great British Dominion. But to-day Mr. Bourassa is no worse than he was three years ago. He has set up no new cult of disloyalty. He was in spirit and opinion no more disloyal and un-British, last Wednesday night in the Opera House at Ottawa, than he was when, a Minister of the Crown brought him into a constituency of ultra-loyal Ontario; placed him upon an Ontario platform as "one of our leaders" of a party waging an Empire-saving campaign, in which much flag-waving was, not only a prominent, but literally and figuratively, a chief feature. Mr. Bourassa waved the flag then — he was not under compulsion. He waved it willingly as his contribution to the election of his Nationalist confreres, of cabinet and Speaker calibre, whose cry, or rather boast, was that they had had "to shoot holes through the flag to breathe the air of liberty." Madame Roland's cry, on the scaffold, "O Liberty ,how many crimes are committed in thy name," is fittingly matched by, "O Loyalty, how many crimes are committed in thy name."

IRELAND'S RELATION TO RECRUITING FOR ARMY

Because a few Dublin and Cork Irishmen irreconcilably hostile to England are trying to stop recruiting in Ireland, their aiders and abettors in the United States, not very influential in numbers or standing, would have us believe, as one of their newspapers puts it, that "the Irish race all over the world is arrayed against England and pledged to compass her downfall." Artemus Ward said no one could burlesque the Fenian movement in the States because it was in itself a burlesque without parallel—first, the invasion of Canada and then the appearance of a lot of New York cornerboys in Ireland who had no more chance of overwhelming British power than of recreating the universe. Those were sad days for sensible Irishmen, Protestant and Catholic, if only because the goings-on of these lunatics confirmed the bitter remark of a European philosopher, that the Irish have plenty of wit but no sense of humour, inasmuch as they appear to be unable to realize the absurdity of the positions in which they so frequently land themselves.

A New York weekly calls upon the Roman Catholic clergy in Ireland to discountenance recruiting; if they refuse, it says, they are bound to lose their influence. It would be well for this editor to read up Irish history. The priests as a body have always discouraged treason in every shape and form, and, in consequence, sometimes lost their influence for a while among extremists. A long time ago they set themselves to put down the "Whiteboys," who were attempting to get rid of exorbitant rents, low wages, want of employment and other unhappy economic conditions by resorting to murder on a large scale. They excommunicated them and denounced them at every turn with the result, as stated, by a Crown officer (Hely Hutchison) in the Irish House of Commons, that in many cases they were insulted and injured by their congregations, while the chapel doors were nailed up against them and their dues, slender at best, reduced or cut off. The Whiteboys got it into their heads that if they abandoned the Roman Catholic worship and became Protestants they would acquire the right of keeping arms in their possession; and that the historian Lecky writing of Munster tells us that "this notion led to scenes which had never before been witnessed in Ireland; Catholic chapels for many months were almost deserted, while the quiet Protestant churches were thronged by wild and tattered congregations come to qualify themselves for midnight outrage."

The priests did not flinch, the better class of Catholics rallied to their support, and after a long and severe campaign the "Whiteboys" were driven from the field. It will be so again. The priests are doing their best to promote recruiting, John Redmond, the Nationalist leader, is encouraging it, and all Ireland is loyal.

We all know that in ancient times, before Columbus discovered America or the reports of the Norsemen got abroad, it was believed that such a continent existed. The fishermen of Galway embodied the tradition in a song, which (done in English), ran thus:

In the ocean that hollows the rocks where we dwell,
A shadowy world has appeared, so they tell:
We deem it a region of sunshine and rest,
And call it Hy-Brasail, the Land of the Blest.

Canada and the United States have indeed been a world of sunshine and rest for millions of Irishmen driven by various causes from their native soil. It is not surprising that some Irish Americans have inherited a hatred for England, blamed as she was the misfortunes of their fathers, who, as Isaac Butt said, never thought of looking beyond the sheriff and bailiff to the glaring economic evils that rendered a vast emigration necessary if the Irish race was to live. But what sense is there in perpetuating the feud? Would any Irish American in his senses prefer German to British rule for Ireland, or militarism to the free institutions which the United States has borrowed from England?—Ottawa Journal.

Y. M. C. A. NOTES

The school boys are now having their holidays, so the rooms are filled with them morning, afternoon and evening, and will be until the 4th of January. The officers of the Association have planned many events to occur during the next two weeks, to interest and amuse the young men.

Water was turned on the tennis court Friday afternoon, and it is expected that the ice will be in condition for use by the fore-part of next week.

Mr. W. H. Collier kindly loaned his automobile for a trip to the woods for evergreens on Friday. The building is to be decorated on the first and second floors, and soon will be giving evidence of the holiday spirit.

An all-day programme has been planned for New Year's day which will include special events for boys in the forenoon, reception of parents and friends, and a musical programme in the afternoon, ad a programme of instruments and vocal music, gymnasium contests and so forth in the evening. The plan will be to throw the whole of the building open to the public on the 1st of January, making privileges free to all young men.

The building will be open as usual on Christmas day, except it will be closed from 12 to 2 and 5 to 7 p.m. The Association extends a cordial invitation to every young man to make the Y.M.C.A. his headquarters during the holiday season.

Dr. J. E. Middleton will address the Life Problem Club Sunday afternoon at 4:15 o'clock. Subject: "Choosing a Vocation." We trust that many young men will be present as this meeting is open to all men.

An extra attendance is expected at the Bible Class next Monday night in view of the little contest that has been on this week. Every young man is invited to unite in Bible Study work.

The basketball game will be played this evening between the Junior Business Men and the Dread-Nots. Excelsior Club vs. St. Paul's, to which every one is invited.

Round The Stores

And here's the sequel for one day. My old friend, Helen M., had come back for her honeymoon and she asked me as a favour to go out shopping with her. This time, she was shopping for house-furnishings, and lots of them.

"As usual, I haven't the slightest idea where to go," she confided, "but you have told me that I can do better at Richard Hall & Sons than out of town, and Lewis wants me to have everything right, so I have come to you to help me."

We took the car and were soon in the commodious rug room of Messrs. Hall & Son, where we were fortunate in meeting many people we know, who were out on the same mission as ourselves.

Helen needed a rug and what struck her at once was the range of handsome patterns that were spread out before her. We stayed with her and the salesman until she was safely launched into a discussion of the respective merits of several handsome imported patterns, and learned more about rugs in that short half-hour than I had ever learned before. She took a $60 beauty, and was satisfied the courtequs salesman had done her a favour.

After some other purchases of fancy cretons and window furnishings we went down stairs. Before leaving we asked the salesman about the condition of business—if he was like some others, complaining about slackness in trade.

"No. We have had little reason to complain of business. The season is not quite up to last year, but we are well pleased, as our sales are largely high-class goods, so that when we make a sale it counts."

It was a beautiful shirtwaist that I found Helen inspecting, I'll grant you, but when the lady mentioned the price, it made her open her eyes. Still she liked it, and she preferred this good one to two medium-priced ones. So it stayed—or rather went along with the other parcels.

An evening cloak and a travelling suit came next. These were selected with little difficulty as Helen seemed to see just what she wanted, and made no price objections.

The last counter visited she bought a various assortment of fluffy things, some real Irish linen handkerchiefs, and dainty neckwear, which Hall & Son are featuring.

The store, itself, is nicely decorated with Christmas festoonings, is airy and convenient, although thronged all the time with busy buyers. Shopping, however, is attended with advantages that will compensate for starting out an hour or so sooner than usual.

UNCLE OF DEPOSED KHEDIVE APPOINTED TO THE POST

French Government Recognizes the British Suzerainty Over Egypt and Britain Gives Notice of Adherence to the Franco-Moorish Treaty of 1912 Giving France Protectorate Over Morocco

LONDON, Dec. 19.—A British protectorate over Egypt was formally proclaimed yesterday and Prince Hussein Kemal has been appointed sultan and has accepted that position. Prince Hussein is an uncle of Abbas Hilmi, until now khedive. The French Government has recognized the British protectorate over this country, in which France formerly had such important interests, and in return the British Government has given notice that it adheres to the Franco-Moorish treaty of 1912, which, following the Agadir affair, gave France a protectorate over Morocco.

In a letter addressed to Prince Hussein on his appointment as the British acting high commissioner for Egypt, Milne Cheetham, details the efforts which he says Britain made to avoid war with Turkey, and which were frustrated by the war party and the Ottoman Cabinet. Mr. Cheetham states that there is ample evidence that Abbas Hilmi had thrown in his lot with the enemies of Great Britain, with the result "that the rights over the Egyptian executive by the Sultan of Turkey and the late khedive are forfeited."

In inviting Prince Hussein to accept the office as "the prince of the family of Mohemet Ali most worthy to occupy the khedival position with the title and style of Sultan of Egypt." Mr. Cheetham announces that Great Britain accepts all the responsibilities for the defence of the territories under the new sultan, that all Egyptian subjects will be entitled to the protection of Great Britain, that with the disappearance of Ottoman suzerainty the restrictions placed by Ottoman firmans (proclamations) upon the numbers and organization of the army will disappear, that the relations with foreign powers will be conducted by a British representative in Cairo and that the religious convictions of the Egyptian subjects will be respected scrupulously.

WHITBY ABBEY PARTIALLY DESTROYED—This ancient and historic ruin is said to have been wrecked by German shells. The Abbey is 1,200 years old. The Danes laid waste a portion of it over 1,000 years ago when they invaded England. The ruins, before the German bombardment comprised the choir, the north transept and part of the nave.

MONTHLY MEETING OF THE W. C. T. U.

The regular monthly meeting of the local W.C.T.U. was held yesterday afternoon at the residence of Mrs. J. F. Thornton, 663 George Street, and took the form of a parlour meeting. Mrs. Whalley, the president, presided in her usual business-like manner.

Mrs. Thistlewaite, Mrs. H. A. Fife and Mrs. S. Taylor were appointed representatives from the W.C.T.U. to the Local Council of Women.

Mrs. Thornton, the Supt. of Flower Mission Work had charge of the programme and after some interesting and helpful discussion relating to the work, Mrs. (Dr.) Morrison read a paper, entitled, "The Flower Missions, Its Aims and Needs."

Mrs. R. J. Davidson sang a solo in her usual pleasing style, which was much enjoyed by all. Light refreshments were served, and one of the most delightful meetings of the Union was brought to a close. There was a good attendance.

Story of German "Victory" In East Is Unsupported

Dearly Bought Position is Evacuated by Germans as Useless for Their Purpose

LONDON, Dec. 19. — A Central News despatch from Petrograd says: According to high authority Lodz has been evacuated by the Germans, who are convinced that the town cannot serve as a base of operations.

The fighting around Lodz was the bloodiest in the whole campaign. Germany sacrificing her men ruthlessly in order to hold this strategic point on the Lowicz-Warsaw railway.

As there is as yet no official statement from Petrograd to bear out the claim made by Berlin of a sweeping victory in the east for German arms, attention is directed here to the warning of the military critic of The Vorwaerts against what it describes as the "misleading exaggeration" of the Berlin press. Another significant despatch is that from The London Times' Petrograd correspondent, which has passed the Russian censors, and which is most optimistic in tone, regarding the outcome of the present manoeuvres in Poland and Galicia.

The London Times' correspondent at Petrograd says:—

Like the Austro-Germanic inroads into Poland, the enemy's incursions into Galicia have been thrice repeated, each time with shorter range. At present the invaders have been arrested on the very borders of the province they seek to reconquer. Some manoeuvring on the part of Gen. Radko Dmitrieff's corps sufficed to check the invading columns, although they crossed the Carpathians along a wide front extending between the salt mines at Wieliczka and the headwaters of the River San. We are unable as yet to follow the events now developing in the northern Carpathian valleys. All we know for a certainty is that the greatest animation prevails at Lwow (Lemberg) and among the Russian troops in Galicia at the prospect of finally crushing the foe.

Nor is definite information forthcoming yet regarding the new point of attack in Von Hindenburg's invasion of Poland. The fruitlessness of his efforts to break through the Russian lines on the Bsura must have suggested to him the advisability of action elsewhere — probably farther south, presumably in the region of Wielun. Whether the expected blow from that point will be directed against Warsaw or Kielce must be a matter of speculation. It should be remembered that the enemy's real objective is not the "possession of Warsaw or the relief of Przemysl, etc., but the prevention of the Russian invasion of Silesia. This explains the feverish activity of the German high command and the apparent inability to stick to a consecutive line of operation. Russian and allied plans are well served thereby, as the enemy comes out to be destroyed instead of waiting in the trenches at home, but all his efforts can only stave off the day of reckoning.

The Russian armies are within a stone's throw of the Silesian border, north of Cracow, which is the real pivot of all operations at present developing. The desperate flanking moves on the Bsura and from the Carpathians only serve to indicate that the Russians hold the pivot firmly, whence in good time they will sweep the flanking columns off the road of advance into the heart of Germany.

CANADIANS AT THE FRONT

Several Drafted to Other Regiments Have Been Wounded

SALISBURY, Dec. 19. — Several Canadians who came over with the Princess Patricias left the regiment upon arrival here to rejoin the British regiments with which they were formerly identified. Three of them were wounded in recent battles. Corpl. De Wilton, ex-Life Guardsman, and formerly physical instructor of the Winnipeg police force, is reported killed. The others had their wounds treated in England and returned to the front.

Two Princess Patricia officers, Talbot Papineau, a Montreal lawyer, and Stewart of Halifax, Nova Scotia, were seriously burned when their tent caught fire while they slept. Their colleagues effected their rescue. Both were so badly burned that they cannot accompany the regiment to the front, but will follow later. Their recovery will take weeks.

Fifty men of the 78th Nova Scotia Highlanders have joined the Princess Patricia's Regiment, which was under strength. The Princess Patricias have replaced the Ross rifle with the British arm, which is the standard weapon of the division with which they will serve.

The Patricias form a part of the 80th Brigade. Their colleagues are the Argyll and Sutherland Highlanders, the Shropshires and the 60th Rifles, all regulars recently returned from Egypt and China. Gen. Snow commands the division.

He who does not think too much of himself is much more esteemed than he imagines.

Austrians Surrender To Servians.

PARIS, Dec. 19.—The Servian authorities have re-established themselves in the vicinity of Podrine, where the Austrian troops surrendered to them, says a despatch from Nish to a news agency. Prisoners say that the Austrian losses in the recent engagements in killed and wounded were large, and that they exceeded the losses in prisoners. Heavy casualities are shown by the innumerable unburied bodies of Austrian soldiers found on the line of their retreat. Loznitza, where there has been no fighting recently, was burned by the Austrians.

NEARING OSTEND

Report in London Says Important Position Has Been Taken

IS ROULERS RECAPTURED?

LONDON, Dec. 19.—A despatch to The Times from northern France says:—

Along the whole front from Nieuport to Lille the allies have assumed a determined offensive. Reports from various points show that the forward movement is meeting with general success. As a result of the activity along the coast the allied advanced troops are said to have passed Middelkerke, which is half way along the coast, between Nieuport and Ostend.

The enemy has been driven back from a number of trenches on the right bank of the Yser, our forces having broken through the German line just below the end of the inundation at Dixmude. The Belgians had the advantage, knowing the exact positions of the dikes and ditches, which were hidden under an expanse of murky waters which had proved death traps for the Germans wherever they attempted an attack. At a number of points the allies waded through the floods knee-deep. The enemy made a poor resistance. A large number of prisoners were taken.

The most effective of the allied frontal attacks was made near Lombaertzyde. The German losses are stated to be very heavy indeed.

It is also reported in London that British and French troops have taken Roulers.

Northwest of Lille the Germans again brought their heavy guns into play and bombarded Armentieres Thursday night. The shells fell on the town at the rate of two a minute for several hours. The allies' artillery replied to great effect. A general action now in progress is expected to continue for several days.

The following official communication was issued last night:

"We have gained some ground along the Downs at the northeast of Nieuport. We have repulsed two strong counter attacks by the enemy at the north of the road between Ypres and Menin.

"The British troops have advanced slightly in the region of Armentieres.

"Our artillery has destroyed two heavy batteries in the region of Verdun.

"There is nothing of importance to report from the other parts of the front."

"The day of Dec. 17 was marked, as we said yesterday, by an advance on our part in Belgium, where every counter attack undertaken by the enemy failed.

"In the region of Arras a vigorous offensive made us masters of several trenches.

"These are located at Auchy, La Bassee, St. Laurent and Blangy. At this last-mentioned place we occupied, on a front more than one kilometre (3-5 of a mile) long, almost all the first line trenches of the enemy.

"In the region of Tracy-le-Val, on the Aisne, and in Champagne, our heavy artillery won distinct advantages.

"In the Argonne the Germans blew up one of our trenches to the north of Four De Paris, and endeavored to move out from their position with three battalions of troops. This infantry attack, as well as the one they undertook at St. Hubert, was repulsed.

"To the east of the Meuse and in the Vosges there is nothing to report."

Practical Prescription Against Stomach Acidity

Nine-tenths of all cases of stomach trouble nowadays are caused by too much acid. In the beginning the stomach itself is not diseased but if this acid condition is allowed to continue, the acid is very likely to eat into the stomach walls and produce stomach ulcers which may render a radical surgical operation necessary even to prolong life. Therefore, an "acid stomach" is really a dangerous condition and should be treated seriously. It is utterly useless to take pepsin and ordinary stomach tablets. The excess acid or stomach hyperacidity must be neutralized by the administration of an efficient antacid. For this purpose the best remedy is bicarated magnesia taken in teaspoonful doses in a fourth of a glass of water after each meal. Larger quantities may be used if necessary as it is absolutely harmless. Be sure to ask your druggist for the bicarated magnesia as other forms of magnesia make effective stomach washes but they have not the same action on the stomach as the bicarated

He is Trying to Get Italy to Act as Peacemaker

MILAN, Dec. 19.—Prince von Buelow, who arrived in Rome Thursday, in his new ambassadorial capacity, is said in political circles to be intent on frustrating Italy's threatened entry into the European struggle and against his Imperial allies by inducing the Italian Government to assume the role of the world's peacemaker on the basis of "neither victor nor vanquished." The Kaiser deems the present an opportune time by reason of the persistent deadlock on the Belgian-French front, and the decided check all along the eastern line and to the Russian advance. This version well agrees with the statement in the Vatican press that Emperor Francis Joseph, regretting the failure of the Pope's appeal for a Christmas truce through persistent opposition of Russia and France, has warmly welcomed and supported Benedict XV.'s resolve to exert further diplomatic pressure at the beginning of the New Year, with a view to stopping the war.

Substantial Reduction In Cost Of Lighting For Domestic Purposes

The Rates That Will Shortly Be Adopted Will Be Among the Lowest of the Fifty or More Cities Served by the Hydro-Electric Commission —What One Cent's Worth of Electricity Will Do.

ONE CENT'S WORTH OF ELECTRICITY WILL

Boil two gallons of water.
Operate an eight-inch fan for sixteen hours.
Heat a foot warmer for two hours.
Heat a warming pad for twelve hours.
Heat an iron for one hour.
Make thirty slices of toast.
Boil seventy-five eggs.
Heat an electric oven for one hour.
Percolate fifty cups of coffee.
Make sixty cups of tea.

This information is printed on the back of the residence lighting account as adopted by the Peterborough Utilities Commission. It is based upon the new rates that will became effective at the beginning of the new year, or as soon as the necessary meters are secured. The rate now being charged is ten cents per Kilowatt hour. The new rate will be three cents per 100 square feet of floor area per month; minimum floor area charge for 1,000 square feet; maximum floor area charge for 3,000 square feet. This is a fixed charge. The consumption charge is 2.5 for the first thirty hours. Both the floor area charge and consumption charge is subject to a discount of ten per cent for prompt payment, making the net charges:—.17 and 2.1/. respectively. For additional consumption over thirty hours, there will be a corresponding reduction.

1 horse-power equal 746 Watts.
1 Kilowatt equals 1,000 Wats.
1 K.W. Hours (Kilowatt Hour) equals 1 Kilowatt used for one hour.

A Comparison.

The reductions as ordered by the Hydro-Electric Commission of Ontario, include every municipality now served by the Hydro with the exception of Toronto. It will be seen by the subjoined list of municipalities effected by the reductions, that Peterborough rates are among the lowest In fact there are only a half a dozen cities out of fifty or more that can boast of a lower rate. These cities are London, Ottawa, Port Arthur, St. Catharines, St. Thomas, and Welland. The lower rates that these towns enjoy, is stated to be due to the fact that their consumption is proportionately higher. The more power used, the lower the rate.

Encourage the Use.

The prinipal redution is in the charge for floor space, which goes down from 4c to 3c per 100 feet, with a minimum of 1,000 and a maximum of 3,000 square feet. Another feature of the new schedule is the addition of a second rate for domestic consumers to encourage the general use of cooking, laundry and other appliances which will stimulate Hydro consumption. This rate will be 10 per cent. of the initial rate.

"We hope," said Sir Adam to encourage greater use of electrical power in the homes of the people, for toasters, stoves, irons, vacuum cleaners and such appliances" said Sir Adam Beck. "Of course, it also means that the man who like to have his house lighted more than usual gets the benefit of a lower rate on excess lighting."

Important Feature.

Still another charge is in the rates for current not used for lighting purposes. This will mean a reduction of 50 per cent. for small housekeepers on current in excess of 40 kilowatts, and for large householders whose consumption is over 100 kilowatts.

Basis of Rates.

Following is the basis of the new charges: For incorporated villages, police villages and rural municipalities, 3 cents per 100 square feet on floor area per month; minimum floor area charge for 1,00 square feet; maximum floor area charge for 3,000 square feet. For urban districts outside the municipalities, 3 cents per 100 square feet of floor area; minimum floor area charge per month for 1,500 square feet; maximum floor area charge per month for 3,000 sq. feet. For cities and towns, 3 cents per 100 square feet of floor area per month; minimum floor area charge for 1,000 square feet; maximum floor area charge for 3,000 square feet.

THE SCHEDULE.

The power rates, with a few exceptions, remain the same. Stratford users are given a reduction from 3.6c to 3.3c per k.w.h. for the first 50 horse-power per month and from 2.4c to 2.2c for the second 50 h.p. St. Thomas users get an extra 10 per cent. for prompt payment, as do those of Preston, Rockwood and Guelph.

Following are the new rates for domestic use:

PLEASANT ADVENTURE AT JORDAN'S GREENHOUSES

Selecting Flowers for Christmas Favours Where There Are Tens of Thousands

"My, I'm tired," exclaimed my friend who had been out doing some morning shopping. "And I wanted to take this afternoon to go up to Jordan's green houses. I'd telephone for what I want, but they'll think I'm crazy if I ask them to pick out the flowers I want."

Tired as she was, the lady was not too tired for a revel among the delightful bloom under Jordan's expansive greenhouses—her favourite place for home grown flowers. And what she saw richly repaid her for her visit. She simply couldn't resist staying half the afternoon, and although the greenhouse men were busy as they could be, she was waited on with pleasing consideration for all her wishes. And then, saying, "Thank you. I think I have all I want," she went back on the street cars without any feeling of fatigue—in fact, rested and refreshed.

This lady learned, as many others are learning, that Jordan Bros. have made important improvements since last Christmas. In the first place, another new, improved greenhouse has been erected, 200 feet long by 30 feet wide, heated by steam and filled to its capacity with carnations. This gives them a stock of 10,000 carnations for home cutting, and when informed that from 400 to 500 were cut every day, the stock will be none too large.

Jordan Bros. are making a feature of home-grown flowers, which last better than those shipped in. Thousands of plants are now in bloom, affording ample scope for selections for the Christmas season by those wishing to bestow floral favours on their friends.

No more beautiful expression of the Christmas spirit could be shown than by a gift of flowers—and no bloom finer than Jordan's. Orders at their down-town retail store receive promptness and care.

EDISON Makes Carbolic Acid

In making their Phonograph Records, the Edison Company are the largest users of Carbolic Acid in the United States. Germany and Austria were the sources of supply previous to the war, and on the breaking out of hostilities this supply was cut off. Not to be hindered in their business, Mr. Edison had machinery prepared immediately and in eighteen days from the time the supply was cut off they were manufacturing their own carbolic acid right in their own factory.

The Edison Company also have the satisfaction of finding that the carbolic acid of their own manufacture is much superior to the imported article they used previously.

This will be far surpassed as a business achievement by the announcement contained in the following telegram from Edison headquarters, which was sent to the Canadian distributors, and a copy of which was sent to the J. M. Greene Music Co., of this City. It speaks for itself, and will relieve owners of Edison Diamond Disc and Cylinder Phonographs, or intending purchasers, of any doubt of the supply of instruments or records becoming short:

"Conditions at Edison plant not so serious as the newspapers report. Original Master moulds all safe in vaults. Laboratories and power plant not damaged. Officers promise new records and instruments within six weeks. 3,000 laborers now busy clearing away debris. New plant will be larger and better than ever.

"(Signed) B. W. SMITH,
"Committee,
"Thomas A. Edison Inc."

The J. M. Greene Company had large orders for both instruments and records placed before and since the fire, and these goods will be delivered from the large stock on hand, and in transit, for the Canadian distributors, so that the local firm will have practically no delay or shortage in their supply.

Orpheus Society's Premiere

Peterborough heard the Orpheus Society for the first time last night in a very satisfying concert in the Conservatory of Music Hall. To say the least, the almost capacity audience was delighted with the work of this recently formed choral organization. No attempt will be made here, to say the most. If the Orpheus Society's course of existence prove meteoric, eulogy at this period of its flight would only increase the subsequent disappointment over the disintegration of a musical society which has made a beginning so promising. However if the present enthusiasm be maintained, if certain shortcomings be attended to, if those pitfalls are avoided to which a group of musicians are most prone, then the "most" may be said with more assurance at a later date.

First of all, then, the Orpheus Society deserves every congratulation upon its initial endeavour. With only the rehearsals of the past few months as a preparation, the first-nighters did not expect anything heavy, and nothing particularly heavy was attempted. But the numbers presented by the chorus were decidedly pleasin. They also enabled the audience to appraise the power and talents of the Society, and they were more than sufficient to give the members the necessary confidence to continue their work, and especially to make that progress for which they seem capable.

Their several numbers demonstrated that the Orpheus Society has a splendid soprano section. If the other parts were of equivalent strength the balance would be more pronounced and the choral power would leave little to be desired for a community the size of Peterborough. The bases are fairly strong, but a little more volume would be an improveemnt. The same may be said of the tenor, and alto sections. The latter were heard to advantage, but they should be a trifle stronger and more confident. These remarks may not do justice to the real strength of the Society, for an opinion will scarcely hold when formed on hearing only a few selections. Last night, however, the chorus showed an over-balance in the soprano. In one sense it was a pleasing condition, for this resource was called upon most frequently, and the lyric melodies were borne richly, with precision, and a nicety of interpretation. It must not be understood that the other parts were unheard.

Several times when a diapason effect was desired or at least resulted, the weight of the sopranos was less pronounced. For instance this was quite noticeable in the chorus of Tipperary. But otherwise, the response to conductorial modulation showed a preponderance in the soprano. It may be that other parts were more carefully following the conductor, Mr. J. Edward Fisher, but, however, the defect, if such it may be termed, was not serious, and may be the result of the enthusiasm of the ladies.

An Entertainment.

The Orpheus Society is to be commended, too, upon minor considerations. There was only ten minutes' delay in opening, and when the ladies appeared the men of the Society arose while they took up their positions. Quite welcome, too, was the absence of encores. The chorus of Tipperary was repeated, but that was the exception. Not a few of the numbers were recorded that generous applause that indicated an encore, but the programme was proceeded with. There were practically no waits between numbers and the national anthem was sung at 10.15 p.m. All these little points undeniably contribute to the enjoyment of a musical evening. Coming to the programme, it was well arranged indeed. Mr. Fisher had the temerity—some might regard it— to use "sympathy" which others would ban because it was sung in the "The Firefly," one of the late light operas, This is a departure which, under safe limits, will undoubtedly help to make new friends for choral work in Peterborough. This particular number proved a delightful one and certainly provided a contrast and variety that alone makes for entertainment. "Calm is the Lake" was charmingly rendered. The ladies of the society sang "Foregt Me Not" and "The Shoogy-Shoo" very successfully. The former was a piquant number, the latter an odd Irish lilt with a love sentiment and a sweet refrain.

"The Feast of Adonis" the most ambitious offering, was sung quite successfully. The sopranos were heard at times above the other parts, but the latter ably responded when called upon. The basses and tenors sang the lines beginning "Say What Means this Merry Crowd," with fine effect. The soloists, Miss Ada Richardson, Mrs. R. W. Davidson, Mrs. J. A. Morgan, Mrs. A. A. Perrin, indicated the society's strength in individual. Miss Richardson in particular, was in fine voice. Altogether the society's debut was very pleasing and most promising. They announce "The Drum Major" in the near future and lovers of music wil also look forward to future entertainments of last night's character.

Other Members.

Mrs. Ryerson Ritchie sang "Streleski's "Happy Days" in a very happy manner. The 'cello obligato played by Mr. T. S. Smith lent a beautiful effect. Miss Lettie Drope is a newcomer to the city's music ranks and a welcome acquisition. She sang a double number, "March On," by Craxton and "Child's Song" by Liddle. Miss Drope sang the former with the verve it requires, but the lower register of the Child's Song displayed her mezzo-contralto more effectively. It was a lovely number and was rendered with a simplicity and naturalness that was delightful.

Mr. Frank Whitehouse pleased the audience with his double violin number, played with his usual ability. "Chant du Soir" by Bye, and "Salterelle" by Papine, were his selections. "Tipperary," sung by Mr. Ed. Hanrahan with the chorus was a rousing number. The changed harmony in the encore made a hit.

Miss Ada Richardson's solos were splendid. She sang in Italian, the prayer from Die Freischutz, "Piano, Piano, Canta Pio" and "Love Asleep, Awake." Her vocal resources have been referred to in the past and last night she was apparently at her best. The Weber number is exceptionally musical, and Miss Richardson brought out its beauty in a most creditable manner. Mrs. J. Lock sang 'Berceuse' from "Jocelyn," very sweetly. She also played the piano accompaniments for the choral numbers. The 'cello solos by Mr. T. S. Smith were enjoyed. He played an Intermezzo and also "Le Cygne' by Saint-Saens with good tone and expression.

Taken altogether the concert was a pleasing success. Mr. J. Edward Fisher is a talented accompanist and his first efforts show capable leadership. He arranged a programme that proved delightful, and with the hearty co-operation of the members the Orpheus Society should soon win a high place in choral work.

The officers of the society are:

Hon President— His Honour Judge Huycke.

President—G. O. Cameron, Esq.

Vice-President—Mrs. Ryerson Ritchie.

Executive committee—Mrs. J. Lock, Mrs. F. Whitehouse, Mrs. Greenslade, Mrs. A. Sanderson, Mrs. S. T. Medd, Mr. E. Jones, Mr. P. Naish.

Treasurer—Miss E. Richardson.

Secretary—Mr. E. Hanrahan.

The programme announced the members of the society as follows:

Anniversary of The George Street Sunday School

Services To-morrow and an Anniversary—Christmas Concert Will Be Given on Tuesday Night

To-morrow is the anniversary of the George Street Methodist Church and the Rev. G. I. Clendinnen of Kirkville will preach at both services. The Rev. Mr. Clendinnen is a splendid speaker and thoroughly acquainted with Sunday School and Young People's work. He is the representative member of the Montreal Conference on the Sunday School Board of the Methodist Church of Canada, and also a prominent member of the Union Committee.

The George Street Sunday School is in a very prosperous condition at present. It is largely attended, well organized and manned with a splendid staff of teachers and officers all under the very capable superintendent, Mr. S. R. Armstrong. The Grace Sunday School is a branch of the George Street School and is doing equally good work under the supervision of Mr. A. F. Hagerman. Both schools are under the same Board of Management and will join in the Anniversary services to-morrow.

On Tuesday evening, at eight o'clock, they will hold the anniversary Christmas concert with an excellent ly prepared programme by the children. An interesting feature of the evening will be the fact that all the classes are donating gifts in money or produce to the Belgian relief fund. All friends are welcome to the anniversary services.

ISSUED CHALLENGE TO ALL COMERS

Patrick McAuliffe Fined For Raising Disturbance in A Local Hotel

Patrick McAuliffe, who according to Chief Thompson, is not a resident of this city, got considerably the worse of liquor in the Munro House last night with the usual result. He was ordered out of the hotel by the proprietor, but answered the command by taking off his coat and overcoat and issuing a challenge which included everyone who had ever patronized the hotel. His language was far from dignified and the police were sent for.

"But how did he behave on the street?" asked the Magistrate.

"Very well, Your Worship," answered the Chief. "There were two constables with him."

McAuliffe was fined two dollars and costs, amounting to about six and a half dollars.

Mr. G. W. NEW SULTAN IS INSTALLED

Special to the Examiner.

CAIRO, Egypt., Dec. 19.—With the most elaborate ceremonies Prince Russein Kamel was formally installed as Sultan of Egypt to-day. A proclamation was read announcing the fall of Abbas Tilmi, the former Khedive, and amid an imposing array of splendour, the Sultan named by the British Government in its decree establishing a protectorate over Egypt, was escorted through the streets by the English, native and colonial troops.

Great crowds filled the streets and the occasion was marked by a general holiday. Egyptian and English flags decorated the buildings, while the two banners were displayed over all the government buildings.

All local authorities took part in the ceremonies incident to the elevation of the new Sultan to the throne, declared vacant as a result of the former Khedive's alliance with Turkey and Germany.

DECLINE IN SUGAR WAS THE FEATURE

Shelled Walnut Situation is Still Interesting

The following comment on the market situation, as regards food stuffs, will appear in Canadian Grocer this week:

Office of Publication,
Toronto, Dec. 17, 1914

The feature of the grocery markets this week is the decline of twenty cents per hundred in the sugar market. Reports from our correspondents in the far West as well as in the East all indicate the decline. As previous reports in this paper intimated, the drop was expected so that it isn't at all likely any of our readers were buying on what they considered an advancing market. The direct cause of this decline was the further weakening in the New York market. Refined sugar there is around $4.85 per hundred, while the Canadian duty, including the war tax, is $1.00. Obviously the wholesale market in Canada cannot go beyond the total of these two figures, else Canadian refiners would have competition from the United States. It should be understood that our refiners are refining to-day the expensive raws they purchased on the advanced market of two months ago. The trade generally expect that when these have all been manufactured, further easing in the price of refined will be seen.

The shelled walnut situation is still interesting. The "Hesperian" which arrived at St. John, N.B., some days ago was confidently expected to have had the Christmas supplies on board, but the trade has again been disappointed. One or two importers report receipts from New York, but the bulk of the retail trade throughout the country will have to get along without the new goods until after Christmas. The price of the shelled walnuts that have come through is high, but when the remainder reach the market next week or later, quotations will be much lower.

Difficulty, too, is being experienced in getting through Sultanas and figs on account of Turkey's participation in the war, and stocks of these are exceedingly short.

For the holiday trade there will be plenty of oranges and at reasonable prices. Navels are today just as cheap as a year ago; the supply is abundant and the demand good.

Prices on turkeys and poultry generally have firmed up from a week ago, but they are not likely to reach the figures of last year. At the corresponding date in 1913 dressed turkey sold wholesale to the trade at from 20 to 24 cents per pound, according to quality, whereas now they are four or five cents lower. Considering the reasonable prices of poultry this year there seems no reason why almost anybody who wants it will not be able to have a turkey, chicken or goose to spread before the guests about the Christmas table.

Changes Made By The Court of Revision

In the Assessment for Street Paving—Number of Merchants Affected—Ground Floor Must Pay

WRONGLY ASSESSED

The Court of Revision composed of Messrs. W. F. Johnston (chairman), B. Morrow and J. Finnie met yesterday afternoon at three o'clock. A number of adjustments respecting the assessment for street paving was made.

On complaint of the Peterborough Curling Club, Messrs. J. T. and R. C. Braund were assessed for 94 feet 4 inches and the club for 20 feet. Messrs. Braund's assessment being half on each side of the land assessed to the Peterborough Curling Club.

The complaint of W. H. Bradburn and A. E. Micks was laid over until December the nineteenth.

J. W. McDermid complained that he was over-assessed on Charlotte Street for part lot one, north of Charlotte Street, west of George Street. Judgment: McDermid & Jury's assessment to be reduced to 60 feet, and A. N. Allison's increased to 32 feet 7 inches. The latter was present.

Assessment Confirmed.

P. Campbell for the Bank of Toronto and others, complained that they occupied the ground floor of their premises and that the upper floors should bear part of the charge. The assessment was confirmed. This means that the assessment must be paid by the occupants of the ground floor.

Toronto Savings and Loan Company stated that they were wrongly assessed for 11 feet 1 inch for a lane on south Hunter Street and east of George Street. Judgment: Toronto Savings and Loan Company be relieved of the assessment and the frontage of the lane charged to the city.

Toronto Savings and Loan Company also claimed that they were over-assessed for 396 and 400 George Street that it should be 50 feet 8 inches, instead of 51 feet 7 inches. The matter was laid over until the next sitting of the court.

Was Overcharged.

E. F. Payne claimed to be overcharged on part lot one, north Simcoe Street and east of George Street by the decision of the Court at its last sitting. Judgment: Order made at last sitting varied by adding 6 inches to Mr. Payne's assessment instead of 9 inches and by charging the city with 6 inches instead of 3 inches and adding it to the charge for Simcoe Street.

D. M. Minicola complained that he was overcharged at 410 1-2 George Street. Judgment: D. M. Minicola be relieved of charge for 4 feet 5 inches for a hallway and the owners, the Toronto Savings and Loan Company alone be assessed for it.

Bethany Tabernacle claimed that they were undercharged for part lot one, north Brock and west of George Streets. Judgment: The assessment of the Bethany Tabernacle increased by 5 feet and the assessment of Coleman Bros., reduced by 5 feet.

The assessment of Wm. Leck and Sons was reduced 21 feet 6 inches and 3 inches charged to the city for Brock Street.

The Wider Use Of The Flag

A second meeting to discuss ways and means of creating a wider use of the national emblem was held last evening in the Bank of Montreal chambers. The committee that was appointed at the previous meeting to bring in a report respecting the methods to be employed, submitted a report which was accepted. The matter was discussed, but nothing will be made public until the matter has been submitted to the City Council. However, the plans of the committee are of such a moderate nature that there is every reason to believe they will be endorsed by the Council.

Russian View of Our Campaign

(By H. Hamilton Fyfe, in the London Daily Mail.)

PETROGRAD, Nov. 10.—While I was in France during the first ten weeks of the war I used often to hear the question petulantly asked, "Why are the Russians not making more rapid progress?" It was an odd experience when I came to Russia to find people saying here, "How slow the French and English are in driving the Germans out of France and Belgium!"

No one can now chafe at the movement of the campaign in Poland, in Eastern Prussia, and in Galicia. The Russian Army has broken with its tradition of taking a long time to get to work. It has been handled with brilliant skill in strategy. The plans of its General Staff have been carried out by all ranks with magnificent vigour and self-sacrifice. Irresistible in its sweep, it has driven the Germans and the Austrians back across their frontiers broken and disheartened. It has gained the first great victory of the war. With all my heart I hope that by the time this reaches England the Allies on the western front will have been equally successful. I know too well the nature of their task. I am too grateful for the splendid pluck and persistence of the troops engaged, British, French and Belgian, to be impatient because their struggle is so long drawn out. But I have been asked to say how the campaign in the west strikes Russians, and I can only answer: They think it is making very slow progress.

Of course the mass of Russians have formed no impression of it at all, for the very good reason that they do not know it is going on. No do the mass of the better educated, the more widely informed, follow the campaign on the other side of Europe with much closer attention. The Russian newspapers are full of "our" war. The other campaign receives little notice. Daily official reports are printed, but "they are so much alike day after day." One cannot be surprised at readers who know more of the places named in them pasing them over quickly and saying, "Nothing ever seems to change over there."

I am speaking of the mass of newspaper readers. Among those who travel, among diplomats and politicians, among staff officers, among the more intelligent who fall into none of these categories, the fighting in Flanders, in Champagne, along the Eastern French frontier is watched with attention and discussed with knowledge. Yet even among these I have detected a feeling of disappointment.

They cannot understand why the French have not put more men into the field. "Where is the French Army?" a highly placed official asked. "We were told France could mobilize 4,000,000 men. We heard that she did actually assemble some 2¾ millions. So far as we can understand the position she has only one million actually engaged! Where are the rest?"

I explained the French system of filling up gaps. I showed how a very large reserve was kept in the background, from which men were drafted continually to step into the places of those who had fallen. He admitted the wisdom of this, but still he was not satisfied. "Even so," he protested, "a million in the fighting line is too few. The great blow should be struck now."

The resources of Russia are so inexhaustible that she can afford to strike the great blow and at the same time keep an immense reserve. Russians do not, perhaps, make enough allowance for a country with a population so much smaller.

Nor do they profess to be able to understand the British method of raising an army by voluntary enlistment after war has broken out. "You knew what your obligations were," they say. "You know that Germany was preparing to fight you, always drinking to 'The Day,' sending her busy spies among you, building ships and Zeppelins to take from you the mastery of the sea. How could you be content with your little army?"

"And how," several thoughtful Russians have asked me, "how was it you did not, immediately war was forced upon you, make military service an obligation? Surely every Britson would have voted for that if it had been put before him? You do not love your country less than we, or the French, or the Germans, do you? You once had the reputation, you English and Scotch and Irish, of being braver than any nation in the world. Have you changed? How is it that after more than three months you have not got as many men as you need?"

Thirty-eight Englishmen are going home from Petrograd to join the army. It is known here that an urgent suggestion came from the British Foreign Office to hold a meeting and appeal for recruits. A circular in very strong terms has been sent round the British colony pointing out the need for more volunteers. I am sure no such measures as the meeting and the circular would have been required if the impression had not prevailed that the War Office did not want offers of service.

"All who came out in August and September told us" (I quote one of the homeward-bound volunteers) "that men eager to go anywhere and fight anybody were running up and down the country at home and being refused." There is very likely some simple explanation, such as the explanation that the Cabinet Minister who said "Unmounted men preferred" for service in South Africa did not know the nature of the country. But thoughtful Russians are puzzled by the meeting and the circular, while thoughtless ones make sarcastic remarks.

Another thing which makes Russians ask questions is the assertion that much of our khaki is poor stuff, made of rags, which will not keep our soldiers either warm or dry. The Russian soldier's coat is made of a material so solid and strong that people buy it and use it as a floor covering, "because it never wears out." A general officer said to me "I have often seen in your English newspapers scathing remarks about bribery and corruption in Russia. Who has been taking bribes in this case? And will anyone be punished?"

I was not here when the campaign in defence of Belgium began so disastrously with the Battle of Mons and the retreat which followed, bringing the British force within danger of "annihilation," as General French said in his report. I am told the feeling in Russia, especially among soldiers, was one of blank astonishment and alarm. How General Joffre came to miscalculate the strength of the Germans at Mons may be explained some day, but it seemed, and still seems, an inexplicable error here. So profound a doubt did it sow as to the conduct of the campaign that one of the most prominent newspaper writers in Petrograd asked me as soon as he heard I came from the French battlefields "Is there any fear of another Sedan?"

I hope I reassured him. But the query showed how far inquietude affected even one who should be in a position to know.

Hector Smith, One of Twins in Court This Morning

Many a big man is given publicity for doing something that would be overlooked by anyone else. So it is with Hector Smith's appearance in the Police Court this morning. Hector was merely drunk in a public place yesterday, and was fined two dollars in the Police Court this morning. But in days gone by he has not only held a prominent position in what is perhaps one of the most exclusive associations in town—the Indian-lister's club—but has figured in some of the most amusing Police Court incidents on record. This is due to the fact that he has a twin brother whose appearance is the exact counterpart of Hector's. His name is Henry, and Henry has been known to accumulate a debt of ten dollars for being drunk while on the black list under Hector's name. The offence was not discovered until Hector, himself appeared in Court for the same offence and, of course, the denouement was highly amusing. It is not very often that a community can boast of two men so exactly alike that the eyes of the local Police force will be tricked by the similarity, and when you have both these men on the prohibited list, both addicted to drink, and both not averse to make the other assume certain responsibilities which he has no right to assume something must be expected to occur.

Gasoline is more dangerous than powder and more explosive than gun cotton.

CITY HALL PARAGRAPHS

A week from Monday will be Nomination Day. According to all accounts there will be a fairly large field of candidates for civic honours. There may or may not be a Mayoralty contest, but it is almost certain that each of the Aldermanic vacancies will be contested.

Must Pay.

At the adjourned sitting of the Court of Revision which was held yesterday afternoon, the Court ruled that the ground floor occupants of George Street stores must be assessed for street paving. This frees the occupants of offices and rooms on the upper floors from paying taxes on street paving.

WITH OTHER COUNCILS.

The Ontario Pipe Line Company, which supplies gas to Hamilton, will reduce the minimum price to 60 cents a month.

Hydro Turned on.

The Hydro-Electric power was turned on Thursday night at Port McNicoll. The town has contracted for thirty street lamps.

Taxes Increased.

Barton Township taxes have increased greatly during the last two or three years and the taxpayers are asking for an investigation.

Tenders Awarded.

The tender for the high level bridge at St. Catharines, over the Welland Canal was awarded to the Canadian Bridge Company for $91,000. This amount was $20,000 below the estimate of the St. Catharines engineers.

Prospective Resignations.

After considering the civic report of Judge Snider, the Hamilton Board of Control recommended the resignation of several Works Department officials. Among the names mentioned are those of City Engineer Sollingworth and Street Commissioner Weeden. The two city auditors, A. Fraser and W. Anderson will continue their duties until February 1.

Was Opposed.

Paris Town Council has appointed Mr. George Wheeler as electrical inspector, in the face of the opposition of the Provincial Hydro Board.

A Referendum.

Cobourg will take a referendum on the question of granting the franchise to women on January 1st.

Six New Cars.

Brantford has placed six fine new cars in service on the civic lines.

U. S. KEEPS OUT

Wilson Will Not Get Mixed Up in War Controversies.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 19.—Determined that the United States shall continue uninvolved in the controversy which has arisen between the European belligerents over alleged violations of The Hague conventions, President Wilson and Secretary Bryan will make no representations to Germany concerning the bombardment of the east coast of England by German warships.

Suggestions from the British press that the United States should take the initiative in protesting to Germany for the alleged infraction of an article of The Hague conventions, which prohibits naval bombardments of "undefended towns," has met with no response from the Washington Government.

No formal communication on the subject has come from Great Britain.

Limburg Cannot Pay Levy.

AMSTERDAM, Dec. 19. — A despatch to The Telegraaf from Maestricht says that the Germans have imposed a new war tax of 3,000,000 francs ($400,000) on the Belgian province of Limburg. The population is extremely poor and is unable to pay it.

British Sailings Suspended.

BUENOS AYRES, Dec. 19. — The escape of the German cruiser Dresden has caused a suspension of the sailings of British vessels to the Pacific. There are rumors here that another German fleet is coming.

THE WORLD OF SPORT

FOX SCORED FOUR GOALS AGAINST BOLTON WANDERERS

He Has Now Obtained More Goals Than Any Other Player in the Three Principal Leagues—Tommy Atkins Played Football in the War Zone—To-day's Prospects.

When certain critics in England are doing their best to stop the game, "Tommy" at the front keeps "shooting away" for goal. The following is from an eyewitness:

"The popularity of football is by no means confined to non-combatants and fields unswept by steel and lead. During a recent tour as near the zone of operations as inexorable staff officers and sentries will allow newspaper correspondents to approach—and that, thanks to special courtesies and facilities was nearer than most civilians were allowed — I saw quite a lot of it played by the indefatigable Tommy Atkins and his partner-in-arms, the French "piou-piou," some of them still grimed with powder, and all bearing the marks of battle, but unable to resist the temptation of a kick at the ball in spite of days and nights spent in the trenches, whence they had been sent for a well-earned rest.

"I have writen 'ball' between inverted commas because there was usually something about the shape and make-up of it that made one look twice before putting a name to it. In fact, it was quite distinguishable from the ordinary ball in this, that it was substituted by a bundle of rags, securely tied with a few yards of string—quite a pleasant reminder of our initial attempts to score a goal in the back garden.

"In spite of this drawback, and the consequent difficulties of neat passing, and long shots, the play was excellent, especially when a British eleven strove hard to outscore a French team. They and the spectators enjoyed the fun immensely. One of the men afterwards told me that he got a game quite often, on one occasion, on a misty morning, within a mile of the German lines. Guns boomed incessantly, and frequently bullets whistled ominously overhead. An officer on the touch-line remarked on the fact to another officer. 'Yes,' said the latter, 'the enemy is an excellent referee. You see, he is whistling fouls and off-sides.'"

Best Scorers.

Thanks to a fine performance when he scored four goals against Bolton Wanderers, Fox, of Bradford City, has now obtained more goals than any other player in the three principal leagues. But he has only a slight advantage over King of the Arsenal, who has noted on thirteen occasions, whilst McLean of Sheffield Wednesday, Shea of Blackburn Rovers, and Dominy of Southampton have each found the way to the goal twelve times.

Comment on British Games.

It cannot be said again this week that the brilliants will bump into each other in the first division of the English League. Notwithstanding this knowledge, however, there's quite a bunch of pretty keen struggles on the agenda for all that. The Throstles of West Bromwich will not likely warble through their test piece without mistake or blemish at Park Avenue. They are pretty classy songsters when a home at the Hawtorne all right, but Bradford is a locality where they somehow fail to blend so far as success is concerned. Even so, 'twill be no walk over for the Cits. The United Mancunians are due at Villa Park, Birmingham, and although the Old Trafford contingent appear to be improving somewhat there does not seem much hope for them returning with the spoils of the chase. Usually, in this game, a good sprinkling of goals are scored, much in the Villans' favour.

Everton who are now moving in great style will visit the pensioners of Chelsea at Stamford Bridge, and seeing that the toffee men are now at the top of their form, 'twould be no surprise to hear of them gaining another brace of points.

Oldham Athletic will visit Liverpool, which game is about the most knotty problem to solve. One never knows what the Merseysiders will take into their heads to do. Taking into consideration what has happened recently, one feels incliped under such circumstances to fancy the home team, though it cannot be denied that such a forecast has a daring flavour attached to it, more especially when it is taken into consideration that the Boundary Park men have so far this season done so well away from home.

Middlesboro and Blackburn Rovers appear to be a very even proposition in Ironopolis. In this case one is also inclined to favour the homesters.

In the second division, seven games only appear down for decision, and what should prove to be the most interesting game on the card is the meeting of North End and Derby County at Preston, where the homesters should just about win at the post.

Only half a dozen games are scheduled in the Southern League in which the meeting of Crystal Palace and Queen's Park Rangers should provide a good hard game, and where the Palace will probably just get home after a hard tussle.

In the Scottish League Falkirk and Morton should be a real good game, and if the bairns divide the spoils they will do well.

Hamilton Accies and Dundee should be another hard-fought game, and 'tis about time the first named came back with a victory.

The Erie Franchise May Go To Guelph Says Ottawa Report

OTTAWA, Dec. 19.—Though there is very little prospect for an early termination of hostilities between the warring nations, the Canadian Baseball League is proceeding with its preparedness for next summer just as if nothing had happened. President Fitzgerald is working up a scheme to transfer the Erie franchise to Guelph and it is authentically stated that all the other clubs will continue. Brantford, Peterborough, St. Thomas and Hamilton lost heavily last season, but the directors think they will take another fling at the game in the hope of redeeming some of their losses, though it is a certainty that the clubs will be lucky to finish out the season if the war continues next year. Meanwhile the schedule will be drafted and everything left in readiness. Several of the Ottawa players have written local directors, enquiring as to the possibility of a continuation and in each case they have been informed that the slogan will be "baseball as usual." All the Canadian League players are anxiously seeking news as to what will be done. One thing is certain, all the clubs will reduce their squads to the very limit and many a good player will be without baseball engagements next summer, unless the war suddenly comes to a conclusion. Managers for the clubs now in need of pilots will be named within a few weeks.

Charlie Hamilton will likely head the Hamilton club, and it would not be surprising to see "Doc" Reisling back at London. "Midge" Craven will continue at St. Thomas, and George Ort may be given full charge of the Toronto Beavers. Louie Cook, George Nill and "Lefty" Rogers, all Ottawa graduates, seek managerial berths, but will not likely land them. Peterborough is uncertain about "Curley" Blount, though he and his whole team were placed on the market a short time ago. Among the economical departures planned by the Canadian League are the reduction of salaries to $1,600 per month, inclusive of the managers; the cutting of squads to fourteen players; the elimination of useless training trips through a district where they are always sure to encounter rain, snow, hail and frost in the months of April and May; also the postponement of the opening of the pennant race until May 19th. Several of the clubs paid international salaries last year, but they learned their lesson, and realize that a continuation would drive the whole league into bankruptcy.

"Dusty" Bullock has written Manager Frank Shaughnessy that he does not wish to be sold or traded to St. Thomas. In fact, he intimatest that he would refuse to play in the railroad centre. Bullock wishes to return to Ottawa. He was of little use to the Senators last season, on account of his injuries.

The Ottawas are endeavouring to arrange for the return of Jack Mitchell next spring. Though Indianapolis drafted Mitchell for $500, the Ottawas are willing to give them that amount any day in the week. Jack is willing to return to Ottawa, and the Senators will likely get him unless Indianapolis should use him regularly. Mitchell will be a big drawing card.

Taking into consideration what the Ottawas had to cough up for lemons of the Gero, Robinson, Marshall, Paige type, Jack Mitchell was worth about ten thousand any day. At that, the Ottawas were the only club in about five hundred that agreed to Adrian's terms of $1,000 cash.

TRIGGER

The Peterborough Gun Club will hold a shoot at the traps on the Club grounds at the end of the C.G.E. car line on Friday morning next, at 9.30. This will be an open shoot and all shooters of the City are invited to attend. The Club House will be heated and made as comfortable as possible. Turkeys will be shot for. Bring your shot-guns with you. Ammunition can be procured on the grounds. For any further information apply to C. Wood, Secretary. 'Phone 64.

French Court At Thann

First Tribunal in Forty-four Years Officially Installed

PARIS, Dec. 19.—The first court in the reconquered territory of Thann, Alsace, was installed yesterday with ceremonial that was dramatic in its simplicity. The courtroom was crowded with girls in picturesque Alsatian costumes, and old men who had waited forty-odd years for the day when France should return to Alsace.

The courtroom was silent until the guard of honor of dragoons, posted back of the dais, drew their sabres at the word of command from their officers. Another officer then entered the room and advanced to the judge's desk and in solemn tones said:

"In the name of the French people——" The low sobbing of an old Alsatian unable to restrain his emotion interrupted the officer, but, after a short pause he continued, "and by virtue of the instructions of the general commanding the First Army we declare Monsieur —— judge at Thann with jurisdiction."

That was all. The young people rushed cheering out into the street while the old men remained for a while in their places in quiet ecstacy.

French Protectorate Recognised.

LONDON, Dec. 19.—Great Britain has recognised the French protectorate over Morocco and declared her adhesion to the Franco-Moroccan treaty of March, 1912.

The Franco-Moroccan treaty of 1912 instituted a French protectorate over Morocco with a French resident general who exercises civil and military powers under the sovereignty of the Sultan, at its head. The treaty proclaimed the religious freedom of the people and gave France the right for the maintenance of order to enter into military occupation of any points.

Previously France and Germany had signed a convention whereby Germany's commercial and industrial interests were not to be impeded and Germany undertook not to hinder the establishment of the protectorate.

WINNIPEG GRAIN MARKET.

WINNIPEG, Dec. 18.—Liverpool cables were firm and higher this morning, which caused a firmer opening in the market here. Wheat opened ½d to ⅝d higher, oats ¼d higher for May, and flax 1c higher. The advance was not maintained, owing to heavy profit-taking, which offset a decidedly active trade in export. One firm sold early this morning about 120,000 bushels, and later it was claimed that a round 500,000 bushels were sold for export. Terminal elevator companies, Ontario millers and exporters were all in the buying. Wheat closed ⅛c up on all months, oats unchanged to ⅛c up, and flax ½c to ⅝c higher.

There was a fair demand for all grades of cash wheat, quite equal to the offerings. There was also a fair enquiry for cash oats and flax, while for all grades of barley the demand was active. Cash wheat closed ⅛c higher on contract grades. Receipts were not heavy, inspections Thursday being 297 cars, as against 706 last year, and in sight were 155 cars.

MONTREAL GRAIN MARKET.

MONTREAL, Dec. 18.—There was an increased demand from foreign buyers for Manitoba spring wheat today and as the prices bid were practically unchanged only sales of a few odd loads were made for January shipment as the impression among exporters is that higher prices will rule later on and therefore they are not free sellers.

There was some demand on spot for flaxseed and sales of 70,000 bushels were made at prices ranging from $1.37 1-2 to $1.39 for No. 1 and $1.36 for No. 2 per bushel ex-store. The local markets for coarse grains continues quiet and steady. Flour is unchanged with only a small volume of business doing. Millfeed is fairly active and firm.

Demand for butter is quiet and cheese is firm. The exports of cheese for the past week were 9894 boxes against 10,827 for the like week last year. Eggs active at firm prices.

DULUTH GRAIN MARKET.

Interviews With The Great And The Near Great—What The People Are Saying

Because he knocked down two women while driving a livery outfit on George street last Monday, and didn't even stop to see how badly they were hurt, a local youth was fined $10. He was ashamed to confide to the court that he was trying to qualify for a position as chauffeur.

It is learned on the best of authority that what the suffering Belgians need most—in fact very much more than anything else—is wheat or the money to buy wheat.

"Those men, my dear are distant relatives." Distant relatives? Why Charlotte I thought they were brothers." "Of course they are, but they have not spoken to each other for over two years. That makes them distant relatives doesn't it?"

This is Saturday, December 19th. Procrastination in buying Christmas presents just now means the loss of time, money and satisfaction to the purchaser, and robs the merchant of a fair chance to please every customer.

It is said that the Czar is anxious to make Poland a powerful buffer state between Russia and Germany. In the next war we will have Polish as well as Belgian martyrs and refugees to look after.

Clubs are trumps for the policemen.

"There's one thing, Genevieve," if the young man stops calling on you a month before Christmas to avoid sending a Christmas gift you don't have to be at home to him when he wants to call in January."

"The man who is popular in his own home needn't worry about the rest of the world."

"It's though sometimes to have to buy shoes for the children, but we've got one satisfaction: That's infinitely better than having to buy shoes for automobile tires."

The wife of a Montreal Judge lost eight thousand dollars' worth of jewellery while on her way from Toronto to Montreal. No doubt she travelled on one of the fast trains via the Lakeshore front, therefore depriving us of an opportunity to suppose that the deed might have been committed while the train was passing through Peterborough.

To the Home Guards when on parade. Don't forget to call the other fellow's attention to the fact that he's out of step. Not a very momentous circumstance, but then he wouldn't know it unless you were there to bawl him out.

3,500 Students Are Liberated

The schools of the City closed yesterday for Christmas and two weeks will elapse before they open again in 1915. In the neighbourhood of 3,500 children and students will be affected by the closing of the schools for the holidays and a number of them particularly a large proportion of the Normal students, will leave the City to spend Christmas week at home.

Over one hundred local teachers will receive a very welcome relief from work during the coming two weeks, and betwen forty and fifty of them, whose homes are not in the city will hie away to their home towns for the holidays, to return again when the schools reopen. The holidays this year are several days longer than usual, and that fact will no doubt be fully taken advantage of by both teachers and pupils. The closing was marked by entertainments in numerous rooms of the various schools.

Host of Russians Coming Up

LONDON, Dec. 19.—A despatch to The Times from Warsaw, under date of Dec. 13, describes the great strength of the Russian defences between the present battle line and Warsaw and says he echoes the opinion of the authorities of Warsaw in stating that unless the German capture the town within a week all hope of their doing so will be gone forever, as strong Russian reinforcements are arriving.

The correspondent adds that the Germans are said to be very strong in artillery, especially so in heavy field guns.

Turks Lost Last African Holding.

LONDON, Dec. 19.—The British press yesterday makes a feature of the annexation of Egypt and the Soudan, which takes from the Sultan of Turkey 14,000,000 subjects and 1,300,000 square miles of land. This action moreover robs the Turk of his last foothold in Africa, Italy having taken Tripoli from him a few years ago.

Food for Belgians.

ROTTERDAM, Dec. 19. — The steamer Orn arrived here yesterday with 1,900 tons of food for the destitute Belgians.

FIERCE FIGHTING IS RESUMED IN FLANDERS

Two New Lines of German Trenches Reported Taken by French Troops Near Labassee--Enemy Reported to Have Evacuated Dixmude.

SPECIAL MORNING CABLE:

PARIS, Dec. 21.—Two new lines of German trenches are reported to have been taken by French troops southeast of La Bassee to-day in the resumption of a fierce attack which is being made on the enemy's position.

With the allied warships aiding in the fighting along the coast by the heavy bombardment of the German lines, the battle in Flanders and Northern France is steadily increasing in ferocity. It is now definitely stated that the coast city of Middlekirke has not been taken, but that operations from the region of Nieuport were developing satisfactorily.

Reports have again been received that the Germans have evacuated Dixmude.

GERMANS FORTIFYING BELGIUM ALL WAY TO EAST FRONTIER TO GAIN DELAY IN RETREAT

On the Belgian Frontier, Dec. 19.—One feature o fthe present German defensive, of which few authoritative details have become known, is the large number of troops who are employed solely in the preparation of various defence position between the Bruges and Courtrai line on the extreme west to the eastern Belgian frontier, in order to enable the retiring army to offer the maximum resistance and gain the maximum of delay as it falls back toward the Rhine.

The most elaborate defence works in Belgium are apparently along the line of the Meuse, embracing the reconstructed forts at Liege and Namur, and then eastward through Verviers and Aix-la-Chapelle.

These laborious preparaitons along the whole line indicate that the Germans expect to make a long and desperate stand before they are finally forced to relinquish the last Belgian stronghold.

GERMAN FLEET MAY ASTONISH THE WORLD

ROME, Dec. 19.—On his arrival at Rome, Prince von Buelow, once Imperial German Chancellor and now Ambassador to Italy, was informed of the bombardment of the English coast by German ships, but showed no surprise. He said that this achievement had been arranged prior to his leaving Berlin. He added:

"This is simply the prelude to what the German fleet is soon to undertake, which may astonish the world."

HOLLAND KEENLY FEELING BURDEN OF WAR SEES IN NEUTRALITY VICTORY TO BE PROUD OF

PARIS, Dec. 19.—The European edition of the Herald published a special despatch from The Hague, giving an interview with Dr. O. J. Treub, Dutch Minister of Finance.

He says Holland is keenly feeling the burden of the war. Should she succeed in maintaining strict neutrality she will have achieved a victory to be proud of.

In addition to her armed neutrality, Holland has 700,000 Belgian refugees to feed.

Holland's requirements have been covered for the winter, thanks to Dr. Treub, who has arranged with the United States to send her wheat.

DR. ALEXIS CARREL INSPECTS HOSPITALS

PARIS, Dec. 19.—Dr. Alexis Carrel, of New York, is now making an extended tour of investigation of the French military medical establishments, says the Dunkirk correspondent of the Petit Parisien. The government has sent special instructions to the military authorities to give Dr. Carrel every assistance in his task, adds the despatch.

The correspondent met Dr. Carrel at Zuydschoote attired in a French surgeon's uniform and having on one arm a gold stripe, such as usually given to a junior house surgeon on mobilization. The physician was talking with a sub-lieutenant of a transport corps, and the correspondent recognized in the officer the playwright, Francois de Croisset.

HUNGARIANS NOT HUNS

Hungary seems to have derived its name from the Huns, for, says the Victoria Colonist, it was on its plains that Attila set up his capital; but the Hungarians are not Huns. It is hardly possible that there can be no trace of Hunnish stock in the various peoples who go to make up the population of this monarchy and its tributary provinces, but the dominant race is the Magyar, which is of Asiatic origin, but came out of that continent more than five centuries after the Huns appeared on the steppes of Russia.

They now number about ten million. They have intermingled with their neighbours of Slavonic origin, and there is much sympathy between them; but the attitude toward the Germans has always been hostile and now is so. The Magyars are chiefly Roman Catholics, but even this does not create a bond of sympathy with the Roman Catholics of South Germany any more than the Protestantism of many of them makes them favourably disposed to the Protestants of North Germany. The fact is that the Magyars cherish certain ancient ideals, which set them apart from the other peoples of Europe, except the Slavs.

Their great ideal is independence, not of themselves as a race only, but of themselves as individuals. They tolerate Austrian domination, but continually resent its existence. They would have thrown it off long ago if they could have been sure of remaining free. It is said that they regard the Austrian Emperor, who is also their King, as an interloper, a stranger from Vienna, whose comings and goings concern them only to a very slight degree.

The Magyar nobles regard themselves as infinitely superior to any German potentate, and the Hapsburgs are German. It may be worth recalling here that the Austrian ruler was the German Emperor until the early part of the last century. Prussia was not then regarded as a part of Germany, except geographically.

The attitude of the Magyars toward the Germans is one of the factors that must be taken into account when the map of Europe is rearranged.

A PRESCRIPTION FOR SUCCESS

1. Strict honesty with your customer, competitor, banker, those who assist you, meaning labour, and in all things, especially with yourself.

2. A thorough knowledge of your business, both mechanically and commercially.

3. An efficient equipment and an efficient force to handle the equipment.

4. A knowledge of your costs sufficient at least to know whether you are making a fair profit on all your product.

5. Careful study of your overhead to see that you do not overload your productive capacity by complicated bookkeeping or methods of obtaining work.

6. Make your every customer a salesman for your business. This he is always willing to become if you treat him right and give him good service. It is easier to keep business than to get new business. Strain every effort in reason to please the customer.

7. Have satisfied, competent help, and see that they are supplied with an abundance of material; it is cheaper than labour.

8. Be careful that every step or movement is shortened to the uttermost, and that the hygiene of the workrooms is as good as it is possible to make it. PARTISAN SPIRIT AGAIN COMING TO LIFE IN BRITAIN

Unionists Attack Cabinet Members and Accuse Redmond of Not Making Good His Promise That the Irish Would Respond to the Call to Arms.

PUBLIC ALSO NETTLED BY KITCHENER'S SECRECY

LONDON, Dec. 9.—The surest sign that the strain of the war is lessening in this country is the revival of party spirit. Every one is conscious that enormous sacrifices have yet to be made; that the war may even go on for a year or two years more; that though entire confidence is felt as to the end, still nothing is certain in this world, least of all the fortunes of war.

The war has already become part of the everyday life of the nation; it oppresses but no longer extinguishes other feelings as it did at the outset. In the anxiety and excitement of the first three months party feeling was really submerged. There was a union of all forces to meet the national emergency, and there was no thought on any side of extracting political capital out of the catastrophe.

The first sign that the partisan was beginning to feel his feet once more was afforded in the columns of the ultra-Conservative Morning Post. When Antwerp fell and the Naval Brigade was cut up, that journal flatly charged Winston Churchill with having undertaken the defence of Antwerp entirely on his own; that no one else had any responsibility for it.

Churchill Exonerated.

It seems queer that one Minister could carry out an enterprise of that magnitude without the assent of his colleagues, especially of the War Secretary. Even allowing for Mr. Churchill's uncommon self-reliance, it denoted an extraordinary condition of demoralization in the Cabinet that such a piece of autocracy on his part was possible.

As a matter of fact it was not possible, and the Prime Minister stated explicitly in the House of Commons that the defence was undertaken with the knowledge and approval of all his colleagues and that the War Secretary was especially concerned in it.

Sir John French's last despatch has shown that the defence of Antwerp was part of a larger scheme of strategy in which half an army corps was intended to play its part. For failure to carry out his orders satisfactorily in that connection Gen. Sir Henry Rawlington was called down by the Commander-in-Chief and has been sent home to assist in the instruction of territorials. I mention this incident just to show how the good old reckless partisanship which will use any weapon to score a party point has been making itself felt again.

While Parliament was sitting there was evidence of an ostentatious setting aside of any wish for party advantage, while at the same time no opportunity was let slip of having a dig at the other side. In a crisis when the fate of the nation is really at stake as it has never been before, the injection of political virus into the conduct of this most momentous war may lead to disaster.

Redmond Also Assailed.

Again, when the war began the hatchet was buried with Ireland. John Redmond pledged himself, unasked, to assist in getting Irishmen to enlist. Every one acknowledges that he has honourably carried out that pledge. But he has met with opposition from the Sinn Feiners and it is urged that recruiting has not been satisfactory in Ireland.

The implication is that Redmond has not the power that entitled him to speak for Ireland. The Unionist papers here have been industriously playing this card and the Morning Post has been prominent in the work. Anything less calculated to inspire the recruiting spirit in Ireland than the gibes of British Unionist newspapers it would be impossible to imagine. Yet at a moment when recruits are urgently needed the disappointed Unionists vent their party feeling even at the cost of seriously checking recruiting.

Figures show that Ireland has actually contributed more than her quota in proportion to her men of military age. But because all the National Volunteers did not fly to the colours, Ireland is being charged with shirking her share of the burden. Why Irishmen should be expected to do so much more than Englishmen in the matter of enlistment is not clear.

There are great cities in England—Leeds, the capital of Yorkshire, is an example—where there has been virtually no recruiting at all. It is stated that only one per cent. of the men of military age in Leeds have enlisted. In the west of England the most strenuous efforts have brought only an insignificant response, while even in Suffolk, one of the counties marked out for the German invasion, if it ever comes, there are villages of considerable size which have not produced more than one or two recruits. But this slackness is not made a ground of criticism of England.

Recruiting Heavy Here.

There are parts of the country where the most patriotic spirit has been shown. Lancashire has led the van, Durham and Northumberland have sent sixty per cent. of their men of military age to the flag, and Birmingham shows the biggest enlistment in proportion to its population of any city. Manchester coming next.

Scotland has responded manfully, and it is computed that 30,000 Irishmen have enlisted in Scotland; in the city of Newcastle-upon-Tyne 1,950 recruits were Irish. In addition to this at the outbreak of the war Ireland was represented in the army in the ratio of forty-three per thousand of her population as against thirty-two per thousand in the case of England. Instead of being commended the Irish are being hectored, and bad blood is being deliberately recreated.

The attacks on Home Secretary McKenna for not seizing and imprisoning every German, male and female, in Great Britain, are also entirely partisan. It has been stated more than once that the War Office is the supreme authority in these matters, and that the Home Office can only act under its advice. But the head of the War Office is Lord Kitchener, whom it is not deemed expedient to assail, and Mr. McKenna is made the victim.

Not that Lord Kitchener is quite the idol now that he was at the beginning of the war. His abilities are recognized, but it is also seen that he has the defects of his qualities. He is a human machine, and is impervious to all exterior influences. He has treated the demands of the press with silent contempt. All the papers in the Kingdom have pointed out the evil results of his policy of secrecy as to the occurrences at the front, but he has not paid the slightest attention to criticism.

Special Men Still Wait

The most eminent men of both parties in the State have besought him to permit correspondents, properly accredited, and under due control, to accompany the army, but he has been deaf to their entreaties. A corps of special correspondents has been registered at the War Office for weeks and weeks. They have been signed conditions which would leave them the unquestioned slaves of the Military Censor, in the Field; they have bought expensive kits and have even engaged servants, but there seems to be less chance of their being allowed to go to the front now than at any time since the war began.

Somebody has said of Lord Kitchener—I think it was a colleague — that he has a "barrack room mind." Perhaps if he had any other kind of a mind he would not be equal to the strain of the job he has now on hand. One of its leading subordinates said of him the other day that if "K."—that is what they always call him—were amenable to the appeals or arguments of the press after he had made up his mind that correspondents are a source of danger and weakness, he would lack grit in other respects also and would not, in fact, be the man he is. But nevertheless "K." has done vastly more harm by his policy of concealing the work of the army than the correspondents, however indiscreet, could do by advertising it. That is the generela feeling, and his unreasoning obstinacy on this point has done his reputation injury.

Public Wants to Know.

As to the war itself the general feeling is that it is pursuing its appointed course; that Germany's ultimate defeat is assured, but that the cost in men and money will be incalculable. The naval losses have hit the popular imagination, and it is believed that the Admiralty now recognize the grave error of judgment then made in keeping the loss of the Audacious a secret so long.

It has shaken public confidence in the news that is given out.

People are asking: Has the Canopus gone—to the bottom, too? What has happened to the Chatham, of which not a word has been heard since the announcement that she had bottled up the Koenigsberg in East Africa? Was it only the Audacious that was lost off the northwest coast of Ireland?

Nothing short of the destruction of the German cruisers still at large will content public opinion now.

On the other hand the news that England has a highly successful 21 inch gun gives some gratification. This gun, it is said, throws a shell of nearly one and a half tons, inside of which there are sixty other deadly shells. Several of these guns are said to have been completed and five are said to be mounted to protect the Straits of Dover, across which they can carry!

Then it is rumoured that Great Britain has bought a parcel of 500,000 rifles from Japan, which has greatly eased the arming of the new forces. Rifles are not quickly made, and the total output of all the British works is said to be 17,000 per week. Among the Belgian refugees there is a large number of gunsmiths, and all these are now employed in the arms factories here. The recruits can be usefully trained up to a certain point without arms, but it is now said that rifles will be ready for them as quickly as they are ready for the rifles.

"THE BATTLE CRY"

Charles Neville Buck

The girl shook her head with the weariness of a long fought uncertainty.

"I wish I knew. But it isn't just a question of loving you, Roger. It's a question of marrying, too, and I can't marry you."

She could not help watching with an impersonal intentness how the fingers of the hand that drooped across his knee stiffened and opened and stiffened again and how he studied them as if they were the fingers of another man.

"You have promised—and you promised of your own free will."

She nodded. He had spoken, not argumentatively, but as one gently reminding her of something which she had seemed to forget.

"I promised because I wanted to. If I refuse now it's not exactly because I want to."

"Then what is it?"

"It's a very hard thing to tell you. If it hurts you, it has hurt me, too, and hurt me rather terribly . . . the reason, Roger, is yourself."

"I suppose," he said with an effort, his voice still rather dazed and stunned, "there are a good many things the matter with me, but what particular fault do you find fatal? Of course you know —" his utterance suddenly grew fervent—"that if it's humanly possible I'll change it."

Again the shake of her head denoted the hopelessness of argument. "It's nothing that you can change. Perhaps the fault is altogether mine . . . perhaps I'm just the sort of girl that sees things wrong. . . . I was proud of you this afternoon on the polo field . . . but life isn't just a polo field." She leaned forward and her hands went out in a somewhat pathetic gesture. "You mustn't think it's easy for me. Maybe if I loved you it wouldn't matter what you were or what you weren't. Maybe I'm not capable of real love—but I've always thought I loved you. I have never loved any one else. I wonder if we've both been mistaken about it all the while."

"I haven't been mistaken," he denied indignantly. "There is no question about my love for you."

In the moon he saw that her lashes were wet.

"Of course," he very gravely went on. "I couldn't hold you to any promise that your heart repudiates. Of course there's no question of that, but can't you make it just a little clearer? Precisely how do I fall short?"

Juanita sat silently studying his pallid face and set jaw. Some men would have been reproachful. In his generous attitude he appeared almost at his best, and it was very hard to let him go.

She was already hurting him enough. How could she tell him what was in her mind? "You are the gentleman, polished and letter-perfect, yet you are not after all — quite a man."

She turned and gazed off at the sky which the stars would have made effervescent with their bubbles of splintered light had the moon not dimmed them. Her intertwined fingers were tightly locked and her words came slowly and with difficulty. They came not in her own phrases, but in quotation:

"'That self-same instant, underneath,
The Duke rode past in his idle way,
Empty and fine like a swordless sheath.'"

There was a pause and her voice was very faint when she added:

"I want my husband not to be a swordless sheath."

The man nodded miserably and he asked, "Must I only ride past then, dear? Don't you remember other lines a little further on?. The Duke saw a woman and loved her—

"'And lo, a blade for a knight's emprise
Filled the fine empty sheath of a man,—
The Duke grew straightway brave and wise.'"

"The poet said so and yet—" she shook her head resolutely as if to shake away webs of clouding indecision—"and yet at the end of the poem he had done nothing."

Roger Malcolm moved a step toward her, then halted.

"Will you wait here a few minutes?" he begged. "It has all come so suddenly—I must try to think." She nodded and while from the bench she looked back, as she believed, on the ruins of all her life's air castles, she saw him pacing measuredly back and forth across the moonlit lawn. His hands were tight-held at his back and as he walked the great Dane shambled, with a sort of hulking stateliness, at his heels.

"It seems," he said, when he rejoined her, "that I have been weighed and found wanting. If it's a light matter to you — if it costs you nothing to exile me from your life, I supose I should accept my sentence without whimpering. But how about you? You aren't the sort of woman who fancies herself in love only to forget it in an instant. What does it mean to you?"

The girl's lips parted, but for a moment no sound came from them except a little gasp. She covered her face with her hands and her response came faintly from behind her fingers "I think that when this ends, my life ends. Afterwards it will be only existence."

At once he was kneeling by her side and had caught both her hands in his own, wresting them away from her face. His coice was now a-thrill once more with fervor. "Then you still love me! You love me whether you know it or not, and I'll not release you. . . . I know I've been weak in a hundred ways. I've never been hypocrite enough to deny that. . . . I know I'm self-indulgent and given to following the easiest course. . . . I've never had to fight to keep my head above water, but I'll change it all—everything. Give me the chance, dearest! Look at it fairly. Analyze yourself as well as me."

She smiled wistfully down into his eager face.

"You analyze me," she suggested.

"In your veins run two strains of blood," he began vehemently. "Your people have been soldiers and scholars. The soldiers have given you an exaggerated admiration for sheer untempered and unreasoning courage; the scholars have bequeathed you an over-balanced seriousness of thought. You grew up in a womanly family. You were mistress of your house when you were practically a baby. Since you were a little girl you were always with your grandfather, and your grandfather lived with abstractions for playmates to the day of his death."

"At least they were noble abstractions," she answered promptly.

"They were noble enough, but none the less abstractions. For example, a school in the far away Appalachian Mountains appeared a nearer concern to him than an honest city government here in Philadelphia. He educated you as he might have educated a trained nurse or a medical missionary, stuffing your little head, too, with abstract things; you who had never dressed or undressed yourself without a maid! I believe in my heart the old gentleman had an idea that you could go down there single-handed into that God-forgotten wilderness and teach the bare-footed little feudists to read and write!"

"They need schools badly down there," she said thoughtfully. "I know that he wanted me to devote a good part of his fortune to giving their starved minds and souls a chance. I know that I am expected to be his stewardess in carrying on his work. I'm very proud of that."

"That's all right," argued the man stoutly. "It's splendid, but just the same it shows that your judgment may be a little warped, dearest, with a life spent so close to ideals that it's far away from facts. Perhaps it may make you a trifle unjust to the ordinary, every-day sort of man that just lives normally and tried to be fairly decent about it. We can't all be Coeur de Lions, you know."

"Do you know why my grandfather was so interested in those mountaineers?" she loyally defended. "Do you realize that for two hundred years the clearest strain of Anglo-Saxon blood in America has been cut off, isolated, and left to rot in those hills?"

"I'm arguing now," he reminded her, "for what is, to me, the most vital issue in life, and these men and women have nothing to do with that. Please, dear, let me at least have my day in court."

From across the way came the gay chorus of the young people's song, contralto and bass and tenor, but by the stone bench there was silence. Malcolm had risen and stood waiting, and finally Juanita spoke again low and seriously.

"Those men and women have something to do with you, Roger. . . . This isn't a sudden decision. . . . I've fought it all out in my own mind and the verdict has been hard to reach, but it's reached now and it's final. All you say may be true. I may have taken to serious a view, but it's my view. Yet I've danced and ridden and played tennis and polo as much as any other girl. I've laughed as often, and as light-heartedly as any of them and I haven't been altogether without a sense of humour."

"You're the best sportswoman in the world; you have the keenest sense of humour in the world and you're altogether the most delectable girl in the world—but you aren't precisely infallible. Perhaps even your judgment of me is not infallible."

"I'm very fallible, but for six months I've been pondering this question. We're not meant for each other, Roger. There's no escaping it. If there had been I'd have escaped. I've been running here and there, looking wildly for a loop-hole . . . but now I know there is none. You asked me what giving you up means to me. I'll tell you. If I'd lived some centuries ago I'd have betaken me to a nunnery. I can't go on living in our world without you. I admit that freely, dear."

"Thank God you didn't live several centuries ago," came his fervent exclamation. "And you don't have to live without me."

Juanita shook her head again, the wistful smile deepened her eyes and twisted one corner of her lips.

"And so," she added suddenly, "I'm going to betake me to a more useful sort of nunnery, Roger, dear. I'm going to betake me to the Cumberland Mountains, to teach the 'bare-footed little feudists' how to read and write and wash their faces and comb their hair. I'm going to try to teach them to forget some things they already know; principally assassination from ambush."

CHAPTER II.

For just an instant Roger Malcolm stood transfixed with amazement. When his voice came it was as charged with dumfounded incredulity at his attitude.

"The Cumberland Mountains? You?" he questioned dully.

"Yes."

With the passionate vehemence of one struggling to break a paralyzing spell he was at her side and had swept her into his arms. His excitement tensed his muscles so fiercely that as the girl fluttered vainly in his grasp she gave a low exclamation of pain. The mastiff, deeply puzzled and torn between two allegiances, growled deep in his throat and took a stiff-legged step forward while the bristles rose along his quarters.

"By God, you shall do nothing of the sort!" Malcolm spoke in a hoarse whisper. "It's too damnably absurd. You are not going. Do you hear me? You are not going!"

"Please let me go,—you are hurting me," she said quietly and he found himself standing back and suddenly trembling, for as her face had almost brushed his, he had read her eyes and knew that in the end all argument would fail.

"My mind is finally made up," she reiterated gently. "That, too, is a thing I've been weighing and pondering these last six months."

"And mine is made up, too." He leaned forward and for just a moment thrilled her with a new command of pose and voice. "As God lives I sha'n't let you go. You're throwing my life away as well as your own, and I don't mean to let you do it."

"Don't you?" The girl stood leaning against a stone coping and just a hint of hope that she had underestimated him stole flickering into her pupils. "If you can stop me, do it. That will prove that the sheath is really filled with a blade for a knight's emprise'"

But even as he stood there in the moonlight with her eyes fixed on him the set of her jaw and resolute dominance of his eye melted into suffering of hopelessness which she ached to comfort. On the heels of fierce command followed expostulation and pleading.

"Juanita, your grandfather never meant that you should go into that lawless hell. He meant you to be the directing mind, not the labourer in the field. It's a life of squalour and dreariness. It would kill you."

ELDERLY PEOPLE SHOULD TAKE VINOL

Aged Texas Woman Says: "Old People Who Are Weak and Feeble Should Know the Merits of Vinol.

Grand Saline, Texas.—"I am an aged woman, and for a long time was weak and feeble, but I have found Vinol to be the best medicine to create strength for old people and for chronic colds I have ever taken. It has restored my health and strength so that I feel almost young again; in fact, I am now doing all my own housework.

"Old people who are weak and feeble should try Vinol and know its merits as I do. I have proved Vinol a good reliable medicine and much cheaper than paying doctor's bills, and you may publish what I say about Vinol for the benefit of others."—Mrs. FANNIE E. RODGERS, Grand Saline, Texas.

Vinol, our delicious cod liver and iron tonic, sharpens the appetite, aids digestion, enriches the blood, building up natural strength and energy.

We have seen such splendid results from its use that we return the money in every case where Vinol fails to build up and strengthen feeble old people, delicate children and the weak, nervous, run-down and debilitated, or stop chronic colds, coughs or bronchitis.

LADIES! DARKEN YOUR GREY HAIR

Use Grandma's Sage Tea and Sulphur Recipe and Nobody Will Know

The use of Sage and Sulphur for restoring faded, gray hair to its natural colour dates back to grandmother's time. She used it to keep her hair beautifully dark, glossy and abundant. Whenever her hair fell out or took on that dull, faded or streaked appearance, this simple mixture was applied with wonderful effect.

But brewing at home is mussy and out-of-date. Nowadays, by asking at any drug store for a 50-cent bottle of "Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound," you will get this famous old recipe which can be depended upon to restore natural colour and beauty to the hair and is splendid for dandruff, dry, feverish, itchy scalp and falling hair.

A well-known downtown druggist says it darkens the hair so naturally and evenly that nobody can tell it has been applied. You simply dampen a sponge or soft brush with it and draw this through your hair, taking one strand at a time. By morning the gray hair disappears, and after another application or two it becomes beautifully dark, glossy and abundant.

The Joy of Good Health Is Now Experienced

Nervousness, Dizzy Spells and Sleeplessness Are Now a Thing of the Past.

This is a cheerful letter from Mrs. Peacock, and it should bring joy to the heart of many a reader of this paper. Dizzy spells and sleeplessness are symptoms of exhausted nerves, and are the bugbear of many women, who do not know just what treatment to use.

You can read Mrs. Peacock's letter and take courage, for she has proven that Dr. Chase's Nerve Food is a complete cure for these troubles. So pleased was she with the results obtained that she wants other women to know about this food cure.

MRS. PEACOCK.

Mrs. Thomas Peacock, 23 Hiawatha street, St. Thomas, Ont., and whose husband is conductor on the Wabash Railway, states:—"I was quite run down in health, was very nervous, did not sleep well, and had frequent dizzy spells. Believing this to be the result of an exhausted nervous system I began using Dr. Chase's Nerve Food, and can say that this medicine did me a world of good. It entirely freed me of the symptoms stated above, built up my health generally, so that to-day I feel that I am quite well again."

In a more recent letter Mrs. Peacock writes:—"Dr. Chase's Nerve Food has done me a world of good, and I would be pleased to tell everybody so."

In nearly every issue of this paper you will find letters about Dr. Chase's medicines. If this one does not describe your case watch for others or write to us. Dr. Chase's Nerve Food, 50c a box, 6 for $2.50, all dealers, or Edmanson, Bates & Co., Limited, Toronto.

'Arry' and 'Arriet' visiting a picture gallery, became very much interested in a painting of falconers, entitled, "Hawking in the Olden Times." "'Awkin' in the Olden Times," murmured 'Arry, with knitted brows. "Well, they didn't arf do it! My word!" "On 'orseback an' all!" ejaculated 'Arriet. "But wot are they 'awkin'?" "I dunno," said 'Arry, "unles it's them parrots they're a-carryin'."

Patience—"Awfully slow, isn't he?" Patrice—"Dreadfully so. You know, he was once asked if he was going to marry a certain widow." "Oh, indeed! And what did he say?" "He said he'd think it over, and while he was thinking it over she married him."

PEACE ON EARTH GOOD WILL TO MEN

Only When Christ's Kingdom Is Established.

WHERE WE CAN LOOK FOR HELP

The Angel Message Still Unfulfilled. "War! War!" Instead of "Peace! Peace!"—"I Am Not Come to Send Peace, but a Sword"—The Bible Not Self-Contradictory—Consecrated Hearts, Sanctified Common Sense, the Fruit of the Spirit, Necessary to Understand the Bible—Harmonizing It.

[The matter under this heading is supplied by the Pastor Russell Lecture Bureau, who conduct the Brooklyn Tabernacle (unsectarian) Bible Studies, and who have arranged for its insertion.]

Cleveland, Ohio, Dec. 20. —Pastor Russell of Brooklyn preached here to-day in the I. B. S. A. Temple. As usual, he had a large audience and an attentive one. As usual, also, his discourse was out of the ordinary line. He took for his text the message of the angel at Jesus' birth: "Fear not; for, behold, I bring you Good Tidings of great joy; which shall be to all people." (Luke 2:10.) He said in part:

This prophecy has not been fulfilled as yet. Instead of peace and good will to men, we have war, savagery and other works of the flesh and of the Devil mentioned by St. Paul—anger, malice, hatred, envy, strife. Not only have the prayers for peace not been heeded, but instead the war spirit is kindling and spreading from nation to nation, fulfilling the prediction of the Bible — enveloping the world of mankind. The bitterness, hatred, ferocity, of the warring nations seems to increase daily. Magnified tales of ferocity are believed, and arouse corresponding bitterness and ferocity on either side. As we understand the Scriptures, the turmoil is only beginning—most of the wailing and gnashing of teeth, most of the anguish and despair, suffering, sorrow and devastation, are ahead of us. With the cessation of the war the Bible seems to predict the most gigantic revolution ever known and, following rapidly, a reign of lawlessness, anarchy, producing "a Time of Trouble such as never was since there was a nation."—Daniel 12:1.

Added to the physical distresses of the world, financial troubles impend in the midst of plenty. With every reason for prosperity the wheels of commerce are slow. The explanation given is loss of confidence—grit; but not so. The world's financiers and merchant princes are as courageous as ever, but they have met with new conditions. The wealth of the world, once represented in money, is now represented in collateral, stocks and bonds. The war has made a demand for gold, unsettling values of collaterals.

Gold is disappearing — becoming more valuable hourly. In the same proportion collaterals, stocks and bonds, become less valuable hourly; because of their plethora they are a drug on the financial market. The great insurance companies, the banks and all wealthy people have their reserve investments in these "securities." Additionally, the heavy losses of life in this war will be a serious financial blow to insurance companies. It is reasonably estimated that the fall of British bonds to one-half par has already made insolvent all the insurance companies of Great Britain. What must we expect as the war progresses toward anarchy?

As with every war, pestilential diseases must be expected, while interference with agriculture threatens famine in various parts. This is not an over-drawn picture, but a sober look behind the scenes.

"Hope thou in God!" In the midst of all these tribulations the world must learn more and more, until all know the lesson by heart, that earth's only hope is in God. This is one of the great lessons which God wishes all mankind to learn. For centuries men have boasted of what could and what could not be done—of the world's financial institutions, insurance associations, scientific learning and general common sense. These, we were assured, were a part of an evolutionary system which some time in the future would make man so wise, so great, so efficient, that there would be no more wars, no more dyings, no more trouble. We were reputed to be approaching that grand climax.

Some of the "Peace! Peace!" sermons of even a year ago seem laughably foolish to-day. The great and the wise deserted the Bible as a foolish old book gotten up by those who were merely emerging from monkey condition. They must yet learn the lesson recorded twenty-five centuries ago; namely, that the wisdom of their wise men has perished. (Isa. 29:14.) They must learn that the wisdom of men is foolishness with God, even as the Wisdom of God is foolishness with men.

By the time all shall have learned where to look for help in this great trouble, God's time will have come for giving the aid which He has provided for long centuries ago and promised in the Bible. The aid which God has provided is Messiah's Kingdom. Many have prayed, "Thy Kingdom come," who have failed to study the Message of the Kingdom. Many have thought that it had already come. Many others imagined that because in the past God has not exercised power and force in dealing with humanity therefore He will not do so in the future. The Bible, however, assures us that Messiah's Kingdom will be a forceful one. He will rule the nations "with a rod of iron." As a vessel of a potter "they shall be broken to shivers."

We have reached this time. It is the breaking and shaking processes foretold that, now beginning, are causing this Time of Trouble, which before it ends will be the greatest trouble ever known. The shaking, as we have already shown, will be social, political financial and religious. The creeds, representing the monstrous fallacies engrafted upon the teachings of the Bible in the Dark Ages, will be shaken to pieces, and all the great institutions misnamed "churches" will be shaken with them. Only the one True Church will stand—not the Church of England, not the Church of Rome, not the Church of Germany, not the Church of Russia, but the Church of God. It will include all saintly followers of Jesus of every nation and denomination; and it will exclude all others.

How glorious the hope that Messiah's Kingdom, backed by Divine power, will speedily set the world's affairs in order, bringing peace out of confusion, war, strife! Human strength weakened, human pride humbled into the dust, human hopes dashed, the world will be ready for the New Day—the New Era. The Bible beautifully pictures it as the rising of the Sun of Righteousness with healing in His beams—scattering the darkness, ignorance, superstition, sin, death, that have caused the night of sorrow never to be forgotten.

The Lord's people, awake and looking in the right direction, already perceive that we are in the dawning of the Millennium—that the blessings which have come to the world during the past forty years are Millennial blessings, foregleams of still greater favors soon to be poured out. These Millennial blessings have not brought proper responses in human hearts. Instead of gratitude, the spirit of selfishness has begotten discontent, covetousness, which will shortly eventuate, as the Bible tells, with every man's hand against his neighbor and against his brother.—Ezekiel 38:21; Zechariah 8:10.

But do the Scriptures contradict themselves? What did the Great Teacher mean when He declared, "I came not to send peace on the earth, but a sword"? (Matthew 10:34.) He referred prophetically to the effect which His gracious Message of love and favor would produce in the world during the reign of Sin. He well knew that the Prince of Darkness would oppose all of His followers, as well as Himself. It was foretold that whosoever would live godly would suffer persecution; and so it has been. Eighteen centuries have proven it!

Our Lord sent forth His followers unarmed, like Himself, to be peacemakers, to be helpers, to "follow peace with all men and holiness, without which no man shall see the Lord." He counseled His followers, "He that taketh the sword shall perish by the sword." But their Message of peace and love and the coming Kingdom which shall bless the whole world and fulfil the angelic prophecy of our text — these things seemed to anger the world — not merely the vicious, the ungodly, but the worldly professors of godliness who have schemes, plans and theories of their own to work out, which are contrary to the Gospel Message. The darkness, more or less mixed with selfishness, hateth the light, the Truth, the Love of God, neither cometh to the light, lest its deeds of darkness, selfishness, selfish ambition and hypocrisy be made manifest.

The Master knew what the effects of His Gospel Message would be in the world; and that only those who would compromise His Message could possibly live at peace—that all who would be loyal and faithful to Him would be traduced, slandered, persecuted—"beheaded," literaly or figuratively. His words, therefore, were a prophecy respecting the tribulations which all His faithful would surely have.

But more than this, His words were a prophecy respecting the nations. What is it that has brought us to our present degree of civilized savagery? What is it that makes of every business corporation a buccaneer, seeking the destruction of every competing financial craft? What is it that has sharpened the wits of humanity to such an extent that the majority find it difficult to be honest, because they see so many opportunities for dishonesty, while it is impossible for lawmakers to make new laws with sufficient rapidity to keep pace with the intelligent methods of circumvention?

The doctrines of Christ are in a certain sense responsible for all this. The liberty wherewith Christ makes free His followers and the light which He and they let shine upon a darkened world, received into unsanctified hearts and minds, have given wisdom which, misapplied, we call cunning and craft. The proof of what we say is found in the fact that other nations than those which have received this reflected light of Christianity are still quite in the background. Only now, as Christian civilization in a perverted form is reaching these peoples, are they awakening and becoming competitors with so-called Christendom.

Notwithstanding the eighteen centuries of delay, our text as a prophecy will surely be fulfilled by and through the One whom the angels announced and whose birth is very generally celebrated at this season. Many have gotten the wrong impression—that our Redeemer has been waging an unsuccessful warfare for eighteen centuries against Satan, sin and death. But from the Great Teacher's own lips we learn that His Kingdom is not of this Age—it belongs to the Age to come. The ruler of this world has been Satan, the Master declared. The dominion of [illegible] was given to [illegible] deceiving our race, putting darkness for light, has become the real ruler; using humanity merely as his tool. Scripturally he is styled "the god this world," and "the Prince of this world," or Age.

Perplexed and confused, many may ask; What, then, is the hope of the fulfilment of our text? We answer that our Master, who declared that He was not the Prince of this Age declared also that His Kingdom will be introduced with power and great glory; and that, although its initial manifestation will be with clouds, darkness, and a Time of Trouble such as never before has been, nevertheless His Reign will be glorious, triumphant and eternal. "He shall reign until He hath put all enemies under His feet."

Immanuel's victory means the overthrow of sin—the crushing of the Serpent's head. At the very beginning of the glorious Reign of Messiah, Satan shall be bound, and following its close he shall be destroyed in the Second Death, together with all those who love unrighteousness, after they shall have had full opportunity for recovery from the snares of Sin and Death Then, indeed, the whole world will proclaim the glory of God.

The Great King, who died, the Just for the unjust, eighteen centuries ago, that He might, judicially, bring mankind back into harmony with God, is to be the Great Restorer of all that was lost in Adam; and He will make all things new.—Revelation 21:5.

Everything appertaining to this great Plan of Salvation outlined in the Word of God is reasonable. The crucial testing of the elect Church is necessary in order that, as faithful and merciful priests of God and of Christ, associated with Him in His kingly glory, they may be God's instrumentality in succoring mankind from the fallen conditions which have resulted from six thousand years of sin and from the malignant influence of the Prince of Darkness. The thousand years which the Bible stipulates as the period of Messiah's Reign is a period neither too long nor too short in which to accomplish the world's salvation.

Some one may say, If it has required eighteen centuries for the development of the Church, how much more time will be necessary for the uplifting of the world? But, we answer, it is not the Divine Purpose to uplift the world to spirit nature and glory, but rather to Restitution blessings and conditions. It is because of the high exaltation offered to the Church that such crucial testings of sacrificial obedience even unto death is required. With the Prince of Darkness bound and with the Sun of Righteousness rising with healing in its beams, the darkness of sin, crime and sorrow will soon flee away.

One century of such blessed influence upon the world will surely work wonders, bringing in also inventions, blessings and comforts as yet undreamed. Next will come the gradual awakening of all who have fallen asleep in death. They will come forth from the prison-house of death, as the Scriptures declare; they will come forth that they may be made acquainted with the true God, with His glorious Son, our Redeemer, and with the principles of righteousness in contrast with the principles of sin.

We cannot suppose that it will require the majority of men, under these conditions, to sit long counting the value of the blessings of everlasting life and Restitution proffered them. The upward move, resurrection, uplifting; regeneration, will go rapidly on; while, meantime, generation after generation will come forth from the tomb and enjoy similar experiences. Finally all will have come forth; for the Love of God made this provision through the death of our Redeemer, who delighted to do the Father's will and who has already been rewarded gloriously with high exaltation to the Divine plane of glory, honor and immortality.

The attainment of the condition of good will amongst men will mean the attainment of human perfection. God is Love; and when our first parents were created an earthly image of God, love must have been the predominant quality of their characters. What we see of selfishness is largely a matter of heredity; and all of life's customs are in line with it, and continually increasing its hold upon us. But with the new King and the new Reign of Righteousness will come the glorious uplifting and transformation. Gradually, during the thousand years of Messiah's domination of the world, the evils of selfishness will be made apparent, and the beauties of holiness and love will be shown in contrast. Restitution rewards will lift all the willing and obedient up out of sin and selfishness to holiness and love. Then, with love as the very essence of man's being, good will towards men will everywhere prevail; for the Divine Law, almost effaced through the reign of Sin, will be rewritten in the human constitution. That Law, as we know, is, "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, with all thy mind, with all thy strength; and thy neighbor as thyself."

Finally, dear friends, how glad we are that this is true! How glad we are that the terrible falsehoods palmed off on us during the Dark Ages respecting a God of hatred and a Hell of everlasting torture are not true! Messiah's Kingdom will be a Kingdom of Peace, notwithstanding the fact that it will be ushered in by a Time of Trouble.

CONVICTION ANNULLED.

German Ex-Consul Is Freed From Sentence of Death.

LONDON, Dec. 19.—The court of criminal appeal, consisting of the Lord Chief Justice, Lord Reading, and four other justices, yesterday annulled the conviction of Nicholas Ahlers, who on December. 10 was found guilty of treason and sentenced to death.

Ahlers, a naturalized Englishman, formerly was German consul in Sunderland borough. He was accused of having aided German reservists to reach their country after the outbreak of the war.

Ahlers' appeal was allowed on the ground that from the evidence it did not follow that his actions were hostile to the country's interests, and also because the material point whether or not the prisoner, when he committed the alleged acts, knew war had been declared was not left to the jury in the way it should have been done.

Three Kings Meet.

COPENHAGEN, Dec. 19. — Huge crowds witnessed the arrival at Malmo, across the sound from Copenhagen, of the three Scandinavian Kings yesterday. The city was en fete, the business houses closed, and the principal building draped with entwined flags of the three countries.

Australia at Callao.

CALLAO, Peru, Dec. 19—The Australian battle cruiser Australia arrived here last evening.

NOTHING LIKE IT FOR COLDS.

Mrs. Holland Ferguson, Sheffield, N.B., writes: "Dr. Chase's Syrup of Linseed and Turpentine has cured my children and myself of severe colds. We are never without it in the house. There is nothing like it for colds and throat trouble, and it is so soothing and pleasant to take, my children would drink a whole bottle if they were permitted."

NINETY-THREE DEAD.

List of Identified Victims Is Completed at Hartlepool.

HARTLEPOOL, Dec. 19. — Hundreds of the inhabitants of Hartlepool fled inland yesterday when someone spread a false alarm that German ships were again off the port. Workmen rushed to their homes and sent their families to the interior. Many of the refugees were reassured, and returned to their homes last night.

Th list of identified dead in Hartlepool alone as a result of the German bombardment totals ninety-three. The widow of Lance-Corpl. Clark, who was killed by a shell, has received a message of sympathy from Lord Kitchener, and another from the King and Queen.

The Admiralty, replying to a request of the town officials for an inquiry into the attack, said:

"We appreciate the composure with which the Hartlepools have borne themselves in this first experience of German fire. All the facts are known to the Admiralty, and no further statement on them can be made at present."

Inquest at Scarborough.

SCARBOROUGH, Dec. 19. — Witnesses at yesterday's inquest over the victims of the German bombardment testified that forty minutes elapsed between the arrival and departure of the German cruisers, which carried no flags or national ensigns. It is estimated that a total of 350 shells were fired. The verdict of the coroner's jury on the victims was: "Killed by bombardment."

Believe Stefansson Is Safe.

OTTAWA, Dec. 19.—It is believed here that Stefansson, who started north from Hershel Island last winter with the announced intention of traveling 100 miles over the ice and taking soundings and making such observations as he could, really went on 200 miles farther north in the hope of discovering land and spending the summer there. If he did not find land he would have to spend the summer on the floating ice, but there would be an abundance of fish and game for food. Then this winter he would return south over the ice, and he should be heard from next spring.

BATHING IN JAPAN.

Natives Wash Themselves Clean Before Getting Into the Tub.

Partial accounts of the luxury of a Japanese bath lead us to believe that we have something yet to learn about what is regarded by many in this country as a necessity and by more as a supererogation—in Japan the bath is not only a necessity, but a delightful recreation.

The Japanese have a way of their own of taking a bath. They have a system that in some respects resembles that enforced at swimming pools in this country. You must first wash the body thoroughly, and then you enter the tub, the water of which is heated by an individual system. There, if you are in a public bathhouse, you may smoke and dose and chat with your friends in a dissipation that is said to be exceedingly refreshing. The water is kept hot, perhaps increases in heat, and when you leave the tub it is still regarded as fit for the next customer. In a private house the master and mistress may have their baths first, and the same water serves for the invigoration and diversion of the servants. The ignorant foreigner, who goes into the Japanese tub for the purpose of cleansing his body and with soap spoils the water for further use, is not only guilty of a social error, but entails a hardship on the household, including the servants.—Rochester Democrat.

Recognized.

A Pennsylvania lawyer known throughout the state for his sharpness once met his match in a very unexpected quarter.

An old woman was being cross examined by him as to how the testator had looked when he made a remark to her about some relatives.

"I don't remember. He's been dead three years," she answered testily.

"Do you mean to tell me that your memory is so bad that you cannot go back three years?" demanded the attorney.

The witness was silent.

"Did he look anything like me?" the lawyer finally ventured.

"Seems to me he did have the same sort of vacant look," responded the old lady.

An Unconventional Duke.

Kew Parish church had among former worshipers the first Duke of Cambridge, a strong but unconventional churchman, who made audible comments while the service was in progress. To the exhortation, "Let us pray," he would reply, "By all means," and during a dry summer he added to the "Amen" after the prayer for rain, "But we sha'n't get it till the wind changes." On hearing the words, "For we brought nothing into the world, neither may we carry anything out," he would ejaculate, "True, true; too many calls upon us for that."—London Globe.

The Smile of God's Love.

As the ice upon the mountain, when the warm breath of summer's sun breathes upon it, melts and divides into drops, each of which reflects an image of the sun, so life, in the smile of God's love, divides itself into separate forms, each bearing in it and reflecting an image of God's love.—Longfellow.

The Noblest Arms.

We may talk what we please of lilies, and lions rampant, and spread eagles, in fields d'or or d'argent, but if heraldry were guilded by reason a plow in a field of arable would be the most noble and ancient arms.—Abraham Cowley.

Antwerp, Now Peaceful City, Feels Iron Beneath Velvet

Food Plentiful and Normal in Price, Shops Reopened, Population Returns, but Germans Draw Veil of Secrecy Around Town and Egress Is Almost Impossible.

(Special Dispatch.)
IN HOLLAND, Dec. 19.

When the Germans took possession of Antwerp they drew over the city a veil which has become almost impenetrable. Antwerp is a city of mystery and silence.

Nothing is easier than to enter it. All are welcomed, and refugees are almost implored to return. The flight of the population really looked bad, and America was beginning to talk. Everything would be forgiven, the refugees were told, and the Prussian fairy godmother, in helmet, jackboots and breeches, with a sword peeping from beneath her cloak, would see that every one became rich and lived happily ever afterward.

Had not the All Highest decreed that their city was to be the first part of the German Empire? What more could they ask?

It was almost a case of the spider and the fly:—

"'Won't you walk into my parlor,' said the spider to the fly,
'Tis the prettiest little parlor that ever you did spy.'"

After the panic among the refugees had decreased they began to reconsider the situation. They had left their homes and everything they possessed, and were penniless and workless. It is not surprising that many decided to recross the frontier in the hope that they were choosing the lesser evil.

Free trains were provided for them by the Germans, and many thousands of them are now back in Antwerp. But there is no return to Holland. To leave is almost impossible.

An Englishman, however, has managed to make his way out this week and has lifted the veil. He describes a city half alive; mesmerized beneath the gaze of Prussian officials.

"I should think," he told me, "that 70,000 or 80,000 of those who fled during the bombardment have returned. About 200,000 of the normal population of 250,000 are in their homes, but they are almost all working class people. The middle and upper classes have not returned.

"Tramcars are running, and there is no lack of electric light, gas and water. The shops have been reopened, but customers are few. A few German uniforms are the only signs of the occupation.

"The city is managed by the councillors—under German direction. There are not more than 5,000 Germans in the place, and they all are middle aged men.

"Ever since their arrival the Germans have taken pains to create a good impression and wipe out the memories of Louvain and many other towns. Indeed, they might almost be a Pickwickian army of benevolent elderly gentlemen, anxious only for the well being of others and their own comfort.

Food Prices About Normal.

"By day there is little to notice except that the streets are half empty. The supply of food holds out, and Antwerp has received little of the consignments from America. Bread is sold in the shops at a price that is almost normal, and prices of other foods show only slight increases. Industries are carried on to some extent and there is liberty to do most things—except to leave.

"The object of drawing a ring round the city is not altogether to conceal what is taking place in it, what is happening behind certain closed gates is unknown to the citizens themselves. The fact is that the Germans are beginning to count men.

"When the Belgian government decided to call all available men to the colors the Germans recognized in Antwerp a valuable trap. This largely explains their invitation to refugees. The men are not forced to dig trenches, as at Liège and elsewhere, but they are prevented from joining the forces of the Allies. Germany at last realizes that every man counts.

"People go about their business until eight o'clock at night, when lights are extinguished and the streets become silent and empty. To be found abroad after that hour is to be arrested and fined.

"I was with friends a week ago, and the clock struck nine before I thought of the time. My friends pressed me to stay for the night.

"'Of course, we have prepared a bed for you,' they said, as if it were the most ordinary thing in the world. 'You must not think of venturing out.'

"As I had not far to walk I decided to take the risk of returning home, but before I had turned the corner two policemen pounced on me. They were Belgians, and there was no German in sight, so I had not much difficulty in persuading them not to arrest me, but they warned me that the regulation was to be strictly enforced in future.

Snow Covering Plains of Flanders Plays Havoc with Leaders' Plans

(Special Dispatch.)
IN WEST FLANDERS, Dec. 19.

Manoeuvring and out-manoeuvring one another by the pale light of the moon—when there is a moon—the soldiers of both armies now bless, now curse, the snow. It is, on the whole, more unwelcome than otherwise, because nothing can be more treacherous in disclosing the position of the trenches. When thin dark lines stretch across in the dim distance they indicate the ridge of a trench, and shells begin to drop, till many a trench becomes untenable.

Snow, of late, has worked havoc with the tactics of both sides. It has led to hasty removals of infantry from one position to another. It has brought, too, death to many a brave man who had hitherto held an impregnable position.

Snow is, in fact, dictating the fighting; there lately have been but few infantry movements, for no general will allow his men to operate over a white background. So the fighting is left for big guns, while the infantry waits patiently and bravely for the issue.

They have waited now many weeks, and are still waiting. I have just met a bombardier of the Royal Field Artillery who began fighting at Mons on August 26, and stuck to his gun till last Friday, when he received a few days' leave.

He had gone through the ordeal at Mons, the Marne, and on the Aisne, and more recently at Ypres, Lille, and La Bassée, and no man alive felt fitter than this fair-haired Saxon. Indeed the general fitness of the British soldiers is the secret of their powers of endurance.

Narrating some of his experiences the bombardier summed up the German methods of fighting in a homely sentence:—"They have been coming at us like bees at a jam pot, but there's to be no more getreating on our side, and when the Germans make their next move it will be a move backward. You have over a million chaps coming over to help us, haven't you?"

"Yes," I said, "and we will have a second million, too."

"Thank God! We talk of nothing else in the trenches but of our million recruits. And we all hope we shall be alive on the day when they are standing by us."

Conditions out here can never be worse than they are now. Rain and sleet have given way to snow, and snow has again been succeeded by a cold map. The country is one vast expanse of Arctic whiteness, while a biting frost has covered the canals, reservoirs, and all still waters with a filmy sheet of ice. To civilians the cold is exhilarating, for they have a daily refuge in a cosy hearth. But the soldiers are frozen and benumbed, and they are longing for something to do rather than remain inert in the trenches.

Fear of Officers, as Well as Love of the Fatherland, Drives Germans to Fight

Discipline Among Allied Troops Well Maintained, and Lord Kitchener's Injunction to Treat All Women with Respect Is Strictly Obeyed, Says Correspondent in Flanders—More Stringent Examination of Passengers for Continent.

(Special Dispatch.)
IN WEST FLANDERS, Dec. 19.

Above all the rumors of German retreats or preparations for retreat from Flanders and France, behind all the bombast of the German press and official wireless news, it is impossible to question their determination to continue attacking and their confidence in ultimate triumph. Another effort is to be made—it may have begun before this reaches you—to burst through to Calais with half a million troops, in obedience to the Kaiser's desperate army order that Calais must be taken at all cost by December 10. Yet it is death to the German soldier to be found with a copy of an English or French newspaper upon him.

And they know how to die, these German legions marching across Belgium to join battle with the Allies in, surely, the decisive contest in this region, though they know that for tens of thousands of them there will be no return.

There are two dominant impulses which make the Germans fling themselves headlong upon death with such recklessness that they inspire slavish admiration in their enemies. One is their genuine devotion to the Fatherland. Every German soldier now, whatever his opinions about war in general and the war in particular, realizes that the success of German arms alone can avert the most awful disasters from his beloved country. The other impulse is sheer terror of their officers. The German officer dare not lead his men into action as the Allies do, not because he is afraid of being shot by the enemy, but because there are always men in his own ranks who would joyfully snatch the first opportunity of shooting him.

Degrade German Cavalrymen.

A German cavalryman, twenty-four years of age, captured by the French near Ypres, has been sentenced to twenty years' hard labor by a military court for "robbery under arms." Before he was sent to the hulks he was ceremoniously degraded at Boulogne, and several hundred men of the garrison were paraded to witness his disgrace. He had been sent from the neighborhood of Lille toward Ypres with eighteen comrades on a reconnaissance. Before meeting a French patrol, which put his comrades to flight after killing one of them, he had robbed an elderly peasant on the road of the little money he had, and was captured through having dismounted to talk to a young woman, from whom he had taken a watch and brooch, behaving toward her with gross and threatening insolence.

He might consider himself very lucky, perhaps, not to have been shot on the spot. But it was decided to make him an example and degrade him publicly, a punishment which any soldier should regard as worse than death. His crimes and sentence having been read out by an officer, the buttons of his gray uniform were torn off one by one, and he was then marched with an escort of forty gendarmes up and down the ranks of the French troops. He showed no emotion of any kind except that his cheeks were very pale and he pressed his lips tightly together.

The discipline among the Allied troops, and especially in the British forces, is exceedingly severe as regards looting and other forms of misdemeanor. It is not a crime for a soldier to pick up and carry away with him anything he may find upon the ground, but he should report it to an officer if it is of any intrinsic value or if there is a possibility of the owner being traced. Breaking into a house to steal is punishable by death. Robbery on the highway is similarly a capital offence. Insults to women in any circumstances are severely punished, and gross outrages upon women earn, as they deserve, the extreme penalty.

Allied Soldiers Well Behaved.

There is good reason for stating emphatically that among the forces of the Allies the behavior of soldiers toward women throughout the war area has been uniformly good. The English have left an honorable reputation behind them wherever they have been. Lord Kitchener's injunction at the beginning of the war that all British troops must treat women with courtesy, but never with familiarity, while serving at the front has been nobly obeyed. When the Allies invade Germany the British will maintain their high standard of conduct in this respect, mainly because British traditions and the British character have made restraint in this direction necessary to self-respect.

The impudent daring of German spies is illustrated by an incident which occurred a few days ago on the Folkestone-Boulogne boat. A tall man wearing the khaki uniform of a British officer was noticed by a detective to be listening attentively to the conversation of a group of British officers, though taking no part in it. This started suspicion. The suspect at length made a clumsy attempt to open conversation with one of the group, but was received somewhat frostily on his showing some hesitation in naming his regiment and rank, his badges evidently perplexing the officer he had spoken to. The detective therefore accosted him as the boat approached Boulogne and showed him his own authority to interrogate him.

Satisfied that at any rate the suspect had no right to the uniform he was wearing, the detective arrested him and handed him over to the military authorities on landing.

Passengers to and from the Continent have been complaining at the recent new and much stricter examinations they have to undergo before embarking for England on the French side of the Channel or on leaving London, but incidents of this sort show how necessary thorough supervision of passengers between Britain and the Continent has become, either to prevent spies or suspects entering either country, or capturing them in their attempt to leave.

PROPHETIC SNAPSHOT OF GERMAN EMPEROR

(Special Dispatch.)
LONDON, Dec. 19.

"I call the picture 'The Beginning of the War.'" is how Sir Herbert Tree describes a remarkable photograph which he possesses illustrating a quarrel between the late King Edward and the Kaiser Wilhelm several years ago. The origin of the quarrel is not divulged, but Mr. Basset, the London correspondent of the Petit Parisien, relates how he first saw this snapshot, "taken five or six years ago, when King Edward VII., irritated by certain underhand tricks on the part of his nephew, found it necessary to tell William II. what he thought of him fairly sharply. The indiscreet photograph shows the end of the scene. The two sovereigns had been talking in a corner of the garden and after a discussion, which seems to have been very heated, King Edward has turned brusquely away, called his dogs to heel and, obviously displeased, has refused to hear another word. The Kaiser, looking thoroughly ashamed of himself, is trying to detain him, his hands outstretched in supplication . . . I have never seen such a striking and prophetic picture."

Sir Herbert Tree got the photograph in Homburg in 1910 from a certain prominent person who witnessed the royal quarrel. It may well be that that quarrel sowed the seeds of the Kaiser's anger that have attained such monstrous growth since the war began.

No man ever strove harder to maintain the peace of Europe than King Edward VII., and none imperilled the peace more persistently than the German Emperor has done during the last quarter of a century.

There never was any real affection between King Edward and his nephew. They quarrelled frequently, but their quarrels were private and personal affairs, though they were often provoked by the hot headed, impulsive and domineering attitude of the Kaiser, whose whole behavior was a standing challenge to King Edward's influence and popularity and a menace to the good relations of the two countries, which were maintained under the greatest difficulties by the consummate tact of the British sovereign.

From the moment the Kaiser came to the throne he set himself to eradicate any vestige of English influence in the German court. His reprehensible treatment of his mother (King Edward's eldest and favorite sister), his contempt for things English and his impudent expression of shame that he had any English blood in him wounded and distressed King Edward.

Germans Caught in Mud Are Slain by Hundreds

Lord Cavan Himself Counts Half a Thousand Dead in Front of Guards' Trenches Near Ypres—Oxford Man Killed in Dash.

(Special Dispatch.)
IN NORTHERN FRANCE, Dec. 19.

The snow and rain, which have made the battlefields and army quarters a foot or more deep in mud, have been succeeded by a keen frost, and the whole country is now covered with a thin layer of frozen snow. The ground rings hard to the foot. The soldiers are enjoying the change, for in the trenches, especially when sheltered from the wind, it is possible to keep warm, and the dryness is welcome, while all the British are excellently clad.

One case of the fatal effect of the mud of last week was told to me. Near Ypres Lord Cavan himself one day counted 500 dead in front of the Guards' trenches. The Guards had held their fire till the enemy was well advanced, and then, when the men floundered in the clogging, sticky mess which reached almost to their knees, they opened fire. It was a revenge for much these regiments have suffered, and it made the account a little more level on their side.

In the snowstorm last Thursday afternoon, too, a similar attack made on the south side of Ypres on trenches manned by English and French ended in a similar disaster to the Germans from the same cause, and not far behind that attack at the time the Prince of Wales, now, as you know attached to Sir John French's staff, was ploughing through the mud on foot, wrapping himself vainly against the blizzard and enjoying it all thoroughly. He had made a long tour of the lines that day, and among other regiments he saw—there was, of course, no parade, as the conditions and the weather are not those for State ceremony—was the London Scottish, from whose officers he learned more of their famous charge and of the much more difficult time they have had in the trenches. It is that waiting time in the trenches which tries the men's nerves, when your "pals" are killed and wounded beside you by the shrapnel, and you can do nothing. Rifle firing and bayonet work are nothing to it, for then there is give and take, and of the trenches the London Jocks have had their share.

An insight into the working of the two armies' artillery was given me by an R. F. A. man.

"The Germans," he said, "always work with spies and a map. It is not a bit of good pretending there are no spies around, for we have had to shoot too many, and some—as at Ypres, where the Mayor was shot—have been prominent people. From these, and of course from the aeroplanes, they get our exact position, and then they work out their range on their big scale maps, which are divided out into little squares. It is a good way, but not so good as ours, for if rumbles to pieces if we move.

"For instance, one day at Dickebusch, to the south of Ypres, they dropped shells all around our battery not fifteen yards away, but they could not get the spot. We did not lose a single man, but as usual had our scout out with his telephone instrument and his long coil of wire. He got to within fifty yards of their guns, and then gave us exact directions. Of course his job is dangerous, and seems almost impossible, but this time, and nearly always, it worked perfectly. We did not use a third of the shells they had spent on us, and we simply blew them to pieces. Yes, it was hanging on and the pluck of our scouts that did it."

While listening to this story at breakfast in a café three terrific explosions, one after the other, happened just outside the railway station, fifty yards away. We all knew quite well what it was, and a quiet, shy looking lad, an officer in a Welsh regiment just back from hospital, who had been foraging round the buffet on his own account for some breakfast, said softly, "Damn the fellow." No one else objected pub-ject except the townsfolk, who dashed past in a crowd. Aeroplane bombs on towns have become too common to cause any great disturbance in this land of death.

The undergraduate, too, has found, in this war a unique niche as a despatch rider on his motor bicycle, usually, by the way, designated a "jigger." "One of my tightest corners," said one of them, "was really awfully funny. I was paddling along one day on a pushbike, because the jigger had struck work, when I came to a broken telephone wire. By chance I had an instrument and things in my kit, so I started mending it, and then tapped the wire to see if it was working, and just when I had finished a French patrol dashed up. Gee! What a fuss they made, but I let them ring up our G. H. Q., while a dozen or more covered me with their rifles to satisfy themselves that I was quite all right.

"But here one learns lots of things. An Oxford man and I ran a train out of Ypres the other day. Of course, we didn't know anything about it, any more than we did about the moons of Jupiter, but we just pulled handles and things till the wheels went round. At first we went back, but after a bit it was all right, and we crawled along at a merry six miles an hour till we got to some points. Then one of us got down and looked at the map, saw which line was most likely and messed about with the levers till we got the right one. Lots of this is pure fun to the time the lads have in the trenches."

"Pure fun," he called it, but "Poor —" was also a Cambridge undergraduate despatch rider who died in the fun, and died, too, gamely, as they all will if they must, trying to blind through a sniping party at eighty miles an hour to get his despatch to his colonel.

AMERICAN TO TRAIN BRITISH AVIATORS

(Special Dispatch.)
LONDON, Dec. 19.

If there is one man more than another who has profited by the war that man is G. W. Beatty, the American aviator, who has established a school of aviation at the well known Hendon Aerodrome.

At the outbreak of hostilities the aerodrome underwent a complete metamorphosis. The exhibition flights were abandoned and the place was completely taken over by the British government—aeroplane, hangar and aerodrome. The exigencies of the war called for the construction of new aeroplanes and tuition of many pilots for the Royal Flying Wing. Needless to say there were innumerable recruits clamoring to become proficient airmen and so to render good service to their country in the matter of reconnoitring and in scouting work.

Lieutenant Porte, of the royal navy, who, as most Americans are aware, was personally assisting himself with the preparation of a hydro-aeroplane with which he had hoped to cross the Atlantic, was appointed commander of the aerodrome, while Claude Grahame-White was given a commission as flight lieutenant in the navy.

The whole scene at Hendon was altered. Instead of walking about in civilian attire men were now to be seen in the uniform of the British navy, while a detachment of marines formed an encampment on the fringe of the great enclosure and carried out the duties of safeguarding the numerous aeroplanes and their hangars. As has been the case in so many other departments of the State, a complete change took place in the appearance of this most important adjunct of British defences, and thus it came about that George Beatty came upon his great opportunity.

"Claudie" White, finding it was necessary to devote his first attention to the training of pupils for the navy direct, had to look elsewhere for a school where lay pupils could complete their flying apprenticeship. No better man could have been found than Beatty to take over this surplus from the Grahame-White school, and the aspirants were duly transferred to the Beatty school. Mr. Beatty was equal to the occasion and quite in his element. He at once took these students in hand and gave them some good practice on the Orville Wright biplane, a machine with two propellers, which has been so familiar to Hendon habitués in the past.

CYNTHIA'S MOTHER ON EUGENICS

By Corinne Lowe

CYNTHIA has announced her engagement! The letter announcing this important fact came last week, and ran something like this:

"Dear Mother,—I am enjoying my work so much, but every day I am more and more overwhelmed by the misery of the city. Such frightful poverty, such ignorance, such blind struggles against this wicked capitalistic system of ours. I have taken under my special protection a poor Yiddish family."

Here the letter went into a detailed account of the Settlement work which she had been doing since last fall to be punctuated at last by this amazing statement:

"I have become engaged to Mr. Henry Dorando, of whom I have spoken at various times. I am going to bring him home with me at Thanksgiving."

I read this communication aloud at the dinner table, and when I came to the end you can imagine the commotion it caused. Papa set down his moustache cup—used in spite of Cynthia's disapproval—so hard that if it hadn't been for the good engineering across the top we should certainly have had a coffee inundation.

"Cynthia engaged!" he cried. "God bless my soul if she hasn't fooled us all!" and he broke out into a long, hearty roar of laughter.

As for the boys, they were simply struck dumb. They coughed, grunted, snorted, and choked in an effort to give suitable expression to their feelings. At last—"Well, that man's stung good and proper. Why, Cynthia couldn't bake an apple pie if her life depended on it," came from Ned, my older son.

In the meanwhile, though, I was enveloped, the novelists say, in the pleasantest kind of thoughts. I don't suppose there's anything makes a mother's heart so glad as to have her daughter settled in life. And when the daughter is the sort of high-falutin', notionate girl that Cynthia is—well, you can't help wanting your swan to turn into a hen. Now, thought I, Cynthia is going to become like other women. In my mind's eye I saw her swapping marmalade recipes, putting up preserves, drying corn, and discussing the newest patterns for children's petticoats.

The day of their arrival, papa and I went to the train to meet them, and as we sat there waiting in the machine, we speculated a good deal about our future son-in-law.

"I bet he's some dried-up young bookworm," remarked papa depressingly. As for me, though I didn't say anything, I couldn't help fearing that Cynthia's choice might have fallen on one of those "artistic" fellows she used to bring to the farm—the kind that wear flowing black lambrequins under their chins and thwarted beards over them.

Consequently you can picture our relief when there stepped off the train with Cynthia a tall, broad-shouldered black-haired fellow, dressed with sanity and without beard. Cynthia herself looked very pretty in a black velvet hat and a corduroy suit, which brought out all the pink of her cheeks and the gold of her hair. What good luck, thought I, that they are such opposites. Luck, indeed! I didn't understand then how little this figured in the modern selection of a life partner.

I was not, however, kept very long in the dark. That three-mile drive was in itself an eye-opener. During that drive papa and I arranged to sit in front so as to give the young people a chance to—but no, they didn't look for one moment as though they wanted to do it. In fact, every time that we glanced back of us, they were sitting as far apart as the two vases on the parlor mantelpiece. Furthermore, there came whistling about our ears such bleak and wintry blasts as these:

Cynthia: Oh dear, oh dear! if only the poor in the city could have some of this beautiful country, this ideal freedom!

Young Man: Yes, agricultural occupation is undoubtedly the solution of many of our most pressing problems!

How about that for the course of blue love? Could you, by sitting up at nights, think of anything more gushing, languorous, and generally fitted to go with the dulcet guitar than these extracts? Papa and I were too astonished to look at each other.

When we reached the gate of the driveway, we found the two boys waiting to welcome us. After Mr. Dorando had been introduced all round, Ned took him into the house. The younger boy thereupon turned to Cynthia with an unwary remark.

"Congratulations, sis!" said he. "I never thought you would catch a man."

"Catch a man!" exclaimed Cynthia indignantly; "the very idea! I do wish you wouldn't be so common, brother. You talk as though women had only one purpose in life, and that was to get married."

"There, there," I put in soothingly, taking Cynthia's arm and walking on up the driveway, "he's a good catch, anyway. Just as nice-looking as he can be."

"Yes," agreed Cynthia placidly, "he's a thoroughly strong, healthy fellow." From her tone you might have thought that she had gone out and bought Dorando at a dog fancier's.

"It seems odd to think of your being in love, Cynthia," I said shyly, as we neared the front porch.

Whereupon Cynthia gave a little tolerant laugh. "Oh, you dear, sentimental, old-fashioned mother!" she said, putting an arm around me; "I don't know whether I'm what you call in love or not. After all, don't you think it's a little bit foolish—to marry for love, I mean? Of course, it's all right to fall in love—oh, yes, I'm not saying a word about that, but it seems to me that marriage nowadays ought to be founded first of all on intellectual companionship. Now, Henry and I are thoroughly congenial; we both like the same things and we're both interested in the same work. Then, you see, mother, he fits in. He has many qualities in which I am lacking."

"Yes," interrupted I, "he seemed to be real sensible."

Cynthia looked dubious for a moment, then she broke into one of her pretty, low laughs. "Oh, you disapproving mother!" she cried delightedly. "At any rate, I know from what side my children are going to get their wit."

"Sh!" said I warningly, for Dorando and Ned both came out the door at this moment, and I was terribly afraid they might have heard.

But I hadn't any need to be so particular. I found out that before the day was over, indeed, that Cynthia and Dorando were as open as a postcard about pretty nearly everything in the world. In the morning they twittered of social uplift; at the dinner table they coquetted over the segregation of the feeble-minded; at night you could hear them above the phonograph record of "Love me and the World is Mine," arguing about eugenics.

Eugenics was, in fact, their favorite theme. They had it all fixed up between them that if a man with red hair and a girl with green eyes married each other they would have a certain number of children with blue noses and a certain number of grandchildren who wouldn't be able to do arithmetic. "Henry," Cynthia used to commence with a flutter of her long black eyelashes and a radiant look of her blue eyes, "why do you suppose that in the experiment with white and black rabbits thirty-five of their offspring were a dull blue and the others a dingy grey?"

"Cynthia," would reply Dorando in a tense, ardent tone, "there's a constant tendency to revert to the mean of the race from which we spring."

The whole situation was, as Ned expressed it, a case of "I love my love, but O you-genics!"

At first I remonstrated with Cynthia about this.

"Why, Cynthia," I said, "you don't mean to say you talk about such things to Mr. Dorando? In my young days that wouldn't be considered a bit nice."

"Nice!" echoed Cynthia scornfully; "I'm sure I hope it isn't. We've had entirely too much 'niceness' in this world as it is. We've been so nice we wouldn't tell our children the things they ought to know; we've been too particular about our words to stop half the crime and disease and poverty and"

"Won't you have a store-box to stand on?" said I sweetly, as she paused for breath, and at the words she alighted from her flights of oratory.

In the morning I happened to ask Cynthia when she was going to be married.

"Next April, we think," she responded.

"And have you made up your mind yet about where you are going to housekeeping?"

Cynthia paused a moment. "Well, mother," she replied almost apologetically, "I may as well tell you right now that Henry and I expect to board."

"Why, Cynthia Lovelace!" cried I, and couldn't say another word. You see, a married couple in a boarding-house has always seemed just about as out of place to me as a Jimson weed on the parlor table. And to think that my daughter should—oh, how was I ever going to keep it from the neighbors?

"Oh, I know you don't approve, mother!" said Cynthia. "You're like most people of the last generation. You think that the essence of home is compounded of back stairs and the smell of cabbage on wash day. Nowadays, though, it is different. We realize that home is a matter of the spirit. Why, Henry and I wouldn't think of spending our lives ordering coal and greasing the lawn mower! We want to keep ourselves free for bigger things—for reading and music and advancement — most of all, for work!"

Numbed and stiff, I caught at her last word. "Work!" exclaimed I. "You don't mean that you're going right on with that Settlement after you get married?"

Cynthia looked at me in astonishment. "Why, you dear, silly mother!" she replied indulgently; "you didn't think I was going to give up my life as an individual after I got married, did you? Does a man stop being a doctor or a shoemaker or a lawyer just because he starts being a husband? Oh, no, mother; Henry would never consent to my sacrificing myself to marriage."

There was nothing more to be said, and very sorrowfully that afternoon I watched them leave the house.

"Well," said papa when the buggy had got out of sight, "I'm glad for one thing. I'm glad that you and I just plain held hands and kissed in our courting days."

NO BRITISH SHIPS LOST.

Admiralty Denies German Assertions Regarding East Coast Raid.

LONDON, Dec. 19.—The Admiralty has issued a statement denying that any British warships were lost during the recent raid by a German squadron on the east coast of England. The statement adds that all German assertions to the contrary are untrue.

That the British destroyer Hardy was among the warships which engaged the German squadron that made a raid on the east coast of England last Wednesday was disclosed by an Admiralty casualty list issued last night. The list shows that two men weer killed and 15 wounded aboard the Hardy.

As a result of the bombardment the kingdom has been flooded with posters, saying: "Avenge Scarborough! Up and at 'em now!"

Turkish Barracks Destroyed.

PARIS, Dec. 19—The Havas Agency has given out a despatch from its correspondent at Athens, who quotes a message from the Island of Tenedos to the effect that the recent bombardment in the Gulf of Saros, immediately north of the Dardanelles, by a British fleet completely destroyed the Turkish barracks on shore and seriously damage the fortifications. The Turks, panic-stricken, fled to the interior.

BRIEFS FROM THE WIRES.

The bye-election in St. John County, N.B., consequent upon the appointment of J. B. M. Baxter, K.C., as attorney-general, will be on Jan. 7.

Three more Kingston nurses have been accepted for service at the front. They are the Misses G. Hiscock, E. E. McConnell and H. Briden.

Maurice Baines, member of the French Chamber of Deputies, will introduce a bill for the creation of a national holiday, to be called Jeanne D'Arc Day.

The British protectorate was formally proclaimed throughout Egypt yesterday. In all garrison towns a salute of 101 guns was fired and the Union Jack was hoisted.

Coroner Herod, of Thorold, yesterday afternoon commenced an inquest into the death of Private G. H. Townsend, 77th Regiment, Dundas, who died suddenly while on guard duty on the Welland Canal.

John Kennedy, arrested in Montreal on the charge of track-walking, and who acknowledged that he was in Whitby on the night that Operator Stone was murdered, was yesterday morning released by the police.

Members of Le Devoir staff in Montreal subscribed $28 to purchase a bouquet for Mrs. Fiennie, who tried to horsewhip the editor of The Ottawa Journal, whom she blamed for inciting a riot at the Bourassa meeting, causing her husband to lose his position.

WILL HOLD KIAOCHOW.

Japan Will Not Lightly Yield Territory In the Far East.

LONDON, Dec. 19.—The Tokio correspondent of The Morning Post gives the Japanese attitude regarding the future of Kiaochow and the islands in the Pacific which have been seized from Germany.

To appreciate the Japanese point of view, he says, the circumstances of her occupation of these German holdings must be considered. Emphasis is laid on the conditions of Japan's ultimatum, which promised the return of Kiaochow to China if Germany would relinquish her hold without the use of force, the Japanese pointing to the fact that Germany did not release her hold without heavy cost to Japan. The reduction of Tsingtao cost Japan heavily both in blood and money, and Japan also is put to the expense of policing the Pacific with a widely scattered fleet.

"It is clear," the correspondent continues, "that the general feeling in Japan is that none of the German possessions captured can be lightly released."

PARDONS 'LIFER' WHO STOLE TWO HAMS

Lewis Oliver, Michigans Most Widely Known Prisoner, Given Full Freedom by Governor.

LANSING, Mich., Dec. 17—Governor Ferris has ordered the parole of Michigan's most widely known prisoner, Lewis Oliver, a 'lifer' in Marquette, and who is known as the man who was sentenced for life for stealing two hams. Oliver was sent to Marquette by Judge Howard Wiest under the Habitual Criminal Act. It was Oliver's third conviction for burglary.

In 1891 Oliver was sent to Jackson for three years for burglary. In less than three years he was back there. The second time the Judge sentenced him to ten years in Jackson, and warnd him that if he came back a third time he would get a life sentence. On March 8, 1904, he forced an entrance into a meat store and stole two hams and $3.50. He wanted to plead guilty, but Judge Wiest refused to accept the plea. Oliver was convicted and smiled at the sentence when it was delivered.

"The Oliver case was the one case in my life in which I was treated unjustly," said Judge Wiest to-day. "I was referred to as the Judge who sentenced a man to life for stealing a ham. Such was not the case, and any person who knew anything about the case knew better, but many persons did not know and they held the sentence against me until this day."

CYNTHIA'S MOTHER ON EUGENICS

By Corinne Lowe

CYNTHIA has announced her engagement! The letter announcing this important fact came last week, and ran something like this:

"Dear Mother,—I am enjoying my work so much, but every day I am more and more overwhelmed by the misery of the city. Such frightful poverty, such ignorance, such blind struggles against this wicked capitalistic system of ours. I have taken under my special protection a poor Yiddish family."

Here the letter went into a detailed account of the Settlement work which she had been doing since last fall to be punctuated at last by this amazing statement:

"I have become engaged to Mr. Henry Dorando, of whom I have spoken at various times. I am going to bring him home with me at Thanksgiving."

I read this communication aloud at the dinner table, and when I came to the end you can imagine the commotion it caused. Papa set down his moustache cup—used in spite of Cynthia's disapproval—so hard that if it hadn't been for the good engineering across the top we should certainly have had a coffee inundation.

"Cynthia engaged!" he cried. "God bless my soul if she hasn't fooled us all!" and he broke out into a long, hearty roar of laughter.

As for the boys, they were simply struck dumb. They coughed, grunted, snorted, and choked in an effort to give suitable expression to their feelings. At last—"Well, that man's stung good and proper. Why, Cynthia couldn't bake an apple pie if her life depended on it," came from Ned, my older son.

In the meanwhile, though, I was enveloped, the novelists say, in the pleasantest kind of thoughts. I don't suppose there's anything makes a mother's heart so glad as to have her daughter settled in life. And when the daughter is the sort of high-falutin', notionate girl that Cynthia is—well, you can't help wanting your swan to turn into a hen. Now, thought I, Cynthia is going to become like other women. In my mind's eye I saw her swapping marmalade recipes, putting up preserves, drying corn, and discussing the newest patterns for children's petticoats.

The day of their arrival, papa and I went to the train to meet them, and as we sat there waiting in the machine, we speculated a good deal about our future son-in-law.

"I bet he's some dried-up young bookworm," remarked papa depressingly. As for me, though I didn't say anything, I couldn't help fearing that Cynthia's choice might have fallen on one of those "artistic" fellows she used to bring to the farm—the kind that wear flowing black lambrequins under their chins and thwarted beards over them.

Consequently you can picture our relief when there stepped off the train with Cynthia a tall, broad-shouldered black-haired fellow, dressed with sanity and without beard. Cynthia herself looked very pretty in a black velvet hat and a corduroy suit, which brought out all the pink of her cheeks and the gold of her hair. What good luck, thought I, that they are such opposites. Luck, indeed! I didn't understand then how little this figured in the modern selection of a life partner.

I was not, however, kept very long in the dark. That three-mile drive was in itself an eye-opener. During that drive papa and I arranged to sit in front so as to give the young people a chance to—but no, they didn't look for one moment as though they wanted to do it. In fact, every time that we glanced back of us, they were sitting as far apart as the two vases on the parlor mantelpiece. Furthermore, there came whistling about our ears such bleak and wintry blasts as these:

Cynthia: Oh dear, oh dear! if only the poor in the city could have some of this beautiful country, this ideal freedom!

Young Man: Yes, agricultural occupation is undoubtedly the solution of many of our most pressing problems!

How about that for the course of blue love? Could you, by sitting up at nights, think of anything more gushing, languorous, and generally fitted to go with the dulcet guitar than these extracts? Papa and I were too astonished to look at each other.

When we reached the gate of the driveway, we found the two boys waiting to welcome us. After Mr. Dorando had been introduced all round, Ned took him into the house. The younger boy thereupon turned to Cynthia with an unwary remark.

"Congratulations, sis!" said he. "I never thought you would catch a man."

"Catch a man!" exclaimed Cynthia indignantly; "the very idea! I do wish you wouldn't be so common, brother. You talk as though women had only one purpose in life, and that was to get married."

"There, there," I put in soothingly, taking Cynthia's arm and walking on up the driveway, "he's a good catch, anyway. Just as nice-looking as he can be."

"Yes," agreed Cynthia placidly, "he's a thoroughly strong, healthy fellow." From her tone you might have thought that she had gone out and bought Dorando at a dog fancier's.

"It seems odd to think of your being in love, Cynthia," I said shyly, as we neared the front porch.

Whereupon Cynthia gave a little tolerant laugh. "Oh, you dear, sentimental, old-fashioned mother!" she said, putting an arm around me; "I don't know whether I'm what you call in love or not. After all, don't you think it's a little bit foolish—to marry for love, I mean? Of course, it's all right to fall in love—oh, yes, I'm not saying a word about that, but it seems to me that marriage nowadays ought to be founded first of all on intellectual companionship. Now, Henry and I are thoroughly congenial; we both like the same things and we're both interested in the same work. Then, you see, mother, he fits in. He has many qualities in which I am lacking."

"Yes," interrupted I, "he seemed to be real sensible."

Cynthia looked dubious for a moment, then she broke into one of her pretty, low laughs. "Oh, you disapproving mother!" she cried delightedly. "At any rate, I know from what side my children are going to get their wit."

PARDONS 'LIFER' WHO STOLE TWO HAMS

Lewis Oliver, Michigans Most Widely Known Prisoner, Given Full Freedom by Governor.

LANSING, Mich., Dec. 17—Governor Ferris has ordered the parole of Michigan's most widely known prisoner, Lewis Oliver, a 'lifer' in Marquette, and who is known as the man who was sentenced for life for stealing two hams. Oliver was sent to Marquette by Judge Howard Wiest under the Habitual Criminal Act. It was Oliver's third conviction for burglary.

In 1891 Oliver was sent to Jackson for three years for burglary. In less than three years he was back there. The second time the Judge sentenced him to ten years in Jackson, and warned him that if he came back a third time he would get a life sentence. On March 8, 1904, he forced an entrance into a meat store and stole two hams and $3.50. He wanted to plead guilty, but Judge Wiest refused to accept the plea. Oliver was convicted and smiled at the sentence when it was delivered.

"The Oliver case was the one case in my life in which I was treated unjustly," said Judge Wiest to-day. "I was referred to as the Judge who sentenced a man to life for stealing a ham. Such was not the case, and any person who knew anything about the case knew better, but many persons did not know and they held the sentence against me until this day."

Scarborough Noted As a Seaside Resort

Scarborough, the "Queen of English watering places" is the most popular resort on the Yorkshire coast. It is admirably situated on the two sides of a promontory which rises sharply out of the sea to a height of about three hundred feet. The hill is surmounted by the ruins of a twelfth century castle and forms one of the most striking features of the coast. Barracks have been built on the hill, where a small garrison was maintained in peace times.

The resort has a permanent population of about forty thousand, but in summer the population is several times as large. It first became fashionable during the seventeenth century, when two mineral springs were discovered. Its spa became famous though its importance has since diminished because of other attractions. It has an interesting aquarium, a museum and fine drives. Millions were spent in constructing a marine drive just above sea level, joining the northern and southern portions of the town around the foot of the Castle Hill. The drive was opened in 1908, after the work had been interrupted seevral times by destructive storms. One of the finest golf courses in England is at Scarborough. It is often used for championship matches. Scarborough has its "cricket week," when the county team plays two of its matches.

Though Scarborough owes its importance to its temporary residents, a flourishing fishing trade has survived from early days. Large numbers of "cobbles" are owned in Scarborough and the port is the base for part of the herring fleet. It is thirty-seven miles east of York and about two hundred miles from London. It is connected with York and Hull by the North Eastern Railway.

Whitby is in the North Riding of Yorkshire and about half way between Scarborough and Hartlepool. It is a town of about 12,000 inhabitants and also is a seaside resort. It has a group of hotels along the cliff and the town itself is situated on both banks of the Esk.

Raids on East Coast of Britain Cover a Thousand Stirring Years

Scarborough, One of the Towns Shelled by the Germans, Was the Scene of One of the Norsemen's Most Spectacular Invasions and Whitby Has Echoed the Tread of Armed Foes

A thousand years ago, when the English nation was still in the making, before its various elements had yet come together, raids on the North Sea coast were so frequent as to be almost common.

The Saxons, the Jutes and the Angles, the tribes of Germanic origin who settled in Britain after the end of the Roman occupation, entered the island in the main on the south and the southeast and for centuries did not spread themselves very far into the northern country.

Later invasions came from the Danes and the Northmen, men who lived habitually on the seas, and part of whose business in life was the harrying of the coast settlements of tribes not as accustomed to the sea as themselves. Again and again the Northmen swooped down on the coast of Scotland and Northumbria. Sometimes they were bought off by payment of tribute, and sometimes one chieftain would purchase their aid in his fights with neighbouring rivals. Numbers of them, particularly the Danes, occupied stretches of the country and added their blood to the mixture already there.

Scarborough, one of the coast towns shelled recently, was the landing place chosen in one of the most spectacular and important of the Northmen's raids. Tosti, brother of Harold, the last of the Saxon Kings, was Count of Northumbria, the northern territory bordering on Scotland. He called in the aid of Harold Hadrada, King of Norway, in his struggle with his brother. The Saxon Harold had brought about an insurrection among the Northumbrians, and Tosti alone was unequal to revenge.

Norsemen Invade Scarborough.

The Norsemen accepted Tosti's offer and set sail for the Shetlands, where Tosti joined them. The combined forces went down the east coast of Britain until they came to Scarborough. There they landed and prepared to fight the inhabitants. The Norsemen gained possession of the hill and built a huge fire. By hurling fire brands into the wooden houses in the town below they were able to accomplish the town's destruction. From Scarborough the united forces made their way east until they encountered the army of Harold at Stamford Bridge. Harold Hadrada and Tosti both were slain and the conquering King then hurried to meet William of Normandy and his own death at Senlac.

As late as the middle of the twelfth century part of the Yorkshire coast was devastated by the King of Norway. He entered the harbour of Whitby and "laid waste everything, both within doors and without."

The history of Whitby shows that the difficulties of neutrals are by no means recent. Early in the seventeenth century the abbey of Whitby was in the hands of Sir Hugh Cholmley. English sea power in those days was not as great as later. Holland and Spain both were rivals and also rivals of each other.

One June morning while Sir Hugh was in his abbey two Dutch men of war chased into the harbour "a small pickaroon belonging to the King of Spain." The Hollanders had four hundred men aboard one ship and two hundred aboard the other. The Spaniard had only thirty men and two small guns. The Dutch ships anchored outside the harbour and, lowering their longboats, sent ashore forty men, all armed with pistols. But the Spaniards had been on the alert, and having warped their vessel to a safer position above the bridge, they placed their two guns on the deck and every man prepared himself to defend the ship.

Dutch Captain Warned.

"I, having notice of this," wrote Sir Hugh, according to Gordon Home in his book on Yorkshire, "fearing that they might do here the like affront as they did at Scarborough, where they landed one hundred men and took a ship belonging to the King of Spain out of the harbour, sent for the Holland captains and ordered them not to offer any act of hostility; for that the Spaniard was the King's friend and to have the protection of his ports.

"After some expostulations they promised not to meddle with the Dunkirker (Spaniard) if he offered no injury to them, which I gave him strict charge against and to trust to the King's protection.

"These Holland captains, leaving me and going into the town, sent for the Spanish captain to dine with them, and soon thereafter took occasion to quarrel with him. At the same time they ordered their men to fall on the Spanish ship, which they soon surprised, the captain and most of his men being absent.

"I, being in my courtyard, and hearing some pistols discharged, and being told that the Dunkirkers and the Hollanders were at odds, made haste unto the town, having only a cane in my hand, and one that followed me without any weapon, thinking that my presence would pacify all differences.

"When I came to the riverside, on the sand between the coal yard and the bridge, I found the Holland captain, with a pistol in his hand, calling to his men, then in the Dunkirk ship, to send a boat for him. I gave him good words, and held him in treaty until I got near him, and then, giving a leap on him, caught hold of the pistol, which I became master of; yet not without some hazard from the ship, for one of them from thence levelled a musket at me, but I, espying it, turned the captain between him and me, which prevented his shooting."

Tsar, In The Caucasus, Decorates Wounded Men

KARS, Transcaucasia, via Petrograd, Dec. 18—Tsar Nicholas reached here December 13 from Petrograd. He was welcomed at the railroad station by the military authorities, and received with enthusiasm by the populace. He drove through the city and went to the local hospital, where he distributed medals to the wounded. Later he looked over the fortifications of Kars and thanked the commander for the excellent condition in which the fortresses were being maintained.

The following day the Tsar went to Sarakamyehe, which is the head of the railroad leading to the positions occupied by a large propotion of the Russian troops in the Caucasus. Along this line are concentrated large numbers of reserves and supplies of munitions of war and food.

The Tsar, in an automobile, then proceeded to the army post at the front. Here were assembled a group of soldiers who had won distinction in fighting in the Caucasus. To these men the Tsar personally distributed decorations of the Cross of St. George and thanked them for the noble services they were rendering the country. The evening of December 14th he left Sarakamyehe on his return, after sending to the officer in command of the Russian forces in Tiflis this telegram:

"I have just spent what for me are memorable days among my brave troops in the Caucasus. I was happy to be able to distribute personally to my men decorations of the Cross of St. George at a point not many miles distant from the fighting line. With such troops I am confident that with God's help, we can be sure of victory."

SERGEANT-MAJOR UNDER GENERAL FRENCH

Veteran of Boer War Who Lost Health on the Veldt Tells Experience.

Good Advice for All Who Have Indigestion or Stomach Disorders.

In his home at Waldegrove, N.S., no one is better known than Sergt.-Major Cross, late of the 4th Queen's Own Hussars. Speaking of the ill-effects of a campaign upon a man's constitution, the Sergt.-Major writes: "I served under General French during the late Boer war, in the capacity of Sergt.-Major. It was perhaps owing to a continued diet of bully beef, hard tack, and bad water, but at any rate my stomach entirely gave out. I was in such a state that I could eat nothing without the greatest suffering. The army doctors did not help me much, and since leaving the service I have been very miserable. Some few months ago a friend told me he had been a great sufferer from indigestion until he tried Dr. Hamilton's Pills; they cured him. I confess it was without much faith I bought a box, but the first dose made me feel better than I had been for a long time. Dr. Hamilton's Pills completely cured, and now I can eat everything and anything. I have recommended them to others and in every case the result has been similar to mine."

Quick, sure results attend the use of Dr Hamilton's Pills. They cure disorders of the stomach, correct indigestion, make you feel uplifted and strengthened. Dr. Hamilton's Pills always prove a good prescription. 25c. per box, five boxes for $1.00, all dealers, or the Catarrhozone Co., Buffalo, N.Y., and Kingston, Ont.

KITCHENER ENIGMA AT 64.

Man of Action Rebuffs All Writers Who Would Make Him Subject of Literary Efforts.

With such grim taciturnity has Lord Kitchener always shielded himself, says a writer in the Strand Magazine, that even to-day, although he has passed his sixty-fourth birthday, he is still an enigma to the general public and to those who think they know him. He has repulsed biographer and journalist as ruthlessly as he repulsed the dervishes in Egypt and the Boers in South Africa. He absolutely refuses to reveal himself, and if it was ever truthfully said of a man that he wished to be judged by deeds, not words, that man is the soldier and War Secretary who will write his name on military history even larger than did Wellington.

"My lords, I am a soldier, not a politician," he said, at the opening of his maiden speech as War Secretary in the House of Lords a couple of weeks after the war of nations broke out. There we have the keynote of his character and the secret of his success. His profession first; everything else subservient to it. He has no use for the man who thinks of anything but work when there is work to be done.

To aid in transporting canoes or other light craft over land there has been invented a wheel to be attached to one end of them.

A new fire alarm, operated by a weight falling when a fusible link is melted, not only rings a gong but also fires several blank cartridges.

HEINE SAW THOR AT WORK

Persons who are interested in the "omens of the war" are calling attention to a quotation from Heine, which is as follows:

"Christianity—and this is its highest merit—has in some degree softened, but it could not destroy that brutal German joy of battle. When once the taming talisman, the Cross, breaks in two, the savagery of the old fighters, the senseless Berserker fury of which the northern poets sing and say so much, will gush up anew. That talisman is decayed, and the day will come when it will piteously collapse. Then the old stone gods will rise from the silent ruins, and rub the dust of a thousand years from their eyes. Thor, with his giant's hammer, will at last spring up, and shatter to bits the Gothic cathedrals."

Thor has broken the cathedrals, as Heine foresaw.

A WORD OF GRATITUDE.

"In justice to humanity I want to tell you that I was a great sufferer from itching piles, and have found Dr. Chase's Ointment the best treatment obtainable," writes Mr. Fred Hins, Brodhagen, Ont. "It gives instant relief and I can recommend it to any sufferer from this dreadful disease."

KAISER FOR FRONT

Despite the Protests of His Physicians Wilhelm Leaves Berlin to Try to Cheer Up His Troops

NOT YET RECOVERED

Special to The Examiner:

LONDON, Dec. 21—Kaiser Wilhelm left Berlin to return to the battle front against the protest of his physicians, according to the Berlin correspondent of the Exchange Telegraph in a despatch from Amsterdam to-day. It is doubtful if the Kaiser has completely recovered from the illness from which he had been suffering, the Amsterdam despatch states, and his physicians srtongly opposed his departure The military authorities inpisted, however, that it was necessary that His Majesty spend Christmas with his troops in order to encourage them. The Kaiser is declared to have appeared pale and aged. His departure was without any demonstration whatever.

FRUIT DEALER IS ASSAULTED WITH HAMMER

Police Trace Assailants of Nicholas Minicola By Their Footprints in the Snow and Round Them Up

ROBBERY THE MOTIVE

Nicholas Minicola, the Hunter street fruit dealer, who resides at 519 Elm street, was held up and badly beaten by two fellow Italians on his way home Saturday night. The two men attempted to relieve him of the $250 which he carried, but he was able, in spite of their assault upon him with a hammer, to finally beat them off without losing any of his money or valuables.

The assault took place about one o'clock on Sunday mirning. Mr. Minicola was making his way home after closing the fruit store, and was going out Brock street past the St. Peter's school. In the act of cleaning his pipe he turned partly around and saw two men walking hurriedly behind him. He stepped aside to let them pass, when one seized his arm and the other, from the opposite side, hit him three times on the head with a hammer. He was taken completely by surprise, and before he had time to resist he found himself in a half-dazed condition on the sidewalk with the men going through his pockets. He recovered sufficiently, however, to make a stiff resistance, which drew another blow on the head from the hammer. He finally put up so stiff a fight that the two men took to their heels, running north on Reid street.

Mr. Minicola at once notified the police, and Sergeant Kidd and P. C. Deannard trailed the two men by their footsteps in the snow and finally rounded up the two Italians involved. Frank Carnival, the younger of the two, was arrested about five o'clock Sunday morning at his boarding place on Elm street. Nicholas Latanzo, his companion, having been apprehended about three o'clock at his home on Donegal street.

This morning the two men, aged 23 and 28 respectively, appeared in Police Court charged with attempted robbery with violence. Mr. Minicola recognized both men as his assailants of Saturday night, and the Police claim that the two men have admitted to the whole thing. The prisoners, it is said, admitted meeting at twelve o'clock for the purpose of holding up Mr. Minicola on his way home. They are being defended by Mr. Widdifield.

In spite of the rough usage he experienced, the victim of the assault was at his usual place behind the counter of his own store bright and early this morning, and told the story in an impersonal manner to an Examiner reporter.

Both men were given the opportunity of freedom until Wednesday on $1,000 each. On Wednesday the case will be heard. Carnival is said to have a police court record. The law allows a penalty of life imprisonment with lashes for this offence.

JUDGMENT WAS GIVEN AGAINST THE PLAINTIFFS

Action to Recover $10,000 on a Promissory Note is Dismissed by Justice Kelly

CASE WAS TRIED HERE

Mr. Justice Kelly has given judgment in favour of Mr. R. R. Hall of this city, who was defendant in the case of Bank of Ottawa versus Hall. The action, which was to recover $10,000 on promissory note made by defendant, payable to the Canadian Cordage and Manufacturing Company, and endorsed by that company to plaintiffs, was tried in Peterborough some weeks ago.

The Judgment.

The judgment is as follows:

The conclusion I have reached is that the note was given for the purposes and under the circumstances stated by the defendant. It was in possession of the bank under a special agreement recently given, and I am of the opinion that it is quite sufficiently established that neither party at any time intended that the terms on which it reached the bank should be varied or that it should be affected by or included in the operation of the hypothecation agreement. There being uncontradicted evidence that all of the indebtedness which existed when the note was given was paid before the institution of this action plaintiffs are not entitled to succeed. Action dismissed with costs. Twenty days' stay.

G. F. Shepley, K.C., Toronto, and G.W. Hatton (Peterborough) for plaintiffs. G. H. Watson, K.C., (Toronto), and S. T. Medd (Peterborough), for defendant.

RUSSIANS WIN IN NORTH POLAND

Germans Driven Back With Heavy Losses by the Czar's Troops Who Are Gathering in Great Strength Along the Right Bank of the Vistula River.

Examiner Special:

LONDON Dec. 21—The Daily News correspondent telegraphs from Petrograd: "Important successes along the Vistula have rewarded the indomitable energy of the Russian Army in Northern Poland. The river is freezing and the Germans have been compelled to hastily evacuate the Island above Plock. The Russians captured a large convoy of ponteons laden with ammunition, which the Germans abandoned among the drifting ice. One of their columns tried to force a passage over the bridge at Dobbrzin, near Wryociavek. The Germans were driven back, with heavy losses by the Russians, who are now gathering in great strength along the right bank of the Vistula toward Thorn. The German Army, advancing along the left bank of the Bzura to its junction with the Vistula, were driven back yesterday, leaving guns, prisoners, and dead and wounded on the field.

BERLIN, Dec. 21.—A statement issued by the War Office here declared that the attack on the Russians in Poland continues and that the situation in East Prussia is unchanged.

AMSTERDAM, Dec. 21.—The bishops and archbishops of Germany have ordered that January 1 shall be observed as a day of prayer and repentance in the Kaiser's army, according to a Cologne despatch to the Nieuwe Rotterdamsche Corrant to-day.

What we can't understand about Christmas tree ornaments is how the men who make them ever get rid of them before they're broken.

Mr. James Cochrane is perhaps the most expert shot in the Home Guard. Shooting in the old Murray street church on Saturday afternoon he made seven bull's eyes out of seven, having a perfect score of 35 points out of a possible 35. This is a record that cannot be beaten and can only be equalled with difficulty.

Did you see a Xmas tree at the southeast corner of the Market Square on Saturday, that looked like a perfect specimen? That tree holds a record in sales, having been bought by many different people, all of whom were anxious that the salesman deliver them that particular tree. What they received is a different story, and the mystery is who got the picture tree.

Magistrate Dumble asked a court room full of out-of-works this morning if there was one among them lusty and ambitious enough to saw some wood for him. Although the work involved meant real money, the only response came from a venerable prisoner who had been remanded a week for being drunk.

Sherlock Holmes had little on Acting-Sgt. Kidd and J. C. Deannard of the local police, who trailed two Italians for four hours by means of electric flash lights and their tracks in the snow, and finally landed them in the toils Sunday morning.

Tin is used to weight silk to such an extent that many a woman's dress would assay as highly as that often is considered good tin ore.

John Saunders Is Under Arrest

William John Saunders, a comparatively young man with a particularly suspicious looking countenance, was arrested by P. C. Blade yesterday afternoon in front of the King George Hotel because he could not explain his presence in the city, and had no means wherewith to purchase the necessities of life. He was charged in this morning's Police Court with vagrancy, but pleaded not guilty. "I have good people and I can soon get them down here," he told the Magistrate.

Saunders was remanded for a week, and his record will be investigated. The police entertain certain uncomplimentary suspicions regarding Saunder's habits, and if they are verified by reports from Ottawa when his finger prints are sent there it will likely fare hard with him. He admits having been sentenced once in Toronto.

ADDITIONAL SUBSCRIPTIPTIONS

The sum of ten dollars has been received from Mr. E. Croly, of New York, also two dollars from Miss Elizabeth Croly. This will be turned over to the Patriotic Fund. This amount was contributed in response to appeals sent forth to Peterborough people residing in all parts of the world. A number of donations of like character may be expected within the course of a few weeks.

Fire Inspection A Good Thing

Chief Howard is in receipt of the appended letter which shows to some extent the importance of the inspections that the Department makes during the year in this City. The letter coming as it does, from one in Mr. Robertson's position, is authoritative on this matter:

The letter reads as follows;

W. A. Howard, Chief, Peterborough Fire Department. Peterborough, Ont.

Dear Sir.—I am in receipt of your favour of the 18th instant, and am very glad indeed to have your advices respecting inspections and to know that the result has been so satisfactory. I think that every Town and City that has properly utilized its Fire Department in the way of making regular inspection of buildings in the business section of the City has profited by it, and I, myself consider it one of the most important things that can be undertaken by any municipality. We have not been able to get this as well done in our own City of Toronto, but I believe that during the next year the result of efforts made by this Association in this direction will be more plainly seen, and we shall begin to enjoy here, as elsewhere, the advantages inevitably following a better inspection system.

With kind personal regards, I remain,

Yours truly,

(Signed) John Robertson,
Secretary.

CANADIAN INDIANS' ART WORK DISPLAYED IN WM. LECH'S WINDOW

An interesting display of art work executed by Arctic and sub-Arctic Indians of Canada is being shown in one of the windows of Wm. Lech's store. This work is the product of our far north and should be specially attractive to lovers of art and of purely Canadian work. One article shown is a mesh game bag. The mesh is made of finely cut strips of Caribou, with a dull colour design running through the work. A velvet band around the mouth of the bag is decorated with bead arrangements. It is a wonderfully made article, with each mesh being apparently identical with the others. A small work bag has been made of two black bear's paws. Two belts, made of coloured porcupine quills, afford an example of the peculiar designs the Indians favour, and the perfection of finish which marks their work. These two examples have the exactness of machine-made goods, in addition to the purely Indian characteristics. Two fine bags, used to hold pipes and tobacco, and worn at the waist, have a splendid decoration of bead work. In this connection there is purple plush cushion tops that will arouse the envy of many women. Apparently it was worked without a guiding design, and yet the finished design is perfectly produced. A feature of it is the peculiar colours of the beads. A pair of gloves for ladies, made of unsmoked buckskin, have a beautiful buttonhole stitched design, made of silk thread. There are other articles showing this same style of work in silk thread. Next the uniform notched work on a pair of buckskin house-slippers. Then there are two Indian shirts, made of buckskin and various other articles, making a unique and very valuable collection. This work will be displayed for several days.

Carol Service At St. Luke's

The annual Christmas carol service for the scholars of St. Luke's Sunday school was held last evening, a very eloquent and appropriate discourse being delivered by the rector, Rev. F. J. Sawers, M.A. The children of the school, with their teachers, occupied the centre rows of seats, taking a hearty part in the singing and the responses of the service. Several beautiful Christmas carols were sung.

Rev. Mr. Sawers' remarks were addressed particularly to the children, telling them the story of the first Christmas and setting forth in simple language many lessons to be gained therefrom.

At Christmas and New Year's

No girl need be lonely in Peterborough on Christmas or New Year's Day. A most hearty welcome is extended to all girls to visit the Young Women's Christian Association on Christmas Day from 8 to 10 p.m.

New Year's Day there will be an open house to every girl in the City in the afternoon from 3 to 6 and in the evening from 8 to 10.

If you have never visited the association rooms this will be a good time to make a start. A fire in the fireplace and the "homey" look of the big reception hall will bring cheer to the heart of the girl from the Old Country.

THEY'RE PROUD OF HIM

Jordan Bros. are fortunate in having the services of a florist whose practical knowledge of plant growing and cut flowers comes from long experience and genuine enthusiasm in his work. Charley Clee is one of those "useful gifts" around a greenhouse that are hard to get. Right in the midst of the Christmas rush, his courtesy to patrons and his obliging manner to one and all, as well as his good practical knowledge, is fully appreciated by visitors at the greenhouses, as well as by the members of the firm. Charley can "bring them back" by his wide range of knowledge as well as his good salesmanship, every time.

WOULD BE CRIMINAL NOW

It has been assumed in the East that the proposal for an early general election had been killed, but in the West, according to the statements of a prominent Winnipeg Conservative, there are signs that Hon. Robert Rogers has not abandoned his scheme of rushing on a khaki election. Our correspondent thinks, and thinks rightly, that the party to which he adheres would disgrace itself by appealing to the country before the war is over, or before its term expires in September, 1916. It would inevitably result in a great deal of recrimination as to the naval policy of both parties; and politicians would inevitably be driven to slang-whanging each other over issues that should be buried in a time of conflict. Nobody, except a few self-seeking politicians and a coterie of heelers who hope to make a little money bumming around committee rooms, wants an election. The effect of political campaigns on business is notoriously bad, and trade at present is at so low an ebb that further interference with it except in case of absolute necessity would be little short of criminal.—Saturday Night.

Street Paving Assessments

On Saturday afternoon, the appeal of the Toronto Savings and Loan Company, that they were overassessed for 396 and 400 George street, was considered by the Court of Revision. The Court reduced the assessment of 400 George street from 30 feet 1 inch to 29 feet. One foot one inch was added to the charge against the city for Hunter street.

W. H. Bradburn, of the Bradburn Estate, and F. Blastorah, claimed that they were overassessed for part lot 5 and 6 on Hunter street, west of George. Judgment that the assessment of W. H. Bradburn be reduced from 125 feet 10 inches to 120 feet 8 inches, and 5 feet 2 inches be added to the assessment of A. E. Micks for lot 6, north of Hunter street, west of George.

The special assessments for the construction of pavements on George street, from a point twenty-five feet north of Wolfe street (north side of Canadian Pacific Railway) to the north side of McDonnel street, on Hunter street from the west side of Water street to the east side of Aylmer street, and on Charlotte street from the west side of George street to the east side of Bethune street, as amended by the Court of Revision, were passed and confirmed.

ELEGANT WINDOWS

There was a time not many years ago that the progressive hardware merchant who desired a display of Christmas goods would have a hard time getting enough seasonable Christmas stock in his store to make a window display. Since then times have changed considerably in the hardware trade and any season of the year find the merchant able to appeal to the buying public with appropriate stock. The Peterborough Hardware Co. have two exceptionally well dressed windows, with up-to-date, useful and seasonable articles that are attracting the notice of the purchasing public just at present.

SHOP EARLY.

As surely as Christmas draws near, so surely becomes apt the injunction to do Christmas shopping betimes. Such a practice is not only good for the buyers themselves, and good for our merchants and worried shop-servers, but it is in line with the Christmas spirit. If our observance of Christmas means anything, it means recognition of that grand epitome of the theology of right living—the golden rule—do unto others as we would that others do unto us. Nearly two thousand Christmases ago the divine author of that rule, brought the Christmas spirit into the world. If we would have our full share in its benefits we must yield ourselves to saturation with its spirit. Then was born unselfishness incarnate; from that hour down through the centuries has come to us the appeal to unselfish attitude towards our fellow-man. We can't be unselfish if we unthinkingly consult our own convenience, forgetful of the claims of others on our consideration. By shopping early you can perform a paradox—be at once selfish and unselfish. You will get better value for your money, get better chance of selection, and better satisfaction in your purchases, and also the satisfaction of having thought and acted in the interest of others. Everybody can't do Christmas shopping early. Sadly enough some haven't the money now, some are too busy keeping the pot boiling to spare the time till they are forced to do it by the calendar's reminder that tomorrow is Christmas. Shopping early is the right Christian, as well as the right Christmas practice.

SERMON IN A SENTENCE.

For condensed wisdom commend us to the pithy bit of epigrammatic terseness of Archbishop McNeil, who urged the Canadian soldiers to so live that they would "be physically fit to fight and spiritually fit to die." There is only scant recognition of the extent to which the two sides of our humanity are complementary to each other. The common tendency is to unduly if not altogether exalt the physical side of our being. We are too much in the habit of keeping our spiritual concerns in the back-ground, carefully concealed, as if they were something to be ashamed of, instead of being the chief thing. At this season when the world awaits the anniversary of the coming of the King of our moral interests, we should give more thought to spiritual concerns, for if the spirit is not right our life cannot be right. We cannot hold our true relation to the proper discharge of our duties toward the divine, towards the state, towards the Empire, and towards our neighbours. We cannot keep the Christmas feast in its right way unless our relations to our neighbours and our friends, are founded upon the spirit of the Gospel announced among the star-lit-snows of the Judean hills twenty centuries ago. Without this scene and its unfolding in the life and example of the Son of Man on earth as a back-ground of our giving, our giving is only—sounding brass and a tinkling cymbal. With the true Christmas spirit, giving soul and significance to our Christmas conduct, projected through the coming year into the round of daily life, the marvellous resultant regeneration of those around us and of ourselves, will mean perhaps hard living, and stern struggle, but will make the common lot of death an easy transition to the life that is but the glorified reflection of the course and character of our earthly pilgrimage.

LOYAL TO OURSELVES.

In our school-boy days Caesar told us that it was wisdom to learn even from our enemies. As a rule we can't learn much worth imitating from the Germans. Germany lives up to the motto "Germany for the Germans." Though Canadians can't consistently with civilization, adopt her methods of application, we can well adopt the principle. The Germans have forbidden the exportation of grains; provided to limit the consumption of foodstuffs to forestall famine. The made-in-Germany motto has given Germany a commercial development and commercial and financial strength that evilly misapplied has made her so formidable a menace to her own people and to the world's civilization. The "Made-in-Canada" motto, faithfully observed, will keep Canada upon the smooth spots of the highway of progress, and buttress all our material national interests against the assaults of the conditions created by war. If Canadians conscientiously prefer in their buying articles manufactured in Canada, as they are compelled to do in the case of natural products, we should see the triple result in a magnificent augmentation of our national prosperity, of increased employment, and greatly increased national pride; and we should strengthen and unify our national spirit and consilidate the citizenship of the country. Why should we buy imported goods of any kind that can, with untold advantage, be made-in-Canada? We should, think more of these things. In our buying we unconsciously and without inquiry buy foreign goods. By thinking and preferring Canadian-made goods, though we may fancy we sacrifice some trifling immediate advantage, we shall gain in the long run in buying Canadian-made goods. We shall share in the increased prosperity that will come from our own money being kept in our own country, to help keep our factories going and contribute to a general prosperity that will react upon ourselves individually. The "Canada-for-Canadians" principle has an apt local appeal. If we can bring ourselves to the right point, the point of buying as exclusively as possible Canadian-made goods, we cannot consistently refuse to buy what we need in our home town. Keep the dollar at home and so contribute to that material helpfulness that involves the general prosperity of the city including our own. In this regard we can acknowledge in our national and civic relations the truth of Shakspere's saying—

> To thine own self be true
> And it must follow as the night the day
> Thou canst not then be false to any man.

WHO IS MY NEIGHBOUR?

Now is the time when we should all be seeking an answer to the question —"Who is my neighbour"? We look in vain in the best dictionaries for the true definition in answer to the question. But we shall find it the great lexicon of light — under the letter L, St. Luke—

> Which of these three thinkest thou was neighbour to him that fell among thieves? And he said, him that showed mercy on him. Then said Jesus, "go thou and do likewise."

There is a great deal of distress in the city—a good many that need oil and wine poured into their wounds—much more than is known or perhaps thought of. Some time ago Ottawa voted $5,000 for the city relief committee. Now the committee has come back for $10,000 more. Are not conditions somewhat similar in this city? Do we know the extent to which claims upon our kindness exist? For all we know the civic funds are adequate for relieving all the distress, from time to time; but there should be some special porvision for a few little extra feasts on Christmas day. No household should be without its Christmas feast, and it would taste much the better if it were seasoned with the spice of neighbourliness, instead of exhaling, with the steam of the roast, conventional "charity." Thank God, there are hundreds of us who have good homes—"blest in basket and store." Wouldn't it be a good thing if some of us—the more the merrier—should select some family upon which we could bestow the Christmas cheer they might not otherwise have. If we feel the right spirit, and surrender some of our abundance to give cheer to others less fortunate—even a "wash-day" dinner — cold meat or hash and warmed-over potatoes—would taste like a feast of Lucullus, if we knew and felt that others, by our thought for them, were feasting sumptuously for once in the year upon what we were so glad to sacrifice. The circumstances demand more than a relief committee—it demands a committee of the whole. By a little thoughtfulness, by a little sacrifice, and perhaps by no sacrifice at all, we can do some little things that will bring to our hearts the reflected glow we may kindle, by kindness in the hearts and homes of others. We can not only wish, but make, a "Merry Christmas!"

THE BRITISH SUBMARINE.

Toward the end of November, when to some minds Britains' supremacy of the sea seemed a trifle doubtful, the First Lord of the Admiralty issued a reassuring statement.

In the first place, he pointed out the perils which confronted the navy at the beginning of the war, mentioning its unpreparedness, the danger of German commerce destroyers abroad, and of mines and submarines, both practically unknown factors. He then showed that Britain was building warships much more rapidly than the enemy, could place one superdreadnought per month for a year and be in a better position than at the beginning of the war, adding that "in the matter of submarines Great Britain's power is much greater than that of the enemy." Previously, Winston Churchill expressed the opinion that the navy would win the war.

Recent events have tended to show that the First Lord of the Admiralty "spoke by the book." The commerce destroyers which disposed of a much smaller percentage of merchant vessels than was anticipated have been practically driven off the seas. Four of the five German warships which composed the squadron at Tsing-Tau have being pursued.

Now the British submarine which has had so little opportunity to prove itself has vindicated Churchill's attitude by performing the most daring naval feats of the war to date. The German submarine dared to attack British boats in the North Sea and even close to French and English ports, but it was a British submarine which dared to dive under five separate chains of mines in a treacherous current, surrounded by the enemy's destroyers and fort guns, and send a Turkish battleship to the bottom of the Dardanelles.

Perhaps Churchill's statement that it might be necessary to dig the German fleet out of the Kiel Canal like rats was more significant than appeared. At any rate, the Empire is now more ready than ever to believe that the British navy can accomplish the seemingly impossible.—London Advertiser.

FRENZY AROUSED

First Lord of Admiralty Says Stigma of "Baby-killers" Will Brand the German Navy for All Time

CHURCHILL WRITES MAYOR

LONDON, Dec. 21. — Winston Churchill, First Lord of the Admiralty, in a letter to the mayor of Scarborough, in which he expresses the sympathy of himself and of the navy at the losses sustained through the German bombardment of Scarborough, and disappointment over the escape of the German warships, says:

"We await with patience the opportunity that will surely come. But, viewed in its larger aspect, the incident is one of the most instructive and encouraging that has happened in the war. Nothing proves more plainly the effectiveness of the British naval pressure than the frenzy of hatred aroused against us in the breasts of the enemy.

"This hatred has already passed the frontiers of reason. It clouds their vision, it darkens their counsels, and it convulses their movements. We see a nation of military calculators throwing calculation to the winds; of strategists who have lost their sense of proportion, of schemers who have ceased to balance loss and gain.

"Practically the whole of the fast cruiser force of the German navy, including some great ships that are vital to their fleet and utterly irreplaceable, have been risked for the passing pleasure of killing as many English people as possible, irrespective of sex, age or condition, in the limited time available.

"To this act of military and political folly they were impelled by violence of feelings which could find no other vent. This is very satisfactory and should confirm us in our course. Their hate is a measure of their fear. Its senseless expression is proof of their impotence and the seal of their dishonor.

"Whatever feats of arms the German navy may hereafter perform, the stigma of baby-killers of Scarborough will brand its officers and men while sailors sail the seas."

GERMANS CANNOT WITHSTAND NEW FRENCH ARTILLERY

Enemy Give Up Belgian Village Before Onslaught of Allied Forces and Gains Are Recorded at Other Points in Flanders

LONDON, Dec. 21. — Battered incessantly by the effective new Creusot guns used by the French troops on their firing line, the German armies have been forced from their strongholds along the banks of the rivers Oise and Aisne, are being driven rapidly eastward to the out confines of the forest of Argonne.

For a stretch along the battle line of 150 miles, the German infantry has been obliged to give way before the constant deadly cannonading which has silenced and destroyed a number of the Kaiser's powerful batteries, leveling the machine gun shelters and creating panic in the German ranks.

The German defences northeast of Nieuport have been pierced by the Franco-Belgian forces, who have captured new positions on their march to Ostend. East of Ypres and south of it as well, the French-British forces have beaten back a German counter-attack and made important gains in a new offensive.

A despatch to the Exchange Telegraph Co. from Amsterdam says:

"The Germans have evacuated Dixmuds, but the report that the allies have taken Middelkerke is untrue."

The offensive operations of the allies in the west are being carried out under conditions of siege warfare, and are being stubbornly opposed by the Germans, who in their entrenchments and surrounded by wire entanglements, make an advance of even a few yards a costly matter for the attacking forces.

The following official communication was given out in Paris Sunday afternoon:

"From the sea to the Lys we have gained a little ground, before Nieuport and Saint Georges.

"To the east and south of Ypres, where the enemy reinforced his organizations, defensive artillery battles occurred, and there was slight progress on our part.

"From the Lys to the Oise, the allied forces have seized a portion of the German trenches of the first line on the front running through Richebourg, l'Avoue and Givenchy-les-la-Bassee.

"To the southeast of Albert, the trench captured by us on the 17th, near Maricourt, and lost on the 18th, was recaptured yesterday.

"In the region of Lihons, the Germans made two very violent attacks for the purpose of retaking the trenches won by us on the 18th. They were repulsed.

"From the Oise to the Argonne, the superiority of our artillery continues to be manifested by the interruption of the enemy's fire, the destruction of machine gun shelters and observatories, and the dispersion of a considerable number of troops.

"In the Argonne, in the forest of La Grurie, we have repulsed three attacks, two upon Fontaine Madame, one at Saint Hubert.

"Between the Argonne and the Vosges there has been no salient incident to report."

Last night's official communication was as follows:

"In Belgium, in the region of Steenstraete, an attack by the enemy has been repulsed, and we have made sensible progress in the neighborhood of the Kortekeu fan.

"The British troops have lost in the vicinity of Neuve Chapelle several of the trenches which they captured yesterday. In the meantime the Indian corps has advanced a few hundred metres towards Richebourg l'Avoue.

"The enemy has displayed activity in the direction of Thiepval and Lihons. At the latter place a detachment of the enemy was taken by surprise in marching column and literally mowed down."

A wide line of trenches south of the Somme, in the environs of Richeburg has been seized by the French, who have also retaken an important position not far from Marincourt, after a combat lasting three days.

ANOTHER HUGE CONFLICT DEVELOPING IN POLAND

Attempt of the Defenders of Galician City to Escape is Frustrated by the Russian Besiegers

LONDON, Dec. 21.—Field Marshal von Hindenburg's army which is advancing on Warsaw over a wide front between the Vistula and the Pilica rivers and which on Friday occupied Lowicz, reached on Saturday the new Russian positions along the Bzura river and southward to Rawa, with the result that another big battle is in progress.

The Russians retired across the Bzura river, destroying the bridges behind them, and two German detachments which followed over a partly burned bridge were attacked and are said to have been annihilated, fifty survivors being taken prisoners.

This is only the beginning of the great battle for Warsaw, from which the Germans are now only thirty miles or less. Field Marshal von Hindenburg, however, expects strong resistance, which the strongly reinforced Russian army is certain to offer to his further advance, protected by the Vistula river, which the Germans have been unable to cross.

The Russians are continuing their operations against East Prussia as though the capital of Poland were not threatened, and by counter attacks are attempting to throw off the Austro-German attacks in Galicia. An Austrian sortie in force from Przemysl, according to the Russian official statement, has entirely failed, and there, as well as at other points, prisoners and guns were taken.

The Petrograd correspondent of The Times telegraphs:

The German offensive is at present abandoned. The enemy is apparently throwing in reinforcements in the direction of the Vistula.

A force consisting partly or wholly of fresh troops tried to cross to the right bank of the Vistula river. At Dobrysn a division of the enemy's forces sent thither was repulsed. The defeat of his Mlawa corps exposed the whole left flank of the Lowicz army, which is not sufficiently covered by the Vistula from Russian attack.

The latest communique announcing the development in the fighting on the Bzura confirms the report of the recrudescence of German activity in this quarter.

The following official communication was issued Saturday night from general headquarters:

"On the right bank of the Vistula (North Poland) there has been no change. An attempt by the enemy to proceed from the right bank of the Vistula, near Dobrsyn, was repulsed by artillery fire. The enemy has been compelled to evacuate quickly an island in the Vistula, which he had occupied. We seized at this point several pontoon bridges.

"The fighting on the Bzura river has begun to develop. We have repulsed several German attacks in other regions. On the left bank of the Vistula there have been engagements of the enemy by advance guards.

"In West Galicia on the left bank of the Dounaietz on the night of Dec. 17-18 we captured as many as 1,000 prisoners belonging to a German division, which already had been engaged in this region.

"A strong force from the Przemysl garrison attempted to open the railway in the direction of Bierosa, to the southwest. Our troops are fighting here under favorable conditions."

The following statement of the Austrian General Staff was issued last night:

"On the left bank of the Vistula river, on the front of the Ikura and Rawa rivers, a number of encounters, some of them of a very fierce description, took place on the 18th instant.

"Two German companies which had crossed the Bzura near the village of Dakhova, on a half burned bridge, were immediately attacked by our troops and annihilated. Of this force only 50 men remained. These we made prisoners.

"Fighting also is reported in the region of Opocsno (to the east of Piotrkow).

"In Galicia the situation is without important change. At certain points we have made counter-attacks and captured some prisoners and machine guns.

"In the district of Przemysl the Austrians attempted a sortie in great strength. The movement failed and the outcome was that we took them on the flank and captured a great many prisoners."

Events north of Cracow also reveil a strengthening of the Russian position. The leading German corps, which were driven westward Saturday from the left bank of the Dunawets, yielded more than a thousand prisoners. Southwest of Przemysl in the valley of Byrsha, the Russians had to deal with a substantial portion of the garrison seeking to escape and engaged in a battle, in which the Austrians were badly defeated.

VALET SERVICE IS PROVIDED

Innovation on the C. P. R. Railway

The comfort and well-being of the pasengers who travel on the Canadian Pacific is always foremost in the minds of the officials of the company, and further evidence of this is to be found in the official announcement to-day that all the cars in the Montreal-Chicago service have been equipped with an up-to-date valet service, so that you can now have your clothes brushed and pressed while you sleep. Simultaneously with this pronouncement comes the decision of the Canadian Pacific to discontinue the use of toothpicks on the tables of the dining cars. This step has not been taken without serious consideration. Many letters of complaint have been received in this connection, and it is pretty well known that provision of toothpicks at first-class hotels and restaurants is now considered not quite the thing.

More Municipal Election Prospects

Mr. R. J. Kidd will be a candidate for election to the aldermanic vacancy that will follow the retirement of Alderman Langford at the close of the present year. It will be remembered that two years ago Alderman Langford defeated Mr. Kidd by a small number of votes. It is not known whether Alderman Langford will stand for re-election. A few days ago he stated that he had not made up his mind as to what course he would follow, but so far as he knew at that time, would again offer his services to the city. Since then it has been stated from several sources that Alderman Langford will offer his services to the Empire, in a military capacity. He already holds a captaincy in the 57th Regiment, Peterborough Rangers. It is understood that there is more than one aspirant for civic honours, in the North Ward, among whom might be mentioned Mr. A. McIntyre.

People Are Interested.

While there has been little apparent interest manifested in the forthcoming municipal elections, in the Centre Ward, people residing in the outlying divisions are said to be giving more than the usual attention to the matter. There is little reason to doubt but what there will be a contest in every ward.

Suggests Formation Of Relief Organization Society

Sir,—The problem of relieving the distress and poverty which is daily increasing in the City, is one that is going to tax to the utmost not only the purses of the charitably disposed, but also the ingenuity of the disbursers of relief funds, so that any scheme or proposition to simplify this enigma should be welcomed and carefully considered.

There are scores of cases of distress that will never be reached by the Charity Board, because of the stigma attached to the word "charity," and again, there are scores of cases that are relieved by the Charity Board that are also receiving help from private individuals.

To meet these cases and to prevent overlapping and fraud, what is needed just now is "organization".

I would suggest the formation of a Relief Organization Society to which any one in need of assistance could apply, where their applications would be treated confidentially, receive consideration in a business-like manner, and where the applicant need have no fear of being treated as a charity case.

The relief given need not take the form of an order for groceries or wood—cases of this kind can be referred to the Charity Board — but might be a pecuniary grant or loan, which ever might suit the applicant's individual circumstances. To quote one example, which might be taken as a typical one: The other day a man was driven by necessity to apply for relief to the City. He has a trade with all the necessary tools to follow that trade, but no money with which to purchase materials. Had he the materials he could get enough work to support himself and family, and retain his self-respect, and such an organization as I have outlined would supply the materials for him, and at less than it will cot the City before his name is removed from the Relief Officer's list. Other cases of a similar nature will occur to you, Sir, in which a Society like this could and would do, good service; and I trust its merits will meet with the support of at least the consideration of some of our public bodies. Thanking you, I remain,

Yours truly,
Pro Bono Publico.

AN EXPERT'S OPINION OF FLOOR AREA PROPOSITION

It is Claimed That "Reduced" Hydro Rate Would Hit the Poor Man—Fixed Rate is Based on Minimum Floor Area of 4,000 Square Feet and Maximum Area of 3,000 Square Feet.

It is claimed by many that the new Hydro rate, which is partially based upon the floor area of the house, will have the effect of increasing the cost of house lighting to the poor man and decreasing it for the well-to-do class. The fixed rate is based on a minimum floor area of 1,000 square feet and a maximum area of 3,000 square feet. The contention being that there are a large number of houses with less than one thousand feet of floor area, the owners of which will be required to pay the minimum rate, whereas on the other hand there are many householders whose floor area will exceed the maximum of three thousand square feet, who will benefit by the maximum rate. The rate now being charged in Peterborough is ten cents per Kilowatt hour. The new rate will be three cents per 100 square feet of floor area per month; minimum floor area charge for 1,000 square feet; maximum floor area charge for 3,000 square feet. This is a fixed charge. The consumption charge is 2.5 for the first thirty hours. Both the floor area charge and consumption charge is subject to a discount of ten per cent. for prompt payment, making the net charges 2 7-10c. and 2 1-4c., respectively. For additional consumption over thirty hours, there will be a corresponding reduction.

An Example.

A Toronto expert sums up this situation as follows:

At the Toronto City Hall, there is no expectation that the reduction in rates to be recommended by the Toronto Hyro Commissmion will be on the basis of that which the Provincial Hydro has suggested for other places. One expert, indeed, went so far as to describe the Provincial reduction as "a lemon for the poor man and a bonanza for the rich." He amplified his opinion by the following statement:

"The new 'reduced' rates of the Provincial Hydro say that the floor area charge shall be three cents a hundred feet instead of four, but they add that this new charge shall be upon a minimum floor area of 1,000 square feet, and a maximum of 3,000. Just see what that would mean in Toronto, where the charge has been four cents straight, without maximum or minimum. In this city a man with 500 square feet of floor area has been paying 5 x 4, or 20 cents. Under the 'reduced' Provincial rates he would pay 10 x 3, or 30 cents, because ten hundred feet is to be the minimum. Thus every customer of the Toronto Hydro whose floor area is less than 1,000 feet (and there are over 1,500) would pay a greater floor area charge under the Province's 'reduced' rates than under the present ones. I know the Toronto Hydro will not assent to such a scheme as that."

As to the maximum rate, he made the following statement: "The handout to the 'big fellow' would be as obvious as the discrimination against the poor man. Since 3,000 square feet of floor area is the maximum, Sir Henry Pellatt would pay only 30 x 3, or 90 cents, for the huge floor area of his castle—no more than would be paid by a house with only 3,000 square feet of floor area. But to avoid extreme cases, let me show you how it would work out with many of the 'homes on the hill' or in Rosedale among which 5,000 square feet of floor area is not unusual. These places now pay the 4-cent rate for the full area—say 5,000 feet, which means 50 x 4, or $2. Under the Provincial rate, they would pay for only the maximum, 3,000 feet, at 3 cents, which is 30 x 3, or 90 cents. Is it any wonder that the Toronto Commission wants to make its own reductions in its own way?"

BRITONS HAVE NOT LOST FAITH IN BRITISH NAVY

Some American newspaper writers are picturing the Britisher as deeply humiliated at the fact that German ships succeeded in getting close enough to the English shore to send a few shells to land. The picture is based on the assumption that the Britisher had such childish trust in the British navy that he thought it could be in all places at once, and upon the tradition that it is centuries since British blood has been spilt on English soil by an alien enemy.

The Englishman has confidence in the British navy. And it is as great to-day as it was before the "successful" German raid. He has confidence that the navy can protect England. It has not failed in that protection. The shores of England do not need protection fro aisinine tactics such as those which resulted in the shelling of the coast towns. It is the Germans who need protection from the result of their own foolishness. A dozen such raids would not injure England in so far as the war goes.

The raid indicates daring on the part of the Germans, but foolhardy daring. As to the ability displayed in eluding the British fleet, that could not have been so great, when creeping through a fog-ridden night. That the British navy did not happen to be lying directly across their path waiting for them, is no indication of laxity on the part of the navy.

As to traditions, the Englishman does cherish his. He has particular reason to. And there is none he holds more dearly than that it is centuries since an Englishman has been killed by an alien enemy on his own soil. Why should he not hold it dearly? There have been a good many attempts to invade England. None has succeeded, or come near succeeding. But an invasion is a different thing from the throwing of shells from a warship in the ocean to the English shore. It is a long way from that to the landing of a German marine on the same shore.

Faith in neither the British navy nor in British traditions has been shattered by the foolish raid of the German ships. The Englishman is proud of these things, but he is not foolishly proud. The event of the other day makes him a little angry, a little more determined as to the final reckoning, that is all.—Ottawa Star.

SPLITTING PAINS IN THE MUSCLES DRIVEN OUT QUICKLY BY "NERVILINE"

Rheumatic Pains Go — Suffering Ceases—Cure Comes in Even Chronic Cases.

For aching bones and sore muscles nothing will sooth away the pain like Nerviline.

For nerve-wrecking twinges in the muscles, for torturing backache or lumbago, you'll find Nerviline is full of amazing power.

You see, Nerviline has the power—it's about five times stronger than ordinary remedies, and can penetrate very deeply. It contains juices and extracts of certain herbs that give it a strange power to drive out congestion, inflammation or pain.

You are safe in using Nerviline. Just rub it on—it won't blister or burn, and can do nothing but good.

Whenever there is pain or suffering Nerviline will go and will drive it out. It penetrates to every cell of a sore muscle; it sinks to the heart of every stiff sore joint; it searches out the pain of rheumatism quickly.

WIDOW, 20, BARES PAST FOR FATHER AT MURDER TRIAL

Son-in-Law's Slayer Faints in Court When Snubbed by His Daughter—Cleary Hearing Dramatic

NEW YORK, Dec. 19.—The jury in the trial of William V. Cleary, accused of the murder of his son-in-law, Eugene M. Newman, witnessed a dramatic scene in court late yesterday when the young widow, Anna Cleary Newman, was brought into the court room to testify for her father, long town clerk of Haverstraw and prominent in politics.

Gowned in black except for a white shirtwaist and a white feather in her hat, the girl of twenty was assisted toward the witness chair by her uncle. She clung to her relative as if she dreaded the coming ordeal.

Father Shows Deep Emotion.

Soon she reached the spot where her father was seated. He had not seen her since July 22. That was the day before Newman was shot as he was wanting to tell Cleary that he and Anna were married.

As his daughter neared him Cleary who had maintained a stolid air throughout the trial, gave evidences of deep emotion. His hands twitched convulsively and as the girl reached his side he jumped to his feet and reached out to grasp her in his arms.

The girl shrank away from him at first but her father would not be repelled. He seized her with a firm embrace and kissed her repeatedly.

Girl Doesn't Return Gaze.

Finally father and daughter were separated and she was led trembling to the stand. Cleary meanwhile, after loosing his embrace of his daughter, fell over on the counsel table apparently in a state of complete collapse. He recovered quickly, however, and turned his eyes upon Anna. She did not return his gaze. Few questions were asked the young widow. The defence, whose witness she was, contented itself with getting her to say Newman was the father of her child, and that she had not told her father or her mother of her marriage. It had been previously testified during the afternoon that Cleary learned on July 22 that Anna was to become a mother, and that on July 22 and 23 he had drank to excess and acted irrationally. Through his wife it was brought out that up to the time he shot Newman he did not know the boy was his son-in-law.

The crossexamination of the young woman was almost equally brief. She told how she and Newman had been sweethearts from childhood, that she was very fond of him, that they saw each other frequently, he fact that her parents had forbidden them to meet and that they had exchanged many letters. They were married on the night of July 18, she testified.

Mrs. Cleary in her testimony, said her husband had moved his family away from Newman's attention to their daughter, but they had kept up a clandestine courtship. She said that on the day of the tragedy she had twice talked over the telephone with Newmant, bu no mention was made of the marriage. She had, however, before that been apprised of the marriage by a physician who had attended her daughter a few days prior to the shooting.

Story of Shooting.

A graphic story of the shooting of young Eugene Newman by his father-in-law, William E. Cleary, was told yesterday by Joseph Felter, supervisor of Haverstraw, who was the first witness when the taking of testimony began in Cleary's murder trial.

"Cleary called me up on the day of the shooting and said he wanted me to come to his office," said Felter.

"When I arrived there I found Bernard Fox, the Haverstraw fire chief, and Hugh Sheridan, a policeman.

"We talked of going to Nyack, and as we were talking Cleary offered to send and get me some beer, as the day was hot, but I declined it. Soon after I got there Newman came in. Cleary did not offer him a seat and the young man stood at the end of his father-in-law's desk. While he stood there Cleary suddenly jumped up and ran over to a safe. In the meantime Newman had seated himself, but I did not hear him say anything.

"As Cleary threw open the safe door he called out over his shoulder:

"'Well, you thought you had the best of me, didn't you?' then he swung around and shooting began. It was just like this. (Here the witness clapped his hands rapidly together several times.) Cleary had acted so quickly that I did not see any weapon in his hand until after the shooting had ceased."

The state rested its case at noon, after calling four or five witnesses, including the father and mother of the slain young man, to prove the facts in the case.

Y. M. C. A. NOTES

The Life Problem Club on Sunday afternoon was addressed by Dr. J. F. Middleton. The subject was "Choosing a Vocation." The doctor related a number of instances of men who have fitted themselves for some particular vocation life at considerable expense to themselves and found that the business or profession was not adapted to them for a life work. The doctor stated that it was unwise for any young man to drift into an occupation, but a deliberate choice should be made. For any young man is qualified for some particular sphere in business life and he must find this particular sphere or be out of place.

PATRIOT REMEMBERED.

Anniversary of Oberdank's Death is Occasion of Demonstration in Italy.

ROME, Dec. 21.—The police at various places in Italy had some difficulty yesterday in keeping down riotous demonstrations at celebrations of the anniversary of the death of the Irredentist leader, Oberdank, who organized the unsuccessful plot to assassinate Emperor Francis Joseph in Trieste in 1882 and was put to death for it.

The Republican deputy, Cola Anni, delivered a speech to a sympathetic audience, which frequently broke into applause as the speaker recited the history of the "Triestan martyr" and his ideals, and declared it was necessary soon to realize them. The demonstration reached its climax when Ricciotti Garibaldi, son of the Italian patriot Garibaldi, leaning on his crutches, arose and said: "Long live Trieste! A voice is still ringing from Caprera Island, where my father is buried. It asks for facts, not words, from the committee promoting the enlistment of volunteers."

As Garibaldi ceased there was a tremendous outburst of applause and cries of "Long live Italy!" "Long live Trieste!" and "Long live Trieste!"

Members of German Landwehr Are Ready to Surrender

LONDON, Dec. 21.—A report from British army headquarters says:

"From a prisoner captured on Dec 14 it has been ascertained that both the 23rd Regiment and the Saegen suffered enormous losses on Nov. 4. The same man described the fifth of November as a terrible day, saying that he had never before seen such mud as that in which the Germans were operating, and that the troops were suffering very much from the presence of water in the trenches. The shelling that he went through on the fourteenth of that month, he states, exceeded anything which he had experienced previously.

"We have reason to believe, from the evidence obtained from prisoners, that many of the Landwehr are heartily sick of the war and resent the harsh treatment of their officers. They have been persuaded that the British ill-treat their prisoners, and but for this some would be willing to surrender."

MR. THOMAS TOFFINGTON

Who Endorses the "Made-in-Canada" Movement and Lets It Go At That.

Mr. Thomas Toffington has the sputter of a certain kind of patriot. He endorses all great movements; and he is never happy unless there is one nudging at his elbow or glaring at him from the headlines of newspapers. He is a man of imagination; for he believes that it was by some sort of technical magic that Canada became dotted with busy factory towns and peopled with hundreds of thousands who depend upon factories for their daily support.

"Yes sir!" he thumps on the arm of his chair as his made-in-some-other-country specs dangle over his foreign trousers and his alien chair. "I believe in the made-in-Canada movement. I have nothing but praise for the splendid enterprise of my fellow-patriots who have invested hundreds of millions in such fine factories as it has been my privilege sir, to behold on every hand in my various travels through the length and breadth of our land. As a Canadian myself I rejoice in the aggressive and practical enthusiasm of so many incomparable business men who when first I knew them were factory hands or farm boys earning ten dollars a week, and now, sir, are at the very top of the ladder keeping an army of employees busy on the magnificent work of maintaining our industrial fabric and making goods, too, that are equal to, if not better than any others in the whole world——"

Just at this point in his private peroration a listener asked him if the boots he wore were made in Canada.

"Ahem! Ahem! Really sir, I find that I get very good satisfaction indeed in what I have always bought, though quite well aware they are not made in this country. But nevertheless sir, I endorse the movement sir—heart, soul and body, it has my unremitting and enthusiastic support——"

And he was off again into another made-in-dreamland oration. Did you ever meet Mr. Thomas Toffington?

ANNIVERSARY SERVICES AT KNOX CHURCH

Inspiring Sermons by Prof. Jordan of Queen's University—He Hopes to See the German Invader Driven From Belgian Soil Within a Year

THE UNFED SEAS

Rev. Prof. Jordan of Queen's University, Kingston, occupied the pulpit at both the morning and evening anniversary services that were held yesterday in Knox Presbyterian church. Large congregations attended both services. The text of the evening sermon was taken from the Book of Deuteronomy. It was based on three words, "Lest we forget." The speaker characterized the chapter from which the text was taken, as one of the most classic and national sermons in the old testament

Not a Popular Book.

"It is not possible to understand the Bible by thinking of it as a book," said Prof. Jordan. Continuing, the speaker said: "We call it the Book of God, because within it is enshrined God's highest revelations to mankind. It has in it many stages of religion. I don't suppose that the Book of Deuteronomy is a popular book. It seems to be a remote book. There is no book that has played such an important part in respect to the history of Israel. It might be said to consist of two parts—legislation and preaching. It is still an unsettled problem as to how far you can go towards making a community right by means of legislation or making it righteous by means of preaching. That question is just as undecided to-day as it was in Palestine many years ago. The chapter from which the text is taken represents three different lines of exhortation. One of these lines presages prosperity for a nation that is righteous. The only prosperity worth having is based upon righteousness. The primal exhortation is that which exhorts us not to forget ourselves when fortune favours us. Success is sometimes very difficult to stand. People are mellowed by adversity.

"Think of Belgium."

The sacredness of memory was another phase which the speaker dwelt upon. "Think of Belgium," said Rev. Prof. Jordan. "Several months ago Belgium was a prosperous nation. To-day she is groaning and writhing under the iron heel of people who have no right to be there. Within a year from now, we hope to rid the country of the invader. Even should that most hopeful prospect come to pass, it will not eradicate the memories of the German oppression and his unwarranted visitation. God give us a good memory to teach us to reverence it. There are many people who are inclined to feel sceptical in face of the present catastrophe. This world is not ruled by brute force. The British Empire is a wonderful thing. It is made up of people of all creeds and colours, who are bound together by one ideal. We believe that God will bring us through. One of Germany's noted historians was a great man. He would have been a soldier but he was deaf. We are constrained to believe that it would have been better had he been a soldier and have been shot. He told the German people that the German empire was built up on great wars and that the British empire was a despicable thing owing to its solidity to sham power and blind luck, which would eventually lead to its downfall. We agree with the German historian that shams will fall to pieces, but we differ when he says that the shams of the British empire will fall. Turn to books written by great men in Germany who say that they are no good in politics, but are good at fighting. Does that not constitute a danger to the world? Culture with us means a knowledge of the highest essentials to our Christian life, not mere technical civilization. The Christian doctrine teaches us that the national things will not do. We must not overlook the spiritual. What shall it profit a man if he gain the whole world and lose his own soul?

Is Partially Wrecked.

To-day the civilization of Europe is partially wrecked. Men who should be working together for the common good are flying at each other's throats. I don't believe that all that rich blood will be shed in vain. There is a living God who will bring order out of chaos. We look back into the past and realize that everything we ever had was paid for. We have fed the seas for a thousand years and she is still unfed. The law of blood and sacrifice is there.

More Municipal Election Prospects

Mr. R. J. Kidd will be a candidate for election to the aldermanic vacancy that will follow the retirement of Alderman Langford at the close of the present year. It will be remembered that two years ago Alderman Langford defeated Mr. Kidd by a small number of votes. It is not known whether Alderman Langford will stand for re-election. A few days ago he stated that he had not made up his mind as to what course he would follow, but so far as he knew at that time, would again offer his services to the city. Since then it has been stated from several sources that Alderman Langford will offer his services to the Empire, in a military capacity. He already holds a captaincy in the 57th Regiment, Peterborough Rangers. It is understood that there is more than one aspirant for civic honours, in the North Ward, among whom might be mentioned Mr. A. McIntyre.

People Are Interested.

While there has been little apparent interest manifested in the forthcoming municipal elections, in the Centre Ward, people residing in the outlying divisions are said to be giving more than the usual attention to the matter. There is little reason to doubt but what there will be a contest in every ward.

DISASTER TO THUNDERER?

British Dreadnought is Reported Sunk by a Mine

NEW YORK, Dec. 21.—A report that the British super-dreadnought Thunderer was sunk in the North Sea on Nov. 7 by coming into contact with a mine or being hit by a torpedo, was brought here yesterday by George Rootweiler of Chicago, a passenger on the steamship St. Louis, from Liverpool.

According to Rootweiler, the sinking of the Dreadnought was witnessed by eight men, members of the crew of a small Swedish sailing ship called the Scefjord, that put into Liverpool with survivors from the Dreadnought on board.

"These men were taken in charge by British officers, and were kept under surveillance at an out-of-the-way sailors' mission," said Mr. Rootweiler. "I heard of the report in a roundabout way, and through a friend I managed to talk with one of the crew. He told me that the Thunderer blew up and sank in full view of himself and his mates on the Scefjord. The crew hastened to the scene, and a dozen or so of the men were picked up from the water."

Mr. Rootweiler said he is the European representative of the Western Metal Products Co. of Chicago.

The Thunderer was a super-dreadnought, completed in 1912. She had a displacement of 22,500 tons, 27,000 turbine horse-power, a speed of 21 knots and an armament of ten 13.5-inch guns and sixteen 4-inch quick-firers. Her crew numbered about 900 men.

China Wedding Is Celebrated

On Friday evening, Dec. 18th, at the residence of Mr. and Mrs. Louis Whitfield, Riverview, North Monaghan, the twentieth—china—anniversary of their wedding was delightfully celebrated. The numerous congratulating guests present understood what a hearty hospitality had developed in twenty years of successful home-making. Mr. Louis Whitfield, and Miss Lena Hunter, Elmdale, North Monaghan, were united in marriage on Tuesday, December 18th, 1894, by Rev. J. G. Potter of St. Andrew's Presbyterian Church, and on the twentieth anniversary about sixty of their friends gathered in their home to offer hearty congratulations to the parents and their children upon the auspicious occasion that marked the twentieth milestone of a haply married life, and to wish them many, many returns. Many beautiful presents substantially testified to the esteem in which the happy couple and their family are held.

The evening was most pleasantly spent. There were sumptuous refreshments and an interesting programme of congratulatory speeches, music and recitations, ending in a very pleasant informal dance as the "wee sma' hoors" came on.

The many other friends of Mr. and Mrs. Whitfield will join the friends who were present at the twentieth anniversary in most cordial congratulations and hearty wishes for a long continuance of a wedded life that has made home happy, reflected honour upon the marriage estate, and justified the couplet of Pope:

Grave poets say and witty poets sing,
That honest wedlock is a glorious thing.

TURNBULLS

THE GEORGE STREET SUNDAY SCHOOL ANNIVERSARY DAY

Rev. G. J. Clendinnen Spoke at Three Services—Largest Attendance in Months at Yesterday Afternoon's Session.

Gratifyingly successful and remarkably encouraging was the anniversary of the George Street Methodist Sunday School, yesterday. Three services were held, and the observance of the anniversary will be continued to-morrow night, when a concert will be given in the Church. A feature of to-morrow night's programme will be the donating of gifts to the Belgians from every class in the Sunday School.

Yesterday the Rev. G. I. Clendinnen from Kemptville, spoke at all three services. The Rev. Mr. Clendinnen is a forceful speaker, and seems to be particularly gifted in choosing original, yet inspiring, themes for his discourses. He spoke to a crowded Church at both morning and evening services and in the afternoon addressed the Sunday School. In the morning he delivered a delightful address to the Sunday School, which met before Church, and attended the service in a body. In the evening he spoke with equal effect to the youth.

The Sunday School attendance yesterday afternoon was the largest in months, the figures passing well the five hundred mark. For this and for the splendid work being done in the Sunday School, Mr. S. P. Armstrong and his splendid staff of officers and teachers were complimented by Mr. Peever, who also referred in eulogistic terms to the effective energy of Mr. Hagerman and his co-workers in the Grace Sunday School.

In the morning, speaking to the children, Mr. Clendinnen gave a remarkably simple sermon, which contained, however, much of value. He announced that he would speak of one of God's great blessings for which we very seldom gave thanks in prayers. While it was one of our greatest benefits, and something which we could not do without, yet we grumbled at it incessantly. He produced an apparently empty glass tumbler, remarking: "The subject of my address is in this glass. It separates the waters that are above the earth from the waters of the earth. It was known to the ancient Latins, prominently, and the Hebrews more correctly referred to it as expanse. Now," he asked, directing the question to the little ones of the primary department, who occupied the front seats, "What am I going to speak to you about to-day?"

In a chorus the children answered "The Air," and the speaker admitted that "the air" was indeed the subject of his remarks.

In opening, he remarked that in this materialistic age we were slipping into the habit of thinking "what we do not see, is not." In the same manner as we ignored the air we did not realize God in whom (like the air) we moved, and had our being. The commonest things in the world were often-est the best things—things like fresh air, which money could not buy, and yet were free to all.

"I want you to get the habit of making good use of God's fresh air," he said. "For in spite of its being everywhere there are people whose lives are going out because of the want of it."

Five things we owed to the air. We owed to it (1) the breath of life; we owed to it (2) light, (3) heat, (4) sound, and lastly, we were dependent on the air because of its power to store up moisture and foster the fertility of the earth. We owed to the air almost everything that made our heart comfortable and bright.

There also, said the speaker, was such a thing as "moral atmosphere." "A good moral atmosphere was given out in a home where the spirit of kindness, consideration and politeness prevailed.

One of the purposes of a Church and Sunday School should be to generate a wholesome and pure atmosphere for the City, so that generous showers of blessing would fall. Every one, too, was by his life either making the earth darker or brighter—making it sweeter or harder to live in.

Then he emptied the glass of air by the simple expedient of filling it with water. Using the illustration he pointed out that the way to bring light to a heart darkened by sorrow and sin, was to let the light of God's everlasting spirit in to drive away the darkness.

The Greatest Menace

Interesting Sermon by Elder Johnston in Woodmen Hall

A very important theme was considered last evening in Woodmen Hall by Elder Johnston under the title "The Greatest Menace to Canadian Liberty." Taking for his text Matt. 22:21, "Render unto Caesar the things which are Caesar's, and unto God the things which are God's," the elder showed how that in this expression is set forth a principle that should govern humanity at all time, both in their relation to God, and also civil government. The latter, he declared, was ordained of God to regulate affairs between man and man only, and should not in a single instance interfere with man's duty to God. If at any time at all the governments of earth should overstep their bounds and require of a person a duty due to God alone, it was then the individual's right to say as did the apostles, "We ought to obey God rather than man."

But there isn't any danger of any religious laws being enacted as long as the church and the state remain separate and the history of the past clearly prove beyond a doubt that only when the church grasped the arm of the civil power were they ever able to imprison and persecute others. Yea, had it not been for a union of church and state there never would have been a record like that of the dark ages when nearly a million martyrs were put to death at the stake. In view of all such we ought to oppose anything that has for its object the enforcement of religion by law and let every one in matters of religion be free to obey God according to the dictates of his own conscience and not by the dictates of someone else's conscience.

But is it really true we are facing such a danger the elder enquired. We answer oin the affrmative. There is such a system springing up in our Dominion that eventually will become a menace to Canada and this is none other than the "Lord's Day Alliance." This unchristian organization with the clergy at its head, have been following up parliament to enforce men and women to be religious and go to church on Sundays. Having lost the power from on high to persuade and voncince, they now are seeking the power of human government to compell. Shall we Canadian people who love religious liberty permit such a system to flourish in this Dominion? We think not. Let us see to it that we will discountenance any effort that is made by such a system, and henceforth leave every person free to obey the Lord as his conscience dictates. A goodly crowd was present and listened with eager attention.

A VETERAN WHO WAS WITH LORD ROBERTS

Laid Low With Rheumatism—But Cured By "Fruit-a-tives".

CHATHAM, ONT., APRIL 3rd, 1913.

"I am a veteran of the Crimean War and the Indian Mutiny, volunteering from the Royal Artillery into the Royal Engineers, and served under Lord Roberts during the Indian Mutiny, and am a pensioneer of the British Government. Fierce hand-to-hand fighting and continual exposure left me a great sufferer from Rheumatism, so much so that my legs swelled up, making it impossible for me to walk.

"Fruit-a-tives". They cured me of both the Rheumatism and Constipation. In my regular employment, I walk thirty miles a day and enjoy perfect health".

LINDSAY JUNIORS IN THE JUNIOR DISTRICT

"Cap" Simpson Will Have a Husky Bunch of Youngsters to Try Conclusions With Port Hope, Cobourg and Peterborough - Schedule Has Been Altered.

The old-time clashes between Lindsay and Peterborough will be duplicated again this season with the entry of the Scugog club in this junior district. The Lindsay team did not apply for a franchise until after the group schedule had been drawn up, and when they brought the matter to the attention of Secretary Hewitt, he referred them to Convener J. P. Bond and the three clubs already in the schedule. Port Hope, Cobourg and Peterborough all were willing, so that Lindsay has been admitted and the schedule re-arranged.

The Lindsay youngsters will be a strong aggregation and will have the well known "Cap" Simpson at the helm. The new schedule is as follows:

Jan. 1—Lindsay at Port Hope.
Jan. 4—Port Hope at Peterborough.
Jan. 7—Peterborough at Cobourg.
Jan. 8—Port Hope at Lindsay.
Jan. 12—Cobourg at Peterborough.
Jan. 15—Peterborough at Lindsay.
Jan. 18—Cobourg at Port Hope.
Jan. 19—Peterborough at Port Hope.
Jan. 26—Cobourg at Lindsay.
Jan. 26—Port Hope at Cobourg.

HOCKEY GOSSIP

The first O. H. A. game of the season will be played here a week from to-morrow night, when the Bowmanville Intermediates will clash with the local talent.

This will be a busy week for both local teams, as it is the intention to get as much practice as possible during the next few days.

Lindsay's entry into the Junior Group will be welcomed, as it will give each team two more games.

And by the same token the Lindsay team will be a dangerous proposition. The Lindsay Collegiate team, which won the Lindsay Town League, last year, will be the nucleus for the O. H. A. bunch, and the Collegiate boys had a good team last year. Ask Pete Spratt's picked team about that. Peter took a bunch of local talent with a strong sprinkling of Intermediate players up to Lindsay and they were handed a sound beating. The Lindsay gang, however, found a picked Junior team a harder proposition later in the season, winning by 7 to 5 at Lindsay and playing a tie game here. And several of the Lindsay team, notably Norton, the 200-pound defence man, were over the Junior age limit then and will not be available this season.

The Peterborough Intermediates will likely play an exhibition game in Toronto on New Year's night with the Toronto Rowing Club Senior O. H. A. team.

Wilfrid Stratton is endeavouring to arrange an exhibition game during the holidays between the 'Varsity Junior O. H. A. team and the local Juniors. The matter will be taken up to-night. If arranged, the game should be a hummer and a fine test for the local team. 'Varsity reached the finals last year and with six players back again this season, will be prime favourites for the Junior O. H. A. championship.

By the way, the local Juniors have another challenge on their hands from a bunch of Peterborough Collegians home from the various seats of learning for the holidays. The Collegians have announced the following line-up, and asked the local youngsters to come on:

Goal—M. Huycke, 'Varsity.
Defence — Gordon Matthews, 'Varsity; Ormond Cavansh, Woodstock College.
Forwards—Wilfrid Stratton, 'Varsity; Cadets Smith, R. Stratton and Hamilton, R. M. C., Kingston.

The Executive of the Peterborough Hockey Club will meet to-night at 8 o'clock at the Empress Hotel. A full attendance is requested.

The first big practice of the Peterborough Intermediates will be held to-night at 7 o'clock, at Brock Street Rink. With the first game only eight days away every player will undoubtedly be out.

Junior players are reminded of the practice to-morrow night at 7 o'clock. Players cannot afford to miss a practice right now while the make-up of the team is being decided.

With Joe Dwyer as a candidate for goal and Grover Halpin, Harold Morrow and Ray Rose all contending for places on the Intermediate forward line, the wisdom of having a Junior O.H.A. team is evident.

When you come to think of it, Peterborough has turned out a raft of good hockey players. A team something like the following would give any club in the O.H.A. a grand old battle:

Goal—Leo Dercosher.
Referee—Frank Heffernan. Fred Denison.
Rover—Jerry Coughlin.
Centre—Hugh Burnett.
R. Wing—Wilfrid Stratton.
Left Wing—Ken Crane.

Immense Booty Taken.

Because from 3,000,000 to 4,000,000 tons of potatoes rot every year in Germany the government is fostering the erection of drying plants.

For sorting fruit as it is picked in a tree there has been invented a tube that separates the small from the large as they slide down it.

CURLING

Two weeks earlier than last year the first curling was recorded at the Charlotte Street rink on Saturday night. In 1912 and '13 the season opened on New Year's Day, but this year is fairly early. The ice is shaping up well, and with a continuance of good weather all the rinks will be open shortly. It is expected that there will be games to-night after a meeting of the club, which has been called to discuss the bonspiel and appointment of skips.

CHRISTMAS

Now the Christmas time is coming,
The festal time of all the year,
Where age and youth together meet,
And hearts are full of cheer.
In your homes of joy and plenty,
Think not of the pleasures there,
For a sad and lonely Belgian
Of your pity, needs a share.

If the God of all has blessed you
With the bounties of this earth,
He is asking you from Heaven,
Pleading, through the Saviour's birth,
To remember stricken Belgium
Who suffered for the nation's cause,
Losing home, and wife, and children,
By the men that know no laws.

If the spirit of the Yuletide
Seek the homes of one and all,
He'll find naught but desolation,
In Belgium, on Christmas morn.
There be wives, whose hearts are beating
For the husbands in the fight,
Mothers, whose sons are with them,
Doing what is just and right.

Mothers calling for the children
Lost to them perhaps for e'er,
On the bloody fields of Belgium,
When they found the Germans there;
And these splendid old Cathedrals,
Which have stood a century well,
Shall be sad and silent ever;
They will ring no Christmas

If our tears could soothe the a
Of these tried and spartan h
If our sympathies, far reachin
Could unite those dear ones apart,
Could our joys, so freely given,
Lighten burdens bravely borne,
Gladly would be sent those gifts to Belgium,
On a glorious Christmas morn.

If your board be scant and homely,
And your comforts very few,
They should be to you the greater,
You're among the chosen few
Who'll have friend to cheer and help you;
Help to make the festal bright
In your home, and just think of Belgium—
It will make your lot seem bright.

Whether you have wealth in plenty,
Whether you are very poor,
Save a little share for Belgium,
Who gave her very best for you.
And we hope God will show the nations,
Through the brilliant festal light,
The way to end this dreadful war,
E're another Christmas night.

KARLSRUHE, Dec. 21. — (Via Berlin to London.)—Grand Duchess Louise of Baden has received the following telegram from Emperor William:

"Field Marshal von Hindenburg has just reported that the Russian army, after desperate fighting, retreats and is being pursued along the entire front.

"It is evident that the Lord aided our heroic troops. To Him alone is due the honors."

Emperor William also thanked in a telegram the 14th Army Corps, which participated prominently in the fighting on the Russian centre.

"He discovered that his proposed trade was not happily."

"But I'll guess he behaved handsome by about $50 Christmas presents."

WEDDING BELLS

LEAHY—PEARSON.

An interesting little wedding took place last Tuesday, at the residence of his reverence, Father Phelan, when Mr. Stephen Leahy and Miss Pearl Pearson, both of the city of Peterborough, were united in the bonds of holy matrimony.

The bride, who was dressed in a brown silk gown and wore a white hat trimmed with a large black ostrich feather, was attended by her bridesmaid, Miss L. Leahy, who was costumed in a blue silk dress and blue picture hat. The bride carried a lovely bouquet of flowers.

The bridegroom was supported by Mr. Will Godfrey, who acted as "best man."

After the completion of the ceremony, the happy couple proceeded to the former home of the bride, where an elegant supper was partaken of.

The newly-married couple will reside on Water Street, city.

OPERATIONS DIFFICULT.

Territory Before Allies Terribly Obstructed Says Observer.

LONDON, Dec. 21.—The great difficulties under which military operations in France and Belgium are being conducted, are described in a narrative of recent developments written by an official observer attached to the British headquarters and made public yesterday by the official information bureau. The recital brings the story of war, as covered in these eye-witness reports, up to Dec. 17.

"The opposition now being encountered resembles to some extent that met with by us in the beginning of October, when we first reached the Franco-Belgian frontier and before the Germans brought up their full force and assumed the offensive," says the report. "It has one great difference, however, and that is that the enemy is in much greater force and his positions are much stronger and better organized than they were two months ago.

"At that time an advance on the eastern end of the line implied a movement across a very difficult country, as it does still; and for us it meant an attack on skillfully, but hastily fortified strong points or villages, held to a large extent by cavalry and jaegers. With the large proportion of machine guns that we have in front of us yesterday, it is no longer a succession of isolated points. There are still such points, and some are the same, but they are stronger and form part of a practically continuous defensive zone, consisting in some places of several lines of cunningly sited and carefully constructed works.

"This scheme really amounts to a maze of trenches and obstacles. Every known form of obstacle is used. Entrenchments — to select the most common form—vary from loose coils of wire to securely staked net works of from 12 inches to nearly six feet in height, and of different widths."

REBEL IS EXECUTED.

Jury of Boers Condemns Captain Fourie of Treason.

LONDON, Dec. 21.—A despatch from Pretoria tells of the first military execution of a rebel leader involved in the uprisings in British South Africa which followed the outbreak of the European war. Captain Fourie was shot after being convicted of treason. His brother, Lieut. Fourie, also was condemned to death, but sentence was commuted to imprisonment for five years on account of the captain's admission that he had induced his brother to join the rebellion.

Both men had been officers of the South African Defence Force, and being Boers were tried by a court-martial composed of Boers. The captain met death with fortitude.

TO STUDY CONDITIONS.

Officers Commanding Canadian Battalions Have Gone to France.

LONDON, Dec. 21. — After having taken a short training course in the Isle of Wight, the commanding officers of all battalions comprising the Canadian contingent have gone to France to learn, at first hand, the war situation, and to get acquainted with the ground and style of campaign being carried on. The officers include Col. Rennie and Col. Currie, Toronto; Col. Hill, Col. Maggard and Col. Sabatt of Hamilton.

A significant camp order was issued yesterday outlining the work which was to have been done during the next three weeks and crowding it into one week. The men will get several hours of extra drill every day, and signs point daily to an early transfer of the men to the firing line.

Four Thousand Poles Enlist.

WARSAW, Russian Poland, Dec. 21.—(Via Petrograd and London.)—By authority of Grand Duke Nicholas, a Polish legion has been organized. The Russian army contains many Polish volunteers, but the legion will be the first Polish contingent flying a distinctive flag to be accepted.

Four thousand Poles are now enrolled in the legion and will be ready to go to the front in six weeks.

LOOSENING GERMAN HOLD ON THE BELGIAN COAST

Middlekirke, South of Ostend, Reported Evacuated--Fleet Shells Other Points, Aiding the Land Forces in a General Attack.

SPECIAL MORNING CABLE:

PARIS, Dec. 22.—After two weeks of fighting in an effort to maintain their hold on the Belgian coast the Germans are reported to have evacuated Middlekirke, south of Ostend, to-day.

OSTEND REPORTED EVACUATED.

Unconfirmed reports declare that their line has been thrown even further back and that Ostend has been evacuated.

FLEET HAS HELPED CONSIDERABLY.

The coast towns of Zeebrugge and Heyst have been vigorously bombarded by the Allied warships within the past two days. This has been in support of the general movement to clear the coast while the French and British in the Dixmude and Ypres region are forcing the enemy back upon the Bruges-Roulers-Courtrai line.

Says He Saw Jap Soldiers In Marseilles to Aid French

(From the New York Herald.)

That an army corps of first line troops of the Japanese army has disembarked in the south of France is the statement made by a man recently arrived in New York, and who says that about 40,000 of the soldiers of the Mikado were seen by him in Marseilles. It was stated positively that they were not a portion of Great Britain's Indian troops, some of whom, in stature, resemble the forces of Japan.

The distinctive uniform which is worn by the Gurkhas from India precluded the possibility of mistaking the identity of the recently landed force, who are said to have been attired and equipped according to the field service regulations of the Japanese army. In organization they appeared to comprise two divisions, with infantry, cavalry, artillery, sanitary troops, and auxiliary units necessary to the movement of a tactical force in the field.

Men conversant with military matters abroad and the possibilities in the development of the Allies' agreement subsequent to the fall of Tsingtau, Germany's stronghold in the Shantung Peninsula, early in November, declared last evening that the reinforcement of the Allies' battle line in France for the institution of a vigorous offensive campaign by a Japanese expeditionary force, is not only possible but probable.

That the troops of Japan are equal to the requirements for winter campaign endurance was demonstrated ten years ago in Manchuria, when their health record in the camgaign against Russia was remarked by military authorities the world over. In the Japanese army two infantry regiments form a brigade and two brigades (twelve battalions) a division. The war strength of a division is reckoned at 18,700 officers and men, 4,800 horses, 36 guns, and 1,67... vehicles.

Ample time has elapsed since the capitulation of the German garrison of Tsing-tau and the release of the troops operating there in conjunction with the British force, to permit the transportation of a force of 40,000 men to France.

In the time of peace, the Japanese army is about 600,000 strong, including all branches of the service. Complete mobilization, however, cause... this force to be augmented to about twice that number. The first lin... troops of the Japanese service ar... men who are classified as "absolutely fit," that is selected from the "fit" as having special aptitude and qualities for arduous service in the field.

"Then again, who would have expected that your troops, as early as Aug. 3, would have given us a check of Verbolouoff? Who could have thought that in such a vast country as Russia the mobilization would be carried out so quickly and so thoroughly? We knew that on the eve of the declaration of war your revolting workmen were building barracks in all the great manufacturing centres, and that on the very day of President Poincare's visit to Petrograd they stopped the trainways in the streets there.

"We had other more important information, also, yet suddenly this great popular unheaval, the like of which the world has never seen, has disappeared.

Victims of Circumstances.

"We fully expected that Russia would be attacked on all sides, not only for ourselves and Austria, but by Italy, Bulgaria, Turkey, Japan and China. Can be doubt that we should have been victorious in that case? With France we should have finished in a month, while Austria would have held you in check. Then you would have had to fight on all sides. We were assured that Poland would rise and that we should have a repetition of 1863. We also expected a series of disorders in Finland. We hoped to promulgate at Warsaw a new kingdom, which would have for us the greatest political and strategic importance for all time. Yet we had to retire. You could move along your awful roads, while we were drowning in them. I hear our War Office explains our retirement by strategic considerations. Why these fictions? Have we not had our 1812?

"I cannot say much about the allies, but they have not fulfilled our hopes. Perhaps it is because the Russians have exceeded our estimate of them. Evidently they have noone to put against your General Ivanoff. Ivanoff is a genuine Russian old Von Moltke."

The general stopped abruptly and concluded his remarks by saying that "nature itself, fate and history are apparently all against us. It is ... difficult to war with them. We wanted to fight only Russia, and I can assure you we were fully ready to defeat her. Circumstances, however have proved too strong for us."

Omemee Man Killed in Battle

Private Frank Smith, of Omemee Killed on Banks of Meuse

Major Fee, commanding officer of the 45th Regiment, has received word that Private Frank Smith, of Omemee, has given his life for King and country on the Meuse River, while fighting with the allied troops.

When war's tocsin rang out Smith was working for Willim McGee, at Omemee. He was a reservist of the Royal Indian Horse Artillery, and lost no time in reporting to the colours. He was immediately sent to France, where his life's blood has been poured out—a martyr to world-wide liberty.

The news of Private Smith's death was received with keen regret at Omemee. He was a member of D. Co. (Captain Thorne), 45th Regt., and was with his company at Petawawa last summer. He was an expert horseman and a fine type of a soldier. His parents are dead, but he has a brother in the West.

This is the first member of the 45th Regiment to give his life on European soil that the empire might live.

Another Result of Britain's Sway Over the Seas

PARIS, Dec. 21.—Owing to the efficiency of the Allied fleets and despite the presence of the German cruisers in the various oceans, the Minister of Marine said that not a man had been lost since the opening of hostilities of the thousands of French troops transported to France from Algeria, Tunis, East Africa, Morocco, Madagascar and Tongking, or the British troops from Asia, Australasia, Africa and Canada.

The statement was made to the Naval Committee of the Chamber of Deputies by the Minister of Marine. He added that the co-operation of the Allied navies assured the free revictualing of the Allied countries, while the seas were closed to their adversaries. The Minister said that, in addition, the French navy had furnished men and artillery to participate in land battles and also had collaborated in providing war materials from its arsenals, foundries and workshops.

WHY GERMAN PLANS UPSET

Prussian General, Captive of Russia, Cites Many Unfulfilled Expectations

MADE TRAGIC MISTAKE

LONDON, Dec. 21.—A representative of the Bourse Gazette of Petrograd has had an interview with a distinguished Prussian general, who is now a prisoner of war.

In reply to the interviewer's questions, he said:

"We had other more important information, also, yet suddenly this great popular unheaval, the like of which the world has never seen, has disappeared.

Victims of Circumstances.

"We fully expected that Russia would be attacked on all sides, not only for ourselves and Austria, but by Italy, Bulgaria, Turkey, Japan and China. GERMANS MAKE SLIGHT PROGRESS NEAR WARSAW

Have Secured Some Control of Railways and Russians Have Retired Near Lowicz---Both Armies Playing for Positions of Strategic Advantage.

SPECIAL MORNING CABLE:

LONDON, Dec. 22.—The Russian forces on the line of defence before Warsaw are to-day directing a strong counter attack against the Germans between Rawa and the Pilica river. Skierniewice, the important railroad point southeast of Lowicz, has practically been abandoned by the Russians according to reports reaching here.

GERMANS GET HOLD OF RAILWAYS.

With this backward movement by the Russians, the Germans are in partial possession of both railroad lines leading to Warsaw from the west and southwest. It is evident that the Russians are endeavouring to swing the main point of contact of the vast engagement in Poland further south to avoid all possibility of being cornered between the fortress of Warsaw and Novo Georgievsk and the Vistula.

ARMIES PLAYING FOR POSITION.

Heavy German forces have been repulsed in their efforts to drive an opening in the Russian line of defences along the Bzura River. The army of Field Marshal Von Hindenburg is declared to have made little progress in the assaults directed toward the City of Sochaczew. By the counter attacks further south it is believed the Russians may force a shifting of the German forces diminishing the power of attack along the Vistula and Bzura.

How One V. C. Was Won

Particulars of Pte. Wilson's Fine Feat

NEW YORK, Dec. 21.—Particulars as to Private George Wilson's fine feat in winning the Victoria Cross have been given to the London Daily Telegraph from a reliable source. It tok place in the severe fighting near the village of Verneuil on Sept. 14, the day on which Lieut. Sir Archibald Gibson Craig, of the same regiment, was killed.

Wilson discovered there was a German machine gun stationed in a wood, and, apparently on his own initiative, he decided to stop its operations. In his desperate venture he got the co-operation of a private of the 60th King's Rifles.

They went out alone, and managed to get quite close to the enemy's position, when Wilson's companion was killed.

Undaunted, however, Wilson continued his perilous mission. One by one he shot the officer and entire gun team of six soldiers, and then ran in and took possession of the gun and two cases and a half of ammunition.

Former Paper Vendor.

Wilson a few months ago was selling newspapers in the streets of his native city of Edinburgh. He is one of a family of eight orphans, and started life as a news vendor, finding customers for his newspapers among the soldiers stationed at the castle. When a lad he himself enlisted in the Highland Light Infantry. After serving for some years he returned to Edinburgh and for some time he worked in the coal pits at Niddrie, but went back to his first place as news vendor.

The work was proving more lucrative on the outbreak of the war, with the great demand for the newspapers, but a week after the commencement of hostilities he was called upon as a reservist for service. His sister, Mrs. Devlin, to whom he has frequently written from the front, is the wife of a driver in the Royal Field Artillery, and her own brother is now home, wounded in the fighting at Ypres. The new Victoria Cross hero has himself a brother, John Wilson, who is fighting with the second battalion, Royal Scots Fusiliers.

Terrible Shrapnel.

In one of his letters to his sister Wilson says: "Yesterday, you will be surprised to hear, we caught four hens and I volunteered to take them to a farm under fire to cook them. We are getting shelled with shrapnel something terrible. I was knocked blind for about three hours. The Germans got into the trenches of B Company of my regiment and they had a proper Saturday night fight with hands and head. We lost seven and three wounded but the Germans lost thirty and fifty-three prisoners. If we could do that every night the war should be over by the New Year easily."

AMBITION.

Brutes find out where their talents lie;
A bear will not attempt to fly;
A founder'd horse will oft debate,
Before he tries a five-barr'd gate;
A dog by instinct turns aside,
Who sees the ditch too deep and wide;
But men we find the only creature
Who, led by folly, combats nature;
Who, when she loudly cries,—forbear,
With obstinacy fixes there;
And, when his genius least inclines,
Absurdity bends his whole designs.
—Swift.

LINDSAY MAN SEVERELY BURNED

LINDSAY, Dec. 21—Wm. Riley, a young man engaged as a messenger around the G.T.R. station, was severely burned, at his home, James street, and is now under the care of physician.

Rielly went home about the hour above stated and previous to going to bed blew out the coal oil lamp, which was in his room. The blaze was forced down into the oil that exploded, scattering itself over his hair which quickly became ignited. His cries for help brought his mother to his assistance who smothered the flame by throwing a coat over his head. The hair was completely burned off the scalp and his face is severely burned and swollen to an unusual degree. His physicians say he will recover.

The young man is the support of the family and much sympathy is expressed for them under such trying circumstances.

"Liquor Did It, I'll Never Drink Again"

NEW YORK, Dec. 21.— Saved from the electric chair by his daughter's confession of her shame, William V. Cleary, slayer of Eugene Newman, at his home to-day vowed he would never touch another drop of liquor in his life.

"Liquor did it; I'll never drink again," he declared. "Had I never taken that first glass of beer in a Sixth Avenue saloon on the night of July 22 I would never have killed Eugene Newman. I would have learned the next morning that he and Ann were married. From now on I will be one of drink's strongest foes."

Cleary expects to leave for Bermuda soon for a rest. Later he intends resuming his duties of town clerk of Haverstraw.

FOOD HIGH IN BRITAIN.

J. Bull's Christmas Dinner Will Cost 20 Per Cent. More This Year.

LONDON, Dec. 21.—John Bull's Christmas dinner will cost him fully 17 to 20 per cent. more than it did last year. For the best of reasons prices are 50 per cent. higher as the result of war with Turkey and the cutting off of the best supplies. Food prices quoted here today show butter at the highest price it has been for many years, some grades being 38 cents a pound.

According to figures compiled by the Board of Trade, the level of prices quoted here to-day show butcent. higher than five months ago, and 15 per cent. in the small towns. Comparison is made with Berlin figures, which showed more than 16 per cent. increase in October, and which have probably increased since then. Eggs also are high here, for trade with Denmark is much hampered by mining the North Sea.

SUPER-ZEPPELIN SECRETS.

Swiss, Driven Out of Friedrichshafen, Reveals Them.

Lake Constance, via London, December 10.—A Swiss, who was in Friedrichshafen when the British aviators dropped bombs there and who was expelled the next day with other neutrals, says that prior to its attack or aeroplane fright caused by this daring and unexpected raid, the airship town was the proudest spot in Germany. After the shock wore off the residents expressed the belief that the raid was a sure sign that England is shaking in her shoes with fear of the super-Zeppelins.

This Swiss claims to have been told that the new super-Zeppelins are going to do great things, and are expected to offset the advantage possessed by Britain in her strong navy.

Here are the principal details of the super-Zeppelins as given to this Swiss:

Germany possesses thirty Zeppelins altogether, of which twelve are of the improved super-Zeppelin type.

On an average one is turned out every three weeks, so that barring accidents there will be eighteen super-Zeppelins by next spring.

The new Zeppelins carry a large number of balloons in the great envelope and the vessels can remain in the air for a very long period.

They can carry a crew of from twenty-five to thirty men and from forty-five to fifty bombs.

The bombs are said to be exceptionally large and are torpedo-shaped. They have what can best be described as a kind of small plane on either side, so that they can if desired be made to descend in a regular curve instead of straight down. There is a special apparatus for despatching them.

SIGNS OF KIDNEY TROUBLE.

In the early stages kidney troubles are known by backache and urinary disorders. Later come dropsy, stone, rheumatic pains and perhaps diabetes. But don't wait for these. Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills will help you in a few hours. Their thorough action on the liver, kidneys and bowels will clear away the pains and aches and make you well again

"THE BATTLE CRY"

Charles Neville Buck

He paused, then rushed on in headlong dissuasion. "Your life has been the normal life of your sort; of ease and play and of a deliciously rhythmic personality. This idea is absurdly incongruous. It is madness."

"Is that the way you are going to stop me?" she queried a little scornfully. "You say I have the blood of soldiers and scholars. The combination ought to give a touch of the crusader, don't you thing?"

"For a hundred years, dearest, courts and juries and the bayonets of militiamen have struggled to tame and civilize those barbaric people, and for a hundred years they have utterly failed. There is one god down there and his name is Implacable Hatred."

"Don't you think it's almost time they had another God? I sha'n't go with juries or bayonets."

"You would have to go without knowing them, with no knowledge of their ways, their point of view."

"I don't know them now, but I will know them."

"You haven't even a letter of introduction."

"I never heard," her voice rang with with a note against which he knew the futility of argument, "that the Saviour needed letters of introduction."

She had moved out of the shadow now and the moonlight fell on her white shoulders and the slender neck that held her little head so fearlessly poised. From the hair that the soft light kissed to the tips of her satin slippers she was delicate, exquisite and flower-like. The pearls on her throat rose and fell with the agitation of her breathing, but her eyes were as steady in their straight-gazing resolve as were ever the eyes of Jeanne d'Arc. The man whose blood was scalding his temples knew that he had lost and that she would go.

"You are carried away with the hallucination of an exalted mission," he protested. "They are not worth it. Only yesterday I was reading in a paper the biography of one of their feud leaders, a man named 'Bad Anse' Havey. He has not even the excuse of illiteracy. He has served in the State Assembly and he holds his minions in the hollow of his blood-stained hand. He lives like a murder lord, dealing out sentences of death at will, while all the power of the State seems helpless to curb him."

"I read about him, too," she said, "and the fact that such a man can wield power like that is only the greater reason for carrying to them a better code."

"You sha'n't go," he reiterated. "You sha'n't!"

"Stop me then, Roger dear," she said slowly. "At all events I'm not going to-night. It's getting chilly out here. Let's go indoors."

* * *

The leaves of poplar and oak hung still and limp, for no ghost of breeze found its way down there to stir them into movement or whisper. Banks of rhododendron breaking into a foam of bloom gave the seeming of green and whitecaped waves arrested and solidified by some sudden paralysis of nature. Sound itself appeared dead, save for hushed minors that only accentuated the stillness of the Cumberland forest.

There was the low buzz of a bumble bee hanging near the chalice of the catalpa's blossom and a drowsy cadence drifting from the green-blanketed slopes of the mountains; the plaintive call of the nesting dove.

Even the little waters that slipped and shimmered over a shaly creek bed, crept noiselessly down to their destiny of feeding rivers as though their mission was surreptitious.

Now as evening sent her warning with gathering shadows that began to lurk in the valleys, two mounted figures, travelling that way, made no sound either save when a hoof splashed on a slippery surface or saddle leather creaked under the patient scrimbling of their animals.

In front rode a battered mountaineer astride a rusty-brown mule. He himself was as rusty and brown as his beast, and to casual sight as spiritless. Lean shoulders sagged and a thin, weary-eyed face was thrust forward on a long, collarless neck with something suggestive of a turtle's head in its aquiline contour. His clothing, from shapeless hat to unlaced brogans, was sun-gnawed and wind-bitten into absolute neutrality of colour. His uncertain age might have been anything except young—for he had crossed the boundary where a mountaineer bids an early farewell to youth and goes under the aging yoke of hardship and drudgery.

The second figure came some yards behind, carefully following in his wake on a mule which limped and drooped its head because it had cast its shoe in the morning and toiled over mountains all day through a smithless territory.

But it was the figure itself which would have arrested observation with its seeming contradiction to the environment. It had startled into quaint exclamation those men and women in jeans and linsey-woolsey who had appeared now and then in tilting cornfields along the mountainsides. They had "rested their hoes" and stood at gaze, for the second mule bore a woman, riding astride. She was a young woman, and if just now her slender shoulders also drooped a little, still even in their droop they hinted at a gallant grace of carriage.

The girl was very slender and though convoyed by the drab missionary, "Good Anse" Talbott, though astride a lame mule and accoutered with saddlebags and blanket roll, her clothes were not of mountain calico, but of good fabric, and skillfully tailored, and she carried her head differently. There was unconscious pride of race and purpose in the uptilt of that girl's chin, and though now she was very tired and her delicately curving lips fell into a somewhat pathetic droop; though her eyes wore a hint of furrow between their brows, still the lips were subtly and sweetly carved by their Creator and the eyes were worthy mirrors for the sky high above the topmost crest of the ridges.

Indubitably this was a "furriner," one of those women from the other world of Down-below; the world that lay beyond the ridges to the east and west, of which the hill people had only a vague conception. She was an outlander to be, at first glance, viewed with the suspicion that resents the coming of innovation to a land which has long stood unaltered and unalterable. But who was she and why had she come?

Yet, had she known it, word had gone ahead of her and been duly reported to the one man who knew things hereabouts; who made it a point to know things, and whose name stood as a challenge to innovation in the mountains. When at morning she had started out from the shack town at the end of the rails "Bad Anse" Havey's informers had ridden not far behind her. Later they had pushed ahead and relayed their message to their chief.

Like one of the untamable eagles that circled the windy crests of his mountains, Anse Havey watched, with eyes that could gaze unblinking into the sun, all men who came and went through the highlands where his eyrie perched. Those whom he hated, unless they, too, were of the eagle breed, fierce and resourceful and strong of talon, could not remain there. And with strong wings as well as strong talons he and his sort laughed at all law which they did not themselves make and fancied themselves above it—creatures of the heights.

This slender young woman, astride a mule, was coming as the avowed outrider of a new order. She meant to wage war on the whole fabric of illiteracy and squalid ignorance which lay entrenched here. Consequently her arrival would interest Bad Anse Havey.

Once that day when they had stopped at a wayside mill to let their mules pant at the water-trough, she had caught a scrap of conversation that was not meant for her ears; a scrap laughingly tossed from beard-ed lip to bearded lip among the hickory-shirted loiterers at the mill door.

"Reckon thet thar's the fotched-on woman what aims ter start a school over on the head of Tribulation," drawled one native; "I heered tell of her t'other day."

With a somewhat derisive laugh another had contributed,

"Me[illegible] she hain't talked thet project o[illegible] with Bad Anse yit. Reckon he don[illegible]low ter tolerate no sich foolery es[illegible]t."

As [illegible] had stiffened in her saddle with [illegible]ntment and fighting spirit a third [illegible]e had pensively volunteered the su[illegible]estion: "Hit mout be a right-good [illegible]e fer thet gal to go on back down[illegible]ow, whar she b'longs at."

The [illegible]irl was thinking of all that now [illegible] she rode in the wake of her silent [illegible]cort. Muscles which had never[illegible]efore proclaimed themselves were p[illegible]king into a rack of pain in her back [illegible] neck and limbs and it is difficult [illegible]be gallant and resolute when one [illegible]ired. Suddenly it seemed to her t[illegible] she bore on the shoulders of a gir[illegible]esh from college, and reared to ea[illegible] a burden which Atlas should be h[illegible]ng.

Th[illegible]came ploddingly to a higher strip[illegible]road, and she clutched at her pomm[illegible] and swayed a little in her saddle u[illegible]er a dizzying wave of physical exhaus[illegible]on. Now the mountains open[illegible] from their choking closeness and [illegible]ad lay a broad vista.

Ev[illegible] the sprays of elder and the flare [illegible] the trumpet flower carried a colour[illegible]note of weed-like lawlessness. That [illegible]ich lawlessness as held these hills [illegible]rked in its grip could exist in her c[illegible]ntry had always seemed to her incred[illegible]ble. Now the sun was sinking into a[illegible]bank of sombre clouds through a rift in the ridges, and the clouds were crimsoned at their marges as though with the blood of this people's ferocity. Why had the potent wave of civilization always broken here in shattered foam? This morning she had asked herself that question. This afternoon, she looked at the mountains and the mountains were the answer. There they stood before her rock-ribbed and titanic. They were beautiful beyond words, but unshakably sullen and inexpressibly grim. These were the hills she had come to change; hills fixed and invincible; hills that had halted and deflected the restless flow of civilization as armour plate might turn a rocket's fire.

They had nourished mediaevalism unaltered through two centuries; they had been ancient when the Alps and Himalayas yet slept in the womb of the sea; old before the Andes were conceived! And as she rode her hobbling mule into their depths with wilting confidence, it seemed to her that the human incarnation of this great lawlessness stood mocking her in the form, contemptuous visage which her imagination had painted as that of Bad Anse Havey. Here was a desperado, defying all law whom a sovereign commonwealth could not or would not rise and crush.

In a moment of almost cringing despair she wished indeed that she were "back thar down below whar she b'longed at."

Then almost fiercely drawing back her aching shoulders, she cast her eyes about on the darkening coves and the creeping shadows of the broad panorama from which came no thread of smoke, no sign of human habitation and raised her voice in anxious inquiry. "How much further do we have to go?"

The man riding ahead did not turn his face, but flung his answer apathetically backward over his shoulder: "We got to keep right on twell we comes to a dwellin'-house. I'm aimin' fer old man Fletch McNash's cabin a leetle ther rise of a mile frum hyar. I 'low mebby he must shelter us twell mornin'."

"And if he doesn't?" demanded the girl.

"Ef he doesn't we've got to ride on a spell further."

The girl closed her eyes for a moment and pressed her lip between her teeth.

Before He Became Famous as the Author of Dr. Chase's Receipt Book.

Here is a letter from an aged gentleman who consulted Dr. Chase, long before his Receipt Book attained a world - wide circulation or his family medicines became known to the ends of the earth.

MR. O. D. BARNES.

Like most people of advanced years his kidneys were the first organs to break down and when doctors failed to help him he remembered the physician who cured him of pleurisy in his younger days.

Mr. O. D. Barnes, R.F.D. 1, Byron, Mich., writes:—"About fifty years ago, when living in Ann Arbor, Dr. A. W. Chase, the famous Receipt Book author, was called on to treat me for pleurisy. Ever since that I have used and recommended Dr. Chase's Medicines, and have two of his Receipt Books in the house.

"Some time ago a cold settled in the kidneys, causing backache, frequent urination, dizziness, and affected the eyesight. My appetite failed and I could not sleep nights. Two doctors failed to do me any lasting good, so I started using Dr. A. W. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills and Nerve Food. The results have been highly satisfactory to me. Appetite improved, I gained in weight, sleep and rest well, and feel strong and well. My kidneys resumed their natural functions, and I believe that my cure was due to Dr. A. W. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills and Nerve Food. I am 78 years old, superintend work on my farm, and can turn in and do some work myself."

Collier's Weekly: "Then I dipped into the future far as human eye could see," wrote the late Mr. Tennyson. He had little on McGraw. Two years ago McGraw landed a young shortstop named Milton Stock. He watched Stock work out some 30 minutes one day at short and then called him in.

"You're not a shortstop," he said; "you're a natural third baseman. Move over to the bag."

Stock, young and inexperienced, was sent back to the minors, where he was promptly moved back to short. He was only an average shortstop even in minor-league competition. This spring McGraw called him back, shifted him again to third, and within two months young Stock was accounted one of the greatest third-base discoveries of the decade. How did McGraw, who saw him play short for thirty minutes, know his natural sphere of endeavour was at third? You can frisk us. That's one of the reasons the Giant leader gets $30,000 a year—and one of the reasons why he earns it.

WOES OF THE POOR RICH.

How the Wife of One Wealthy Man Got Her Spending Money.

In the American Magazine, in a story by Rebecca Hooper Eastman, is a satire on the poor rich, in which the wife of a wealthy man tells as follows how she gets hold of her spending money:

"Kitty, dear, I can't bear that you should misjudge me, and so I am going to tell you what not a soul in this world knows. I have absolutely no money and no way of getting any. My husband doesn't think it is necessary for me to have money when I can charge things. I owe you a dollar. You think I have forgotten, but I have not. And I am going to pay you—when I can.

"I want to tell you that I have just discovered a way to make money. You see, I have borrowed so many small sums for tips and car fares that I am quite in debt.

"We have one of the finest cooks in New York, as you know, and I order him to make cakes. He thinks they are for a bazaar. In reality I sell these cakes at a certain woman's exchange for $1 a loaf, cash, Kitty. I leave my car at a nearby hotel, walk through the hotel to the exchange on the next street, wear a plain suit and a thick veil, which I put on in the hotel dressing room. Nobody knows."

TRAINING OF BRITISH ARMY HAS BEEN ON THE RIGHT LINES

The British military authorities are raising a new army of more than a million men, and it is natural that those responsible for the training are looking carefully at the record of the continent to see whether the methods of training which have been developed and practiced in the last ten years are correct. The result is to be found in certain publications designed to guide officers in their work at home.

The general effect of these records of the experience of the last four months is that the training of the British army has been conducted on sound and correct lines. Those who would fit themselves to face the enemy must study the text books in use when the war broke out. Of course, certain wrinkles are learned from practical experience.

For example, an officer of high rank after remarking on the effectiveness of the German artillery fire, says:

"The German infantry, on the other hand, is inferior to our own in developing fire effect. A short field of fire of our guns and rifles against the found sufficient to check a German infantry attack. Tactically, therefore, in occupying ground for defence, every effort should be made to combine the fire of our owns and rifles against the enemy's infantry, while denying to the enemy the use of his artillery by the siting of trenches in positions which it is intended to hold on to, behind rather than on the crest line or forward slopes.

"This woes not mean that advanced posts have been found to be of no value. On the contrary, in order that full advantage may be taken of the strength of such position as described above, it has been found essential to prevent the enemy's rapid approach by the use of advance posts supported by artillery, in order to gain time for development and the reconnaissance of the main position, and under favourable conditions for its entrenchments."

The same officer makes a remark upon a subject the importance of which [illegible] are apt to underrate.

"Men who have not been with the colours during the last 4 or 5 years do not understand the necessity for good march discipline. It should be impressed upon all ranks and should be resolutely insisted upon at all training previous to arrival in the theatre of war. There has been straggling, no doubt in great measure due to exhaustion during the first phase, but it is most necessary to tighten up the march discipline and to prevent undue opening out and straggling.

Horsed waggons should not be packed on the road.

Waggons should never be halted when passing through a village.

When a halt is necessary it should be made before reaching or after passing a village.

Men accompanying trains should carry their rifles and should march in formed bodies.

Each unit should detail an officer with a small party of selected non-commissioned officers and men to march in rear of the unit in order to enforce orders against straggling, leaving the ranks for water and so forth."

Two new features of this war had been the use of aircraft and machine guns. Upon these subjects this authority says:

"The enemy's aircraft are numerous and efficient and it is clear that he obtained by this or other means excellent information as to our movement. It has been found impossible to conceal movements of large bodies of troops when on the march from this observation, and the position of large bivouacs can always be observed from the air. But much can be done to conceal artillery positions and trenches, and the use of overhead cover, as we know from our own experience, makes it difficult to ascertain from the air whether trenches and gun emplacements are occupied or not. Troops should therefore be taught to understand the necessity for concealment from aircraft whenever the conditions admit of it.

Machine guns have played a very important part in the war, and the enemy is adept in making use of their surprise effect, which has been found to be very great indeed. Till they are located and engaged machine play guns play havoc with troops in close order, but when locate they are easily knocked out by artillery fire, or silenced by a concentrated rifle fire. Great care should therefore be taken in selecting the positions for machine guns, in occupying them without attracting attention and in reserving fire until suitable opportunity arrives, in order to make full use of their surprise effect. The only way to avoid the surprise effect of the enemy's machine guns is by careful reconnaissance."

Trench fighting has been a feature of the use of infantry. This officer says: "Owing to the accuracy of the enemy's artillery fire it is desirable that ground which is to be held defensively or to assist further advance should be entrenched. Trenches should be commenced at once with the light entrenching tool and improved later as opportunity occurs. They should be deep and narrow and should show above the ground level as little as possible, and all trenches should be traversed at intervals of five to ten rifles. When siting trenches it should be borne in mind that the enemy is adept at bringing enfilade artillery fire to bear from flank positions. At any point, such as a salient, at which trenches are particularly liable to this form of fire, great care should be taken as to their siting and they should be especially heavily traversed. Where head cover cannot be provided, cover from shell fire for the troops when not actually using their rifles, can be readily be obtained by making recesses in the trenches on the side nearest to the enemy. It has been found that head-cover or anything that in any way interferes with the rapid use of the rifle is a disvantage in positions where the trenches have a short field of shell fire and are therefore liable to be brushed. If immunity from shrapnel fire can be obtained up to the moment of having to resist the infantry attack, no more can be hoped for. Communication trenches for supports and ammunition supply are necessary and they should be wide enough to permit of a stretcher being carried along them so as to facilitate the removal of wounded.

Support trenches may be close to the firing line trenches, but should be so made that the men can lie down and sleep. All trenches must be assimilated to the surroundings.

Elbow rests have not generally been found useful.

Protection against high explosive shells of howitzers is unobtainable in field operations, but this effect can be localized by traverses."

During the past ten years the British cavalry has been training with great diligence. Ignoring the advice of extremists, its leaders have taught the men to be expert alike with sword and lance and with the rifle. The result is that both the cold steel and the rifle have been used effectively. Certain high placed observers thus are quoted:

"The training of the cavalry with the rifle has been invaluable, and has given them great advantage over the enemy. There have been no cases up to the present of large cavalry charges with the "arme blanche," but the latter has been used a good deal in small affairs."

In distinction of the German method of handling infantry in masses, these officers say that an infantry advance "should not be made in rigid lines, but with clouds of skirmishers—5 or 6 yards apart—thrown forward according to the ground and available cover."

"The essential thing," says one general at the front, "is to pay attention to the sound principles on which our training has been based."

This is a proud thing to be able to say. British soldiers judged accurately the nature of modern warfare and adapted the teaching of their men to it, on the whole with great success. It took brains to do that.

"The German infantry," writes an artillery officer, "cannot touch ours, and their shooting is deplorable. They seem to depend entirely on their machine guns, which are the very devil and magnificently handled." The observer says:

"To say that artillery cannot stop an infantry advance by itself is sheer nonsense. The German infantry will not face our artillery fire, nor that of the French."

How To Make the Quickest, Simplest Cough Remedy

Most Reliable than the Ready-Made Kind and You Save $2. Fully Guaranteed

This home-made cough syrup is now used in more homes than any other cough remedy. Its promptness, ease and certainty in conquering distressing coughs, chest and throat colds is really remarkable. You can actually feel it take hold. A day's use will usually overcome the ordinary cough—relieves even whooping cough quickly. Splendid, too, for bronchitis, spasmodic croup, bronchial asthma and winter coughs.

Get from any druggist 2½ ounces of Pinex (50 cents worth), pour it into a 16-ounce bottle and fill the bottle with plain granulated sugar syrup. This gives you, at a cost of only 54 cents, 16 ounces of better cough syrup than you could buy for $2.50. Takes but a few minutes to prepare. Full directions with Pinex. Tastes good and never spoils.

You will be pleasantly surprised to note how quickly it loosens dry, hoarse or tight coughs, and heals the inflamed membranes in a painful cough. It also stops the formation of phlegm in the throat and bronchial tubes, thus ending the persistent loose cough.

Pinex is a most valuable concentrated compound of genuine Norway pine extract, rich in guaiacol, which is so healing to the membranes.

To avoid disappointment, be sure and ask your druggist for "2½ ounces Pinex," and don't accept anything else.

A guarantee of absolute satisfaction, or money promptly refunded, goes with this preparation. The Pinex Co., Toronto, Ont.

A HUMAN CANCER

Lloyd George's Scathing Sarcasm in Dealing With Turkish Empire

Addressing a great audience at the City Temple, London, Mr. Lloyd George thus spoke of Turkey: "We have been assailed by another national exponent of the higher culture—Turkey. (Laughter.) I notice the same characteristics, the same contempt for the elements, for the decencies of international war. We did our best to avoid a quarrel. No one could have shown more patience in the face of insults and injuries that I could detail to you by the hour. This Great Britain did in the face of the treatment which was accorded to us by this miserable, wretched contemptible Empire on the Bosphorous. (Cheers.) But the quarrel has been taken out of our hands. We were in the hands of fate, and the hour has struck on the great clock of destiny for settling accounts with the Turk. The Turk is the greatest enemy of his own faith because he has discredited it by misgovernment. What have the Turks contributed either to culture, to art, or to any aspect of human progress that you can think of? They are a human cancer (cheers), a creeping agony in the flesh of the lands which they misgoverned, and rotting every fibre of life. And now that the great day of reckoning has come upon the nation I am glad. (Cheers). I am glad the Turk is to be called to a final account for his long record of infamy against humanity in this gigantic battle between right and wrong. It is meet that the Turk should march into action shoulder to shoulder with the devastators of Belgium. They have made themselves fit comrades. The ravagers of Armenia and the desolaters of Flanders. The Turk of the East, and the Turk of the West, both ruthless military Empires with only one god, and that is violence. Their downfall will bring gladness, security, and peace to a world which for generations has been oppressed and darkened by their grim presence.

QUIT MEAT WHEN KIDNEYS BOTHER

Take a Glass of Salts If Your Back Hurts or Bladder Troubles You

No man or woman who eats meat regularly can make a mistake by flushing the kidneys occasionally, says a well-known authority. Meat forms uric acid which excites the kidneys, they become overworked from the strain, get sluggish and fail to filter the waste and poisons from the blood, then we get sick. Nearly all rheumatism, headaches, liver trouble, nervousness, dizziness, sleeplessness and urinary disorders come from sluggish kidneys.

The moment you feel a dull ache in the kidneys or your back hurts or if the urine is cloudy, offensive full of sediment, irregular of passage or attended by a sensation of scalding, stop eating meat and get about four ounces of Jad Salts from any pharmacy; take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast and in a few days your kidneys will act fine. This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and has been used for generations to flush and stimulate the kidneys, also to neutralize the acids in urine so it no longer causes irritation, thus ending bladder weakness.

Jad Salts is inexpensive and cannot injure; makes a delightful effervescent lithia-water drink which everyone should take now and then to keep the kidneys clean and active and the blood pure, thereby avoiding serious kidney complications.

Fall and Winter Fabrics.

Fabrics will be of greater weight, says the Dry Goods Economist, in worsteds, gabardine, serge, poplin and prunella; in woolens, broadcloth, wool velour, zibeline, peau de souris and novelty weaves; checks and a few stripes as fancies; satins, crepe de chine, novelty moire, taffie, messaline, charmeuse and soft finish taffets; velvets, plushes and fur fabrics.

CHIC LINGERIE.

Stockinet silk can now be bought by the yard by women who like to save their undergarments made at home.

Eggshell crepe nightgowns are trimmed with flat bands of blue and white stripes.

Waistcoats of white pique, fastened with pearl buttons, are fashionable.

Mother-of-pearl buttons are fashionable in the tail and olive shapes.

The more extreme new bathing suits have panniers.

HAD HYSTERICS AND FAINTING SPELLS

Asbury Park Woman Had Complete Nervous Breakdown—Restored to Health by Vinol.

Asbury Park, N.J.—"I was in such a nervous, weak, run-down condition that I could not sleep nights, every little thing disturbed me, my appetite was very poor, and I was losing flesh. I was so nervous at times that I used to faint and have hysterics. I do my housework for a family of four, and they became alarmed at my condition. I tried beef, iron and wine and cod liver oil emulsions without benefit. One day our druggist suggested that I try Vinol and told me how it had helped others. I did so, and it has simply done wonders for me, as I am a well woman and entirely cured of my nervousness."—Mrs. KATHERINE E. KLEIN, Asbury Park, N.J.

Such reliable testimony should convince others of the value of Vinol, therefore if you are worn out, weak and nervous and want new strength and more vitality, we ask you to take Vinol, our delicious cod liver and iron tonic. If it fails to benefit you we give back your money.

Vinol is a constitutional remedy for all weak, nervous and run-down conditions of men, women and children.

MEMORANDA OF WAR

IMPRESSIONS OF A FRENCH SOLDIER-ARTIST.

By Written by Xavier Sager.

October 25, 1914. A BEAUTIFUL starry night. The moon rising slowly above the horizon. A night on which one ought not to fight, on which one ought not to die. A great freshness spreads itself over the atmosphere.

The calm of high branches is above us. The forest would like to sleep, but inexorably the battle continues.

Do you hear the hoofbeats of the horses? The ammunition wagons are bringing to the cannon their formidable nourishment. And then back go the war chariots which have served out the repast of these steel beasts. They carry back, empty, in baskets, the cartridges of brass, which shake and rattle over the rocks of the routes. Ten thousand shells eaten, in one day on this one brow of the hill.

Over there some motorcyclists are going toward the trenches. They try to reinforce the troops, who can only be reached during the night.

French and German soldiers observe there, quite near, each one in his trench, and neither can advance nor recede without being fired at.

Never was there a war like this gigantic war. All is new, different to any that have ever preceded it. That which changes the physiognomy of the battle field is the employment of the trenches, where the combatants find a refuge and shelter from the bullets and shells during days and weeks.

This vast extent of ground seems at first glance deserted. However, grumblings pass and the earth trembles. A whistling, very soft and fine, mingled with an ominous sonorousness, strikes the air in every direction.

Looking closely, one perceives on the ground in the distance some kind of lines, confusedly moving, and from where are sent out strident noises, isolated and in series.

One sees nothing distinctly, nothing living; that is a modern field of battle.

That night we again chased the Germans from several trenches. This is the most amusing of ambush wars.

Men agile, supple and resolute advances stealthily, silently. They creep, they move awkwardly on hands and feet from a cluster of trees to a slope, from a haystack to a ditch. They are armed with shields that protect them from the bullets.

The night lends her covering mantle. We approach some barbed wire carefully entangled by the Germans, who have little desire for a face to face combat. The wires are cut slowly, without noise; we retire, not having troubled the heavy silence of the outposts.

At the early morn some troops surprise and assault on the enemy in the heart of their cages. It is thus that day by day we gain a little of the ground lost.

In this sweet, pure autumn day we traverse a landscape at once solemn and majestic. It is only with a supreme effort that we can believe that some terrible encounters have taken place here. The mind searches a way to make a contrast, in the face of such beauty of nature. So unapparent the drama of yesterday, so apparent the splendor of this soft October day, when all at once a little village is revealed to us and we are painfully shown by its heartrending aspect that the barbarians have passed through it. The ruined houses, sections of walls whose a mass of cinders cut the profound blackness of some charred beams. A little further on are still visible the effects of cannon and mitrailles.

On our right the famous Marais des Flanders. It is here that the German Imperial Guards sustained enormous losses. The foot sinks when it is pressed there in a blackish peat; water that has levelled the soil remains invisible. But the marshy earth gives way under the step: the leg sinks, then the body as far as the shoulders. The tall Imperial Guards knew there under the murderous fire of our cannon the terrible torments of engulfment. The day after the battle some wounded were still struggling, in the midst of their dead, on this field of horror. I have such a memory of it that my sleep is troubled. Here in an awful combat our cannon overthrew hundreds and thousands of Germans. Of these bodies of their brothers they made a heap, not without piling in the same heap some wounded, still living and gasping—it was a shelter, from behind which frightful rampart they fired.

There is the river. A beaty bridge had been thrown from bank to bank. Of the old one there remains only a few broken girders. The greenish water flows rapidly, bearing away now and then some corpses. It seems as if the bodies pursue each other in a fantastic race, thrown sometimes against the banks, whirls into eddies, arrested sometimes by an obstacle that suddenly raises them, frightful to view, with their blanched, white faces and their large, dull eyes, which seem still to have vision. Some of them yet hold a gun. Some of the bodies rest a while on the reeds, balancing in regular movements, then are pushed away again by the current to continue their funeral course.

Death—one sees it everywhere, and one believes in it no more. * * * From the porch of an old church, half destroyed, I distinguish a priest, aged and tall. They are praying under his outstretched arms in this little chapel, where the faithful bend the head in common prayer. I enter among them, and I see there eight poor little coffins, close to one another, and around them weeping women—mothers, sisters, fiancées—all desolate. The war has come! The war is raging! And the little village is in mourning like the great towns. Old heads with gray hair, bent with age; worn faces that bend toward the soil; fair heads that bow likewise, in the same pain. * * * Now the eight little soldiers are carried to the earth. They are buried together. They had belonged to the same battalion. They had been good comrades; they had promised never to quit one another; they had sworn eternal friendship—they will keep their word. They have not seen the victory, but they have merited it.

The most frightful carnage of modern times is unfolding here. The little river Yser bears on its breast thousands and thousands of Germans corpses, thrown there by order of their Emperor.

To die for the Emperor! One knows how that was done a hundred years ago. Certainly it is, by heroism that the soldiers of William II. are pressed to the furnace. They have the bravery of the blood and of the muscles, but they have not that burning flame which is lighted only in the heart. In dying they do not salute their God. They fall heavily to the feet of their master. * * *

November 2, 1914.—To-day, the day following All Saints' Day, the second of November, is the Day of the Dead. In France, as in most European countries, this day is consecrated to the honor and memory of those who are no more: then, of what else can I speak to you on this day if not of those who are lying under this corner of ground which their blood fixates?

Not a meadow, not a field, not a hill, not a vale, where the war has failed to leave the imprint of its steps of blood. The graves—one encounters them everywhere, in the fields or in the glades, the mounds raising the ground slightly. They are scarcely distinguishable under the grass which begins to cover them. The rain threatens to efface them, and soon they will be unrecognizable except for the crosses improvized from a broken gun or a bayonet planted in the ground.

Those who were killed on the spot are buried in the large cuttings that neighbor the pits where the Germans are thrown.

It is not always easy to render to the fallen combatants the last and services. The pious delicacy, the patient sweetness, of those who occupy themselves with these tasks would have softened the pain of the parents and friends of these dead if they could have been present.

This epoch is unique in history since human beings have lived in society; never has death had the day to make such a schedule of its trophies, never before has death so easily reaped so many lives. What a harvest! These are the strongest, the finest, the most valiant of each race who have fallen. Never has mourning been more numerous and more profound. Never have so many hopes been cut off.

To-day it is not only the child who comes laden with flowers to place wreaths on the grave of the grandmother. Now the grandparents come with hesitating step; the father and the mother, rigid with suffering, stand immobile before the vain image of the son, dead yonder.

From one end of Europe to the other hundreds of thousands of mothers, hundreds of thousands of children are bending the knee on the damp earth, asking themselves under what justice they are thus crushed. The women of Ireland, the heroic women of Belgium, the women of France, the women of England, all go, with flowers in their hands, their hearts breaking with sorrow, asking themselves why. Why? WHY? Because one man has willed it. One man, a man who has himself a wife and children.

And this day, for the first time perhaps, there arises a feeling of anger and hatred, above the pain even; on this Day of Supreme Pardon.

One can brave death, but not the heart pain. That is why, on all the roads of France, walk slowly the overwhelmed. * * * There is joy only on the field of battle. Yes; the places where one braves death with the intoxication of the sacrifice, with the gayety of youth and the consciousness of duty.

We all have some friends, some comrades who are dead; we do not weep for them, we envy them; on seeing their glorious death we feel ourselves filled with an implacable hatred and the renouncing of all joy, of all hopes until their death be revenged.

Over there the village church, only the belfry of which remains standing, sends to us the sound of its bells, which falls coldly on our ears—coldly, as if the coldness of the tomb had struck through their bronze and paralyzed them. * * *

Among us there is a soldier priest. He begins to tell us that there are some who neglect God a little, but that at the bottom we serve Him by our acts. It would be better not to invoke the aid of our Saviour continually, but to respect a little more his commands. After that he speaks of the families, of the anxious wives and mothers, of the little ones, the betrothed, who some will never see again. At this moment I look around me. I see certain ones making wry faces in order to stifle their emotion, others drawing out handkerchiefs and using them vigorously, but all trying to give themselves the air of not having tears, but a bad cold. At this moment, as if to permit us to hide our emotion, the cannon resound quite near us. I have the time to see the priest raise his hand in blessing us and then hastening to take his gun, becoming again a soldier.

This is the last mass for some of those who are here.

The poor church also has had the death of a soldier. Bombarded by the Germans, it has fallen in ruins, and on this beautiful autumn day.

* * *

The day has been hard. There have been innumerable victims in a combat where the Germans have set up ten times in succession a pontoon bridge that our cannon have ten times broken. They go to death stubbornly. They have charged sixteen consecutive times to force a passage where our mitrailleuses have mowed them down. They sacrifice themselves as did the Japanese against the Russians, to crush our lines by the weight of the dead.

November 10, 1914.—It is difficult and a little presumptious to judge of the whole of the war by the little part that I have before my eyes; but it seems to me that in Flanders the combats are more frightful than those of the Marne and the Aisne. Try to imagine the present war with its front of 400 kilometres and its millions of combatants; of the cannon which fire a distance of twenty kilometres; of the enemy nearly always invisible; of the mitrailles falling from the sky, arising from the bottom of the water, rending the undermined ground and annihilating towns in a few hours.

In these battles it is necessary to hide, to slip under brushwood, stay long hours lying flat on the stomach, invisible, walking, creeping on land that has been battered alternately by Germans and by French batteries. When we avoid the shrapnel of the one we fall into the zone ploughed by the fire of the other. Under the trees great branches fall, hewn off by the projectiles. In the open the ground shifts at a step, the air is perforated right and left and suddenly bursts into smoke. If one does not want to die one must quit this cataclysm. But by where? The hills thunder, the woods crackle. We must go on always, harassed, hungry, thirsty; the pouch and the can empty; the overcoat heavy, our throats dry and parched, our feet burning. Suddenly, a cry, "There, there! Look! the Germans!" The word spreads from one end of the brigade to the other.

Active, far and dark, the masses of the enemies rise up outside the bombarded wood. Some battalions are displayed under the glittering of the bayonets. Suddenly all sink down flat in the lucerne. The air immediately shivers, vibrates in our ears. In less than a minute there are men kneeling, others thrown down, some lamed, some maimed, the cries, the swearing, the complaints, the furious howling, the indignant clamours. Each one of the bullets which touches one of us adds to our fury and exasperates us more and more.

It is then that the clarions sound the charge, "We are coming! We are coming!" The bayonets flash, fixed at the end of the rifles. The officers cease to hold us. They show us that at least 800 metres separate us from the enemy.

Kneeling in the lucerne, the Germans send showers of death. We run on the enemy, careless about those who fall, Germans and French, charging, stabbing, lancing * * *

No, this is not a war—it is a butchery dictated by a madness * * * Some thousands escape, wounded, bobbling along the battlefield, or are piled up in all sorts of carriages, that go away in a sad procession. Some thousands lie dead scattered in the fields. To bury them the time and the men are lacking. The carriages and the auxiliary bring their poor dead bodies as if they were heaps of rubbish. And while the fields are covered with the dead and the wounded the German General Staff continues to give new orders to the fifth troops which arrive, and all repeat the password "Forward! Forward! Calais must be taken."

It would diminish our success to believe the legend which presents the Germans continually fleeing. But they are not inspired by a great ideal. With them it is a leading rather than a marching to the combat; but they fight with resolution, and fall bravely.

The German losses in their unsuccessful efforts to reach Calais even now amount to the enormous number of 100,000 men. This is not exaggeration if one thinks of their excess of surrounding by big masses and the heavy formations that they throw out, especially, under the mitrailles.

OUR DAILY SHORT STORY

OLD PAP PINKHAM

Relates How Patriotism Got the Crowd in Jericho.

USEFUL GREAT-GRANDDADS.

Rival Candidates For Constable Inject Their Ancestors' Heroism Into Their Campaign, and Bunker Hill Goes Down to Defeat.

By M. QUAD.

[Copyright, 1914, by Associated Literary Press.]

MY Dear Mr. President—Later on I may ask you to find some sort of federal office for Mr. Abner Jones.

The other evening Abner says to me, "Pap, I'm thinkin' about runnin' next 'lection and you must help me out."

"But I'm postmaster of Jericho," says I, "and it's furbidden fur postmasters to talk politics."

"But I'm askin' it as a personal favor, pap," he goes on. "I've bin a friend of your'n, and now you've got to help me. What's the Monroe doctrine?"

"I wouldn't dast start in to tell you, as I never studied up on it. What don't concern the postoffices don't concern me, you know."

"D'you know anything about free trade, pap?"

"Bein' busy in the grocery and postoffice, I don't go into outside things."

"I've got to find out all about these things," says Abner.

"Why don't you go to Lish Billings?" says I. "Lish is purty well posted."

"But how kin I? Lish wants to run fur constable hisself."

Abner seemed so anxious I felt sorry for him and says:

"You had a great-grandfather?"

"I must hev had."

"And he fit and died at Bunker Hill?"

"He must hev. As nigh as I kin learn he was allus around whar a row was goin' on."

"You've got to put it that he poured out his blood thar. That's your holt."

The next evenin' brung its crowd to the postoffice. Thar was some scatterin' talk about 'tater bugs and hog cholera; then Enos Johnson speaks up:

"I think I'm right in sayin' that the patriots assembled here this evenin' hev the best interests of these United States at heart. And, bein' the best interests of these United States at heart, it behooves us to go a leetle slow about our next constable and see that he is a fittin' representative of the great and glorious principles which hev made America a shinin' example before the world. On behalf of my fellow patriots of Jericho I asks Abner Jones whar he stands on the question of free trade."

"I ain't standin' on the question 'tall," answers Abner after a minit.

"We'd rather you'd be on one side or t'other," continues Enos, "but mebbe that won't make so much difference. I've understood that Thomas Jefferson never could make up his mind as between pumpkin pies and strawberry shortcake, and so we won't press you. How about trusts, Abner?"

"Same as on free trade," replies Abner.

"But you've got to be one way or t'other."

"That's a p'int—a strong p'int," says Deacon Spooner.

"Hain't you fur sunthin or agin sunthin?"

"Yes, I'm fur sunthin. I'm standin' pat on my great-grandfather."

"What about your great-grandfather?" asked Enos in a keerful way.

"He died at Bunker Hill," says Abner. "Yes, sir, he poured out his blood right then and thar, that America might be what she is."

"YOU'VE GOT TO HELP ME OUT."

There was a good deal of enthusiasm, and it looks as if the case was settled when Enos motions for silence.

"We've got to hear from Lish Billings yet. He's bin chawin' dried apples and sayin' nuthin.' Will he tell this assemblage whar he stands?"

"I'm also standin' pat," says Lish.

"Standin' pat on what?"

"On my great-grandfather."

"And what did he do?"

"Fit and poured out his blood same as Abner's."

"Was it at Bunker Hill?"

"Noap; at Lexington, and as Lexington was fit on the 8th of April and Bunker Hill on the 17th of June I am just two months ahead of Abner Jones."

I feel sorry for Abner—I know he lays it up agin me—but how could I tell that Lish Billings would also stand pat and beat him by two months?

PRACTICAL HEALTH HINT.

Varicose Veins.

Dr. Joly of Bagnoles de l'Orne, France, advises persons afflicted with varicose veins to perform the following gymnastic exercises: Lie flat on the back and raise the legs as high as possible, lifting them to a right angle with the body. Begin by raising one leg. If you find it difficult at first press your foot against the wall and work the leg upward. Hold the legs elevated for a few seconds. Gradually extend the time till you are keeping them up for about a minute. Now bend the ankles, moving the feet backward and forward and rotating them from right to left. Bend the knees, extending and retracting the lower part of the legs. At first do these exercises with one leg at a time. After a little practice you will be able to do them with both legs simultaneously. Perform them two or three times a day, but do not prolong them to more than five or ten minutes, according to how quickly they tire you. When the exercises are over rest on your back. An alcohol rubdown will finish the exercise. These exercises should be supplemented with deep breathing, the breath being drawn in while the muscles are being contracted and exhaled while they are slackened. Dr. Joly says that, while these motions will not cure varicose veins, they will reduce the swelling and relieve the pain.

WHAT CAUSES CRYSTALS?

An Obscure Process That Plays a Large Part in Nature.

In answer to the question, "Will a sudden jar ever cause crystals to appear in a supersaturated solution, or can this be produced only by the introduction of one of the crystals?" Edgar Lucien Larkin in the New York American says:

"Supersaturation and crystal formation are obscure phenomena. Let water dissolve salts until it is supersaturated when perfectly still; then let the containing vessel be suddenly moved, tapped or disturbed; then crystals of the dissolved substances will instantly form. Pure water, distilled, may be put into a closed container and a thermometer placed below the surface.

"Keep the whole steadfast and the water may be cooled a number of degrees below the freezing—that is, crystallising—point without crystallising. Suddenly strike the vessel and the liquid will crystallize. Many solutions of superdensity will thus behave.

"This little understood process underlying the fascinating mathematical science of crystal forming plays a highly important part in nature in the building of solids, of crystalline rocks and general structure of our house—the earth."

Glacier National Park.

Glacier National park is in northern Montana and is bounded on the north by the Canadian line, on the east by the Blackfoot Indian reservation and on the south and west by Flathead river. It has an area of about 915,000 acres and derives its name from many glaciers, which are scattered throughout its area. There are about eighty glaciers, between five square miles and a few acres in area. The park is a rugged mountainous region and contains over 250 lakes, which are surrounded by steep and beautifully wooded mountains or precipitous rock walls. The methods of transportation in the park are by automobile, horse stage, launches on the lakes and saddle and pack horses.

HUNDRED MILLION NEEDED.

Canadian Parliament Will Have a War Session.

OTTAWA, Dec. 21. — It is stated definitely that the coming session of Parliament will be essentially a war session. Only matters relating to the war will be introduced by the Government.

The chief legislation will be of course the authorization of a second loan. That authorized at the emergency session of Parliament last August was for $50,000,000. The second, it is expected, will be for $100,000,000, although this might be increased largely if there is any expectation that a great length of time will eclipse before the summoning of Parliament again.

The war is costing the country at the present time about $250,000 per day, or about $100,000,000 per annum. The cost will increase considerably as more troops are recruited and sent to Europe. Ammunition alone will be a tremendous item.

SUNK BY A MINE.

British Steamer Tritonia Believed to Have Foundered.

LONDON, Dec. 21. — The British steamer Tritonia, of the Donaldson Line, struck a mine off the north coast of Ireland Saturday morning, and is believed to have foundered, according to an announcement made yesterday by the Admiralty. The crew of the steamer was saved.

The Tritonia, which was of 2,720 tons, was bound from Partington for St. John, N.B.

Owing to the fear of striking mines sown by the German squadron engaged in the recent raid on English east coast towns, the sailings of steamers between Hull and Copenhagen have been suspended. That the British Admiralty is making progress in coping with the danger from mines is indicated by its announcement Saturday that the route between Newcastle and Flamborough Head had been re-opened during daylight, but that vessels were required to keep within two miles of the coast.

It Was Lincoln's Knife.

Lincoln was always ready to join in a laugh at his own expense and used to tell the following story with intense enjoyment: "In the days when I used to be on the circuit I was accosted in the cars by a stranger, who said, 'Excuse me, sir, but I have an article in my possession which belongs to you.' 'How is that?' I asked, considerably astonished. The stranger took a jack knife from his pocket. 'This knife, said he, 'was placed in my hands some years ago with the injunction that I was to keep it until I found a man uglier than myself. I have carried it from that time to this. Allow me to say, sir, that I think you are fairly entitled to the property.'"—"Everyday Life of Abraham Lincoln."

The Master Tire fills the bill by reducing the bill. You see "Tractions" on every style and make of car—on rear wheels, front wheels.

The Best Thing.

"James got dizzy in the water, and it frightened him."

"It was the best thing which could have happened."

"How do you make that out?"

"If he wasn't dizzy wasn't his head swimming?"—Oswego Palladium.

One Good Point.

"I'll say this for the prune," remarked the grouchy boarder.

We all listened attentively.

"You can eat it or leave it, and that ends it. You don't find it continually bobbing up as a made over."—Seattle Post Intelligencer.

Standstill

The Relief committee of the newly-formed local branch of the Canadian Patriotic Fund will be held this afternoon at four o'clock. Until some provision is made for the disbursement of the funds, the work of dispensing relief will be at a standstill. A number called on Mr. Miller to-day, but he was unable to do anything due to lack of authorization, since the new organization came into being last evening. It is expected that the much talked of question of appointing a paid disbursing officer will materialise this afternoon.

GEORGE MAY IS RESIGNING

An advertisement in another column notes the passing of Mr. George May as caretaker of the North Monaghan School, which unofficially bears his name. For twenty-two years he has been caretaker and secretary. The new building has increased the janitorial duties, and besides Mr. May is getting close to those years in which the average man lays aside his cares and completes the journey in ease and without toil. He remained with the School Board until all the details of the new building had been completed, and now he feels that some of the younger men should assume the work. Hence he resigns from his dual position after a quarter-century's service.

MUST SHUN MUNICIPAL OFFICERS

OTTAWA, Dec. 29. — The Government has decided that civil servants drawing over $500 a year shall not be allowed after nex year to take municipal offices as school trustees, aldermen, etc. Experience has shown that many civil servants in cities like Ottawa neglect their office duties in order to dabble in municipal politics. Heads of departments have made repeated protests against the practice, and it has been finally decided to pass an order in Council prohibiting Government employees to run for municipal office, the prohibition to take effect after the coming municipal elections are over. Owing to the fact that a number of civil servants in Ottawa and elsewhere have already announced their candidacy this month and the campaign is already well started it was felt that the order should not be enforced at once. It will, however, be passed now with a view to giving fair warning for next year.

EXAMINER PATTERN SERVICE

Among the latter is the apron pictured, made of striped percale. The front is princesse, running up into shoulder straps which continue to the belt in back. The back of the apron is cut circular and dart fitted at the top. Particularly popular is the princesse fitting, for many women object to aprons that sweep out in the front and get in the way. Gingham is a serviceable apron material, but calico is perhaps a little stronger. The pattern for this apron, which is No. 6,977, can be obtained in sizes 36, 40 and 44 inches bust measure.

Aprons are among the easiest garments to make and are splendid things for the amateur dressmaker to begin on. The material is never expensive, the design is seldom intricate, and the amount of sewing necessary could hardly tire any one. With a machine the apron illustrated could be run up in no time; even hemings might be omitted with such straight sewing. The seams and darts should be made first and then the hems all around, and finally the belt pinned in place and stitched to position. The trimming at neck and pocket could very well be omitted and the edge merely hemmed. Having made a successful apron the amateur could then proceed to a simple shirt waist.

Price, 10 cents.

When ordering remember to give your name and address as well as the number and size of pattern required and age of a child.

Germans In Brussels Feast And Revel While Women Beg For Food

Theodore Waters, of the Christian Herald, Back from Trip Through Belgium, Says Country Is One Huge Buying Ground—Tells of Pathetic Flight of Children Without Sufficent Clothing or Shelter.

Theodore Waters, secretary of the Christian Herald, who went to Belgium last month to attend to the distribution of the cargo of the steamship Jan Block among the Belgians, returned yesterday on board the Transylvania. At the headquarters of the Commission for Relief in Belgium, No. 71 Broaway, he gave out a statement describing the actual conditions in Belgium. He said that Belgium was in reality one long broad line of starving men, women and children clamouring for a daily ration of soup and bread.

During the time he was in Belgium, Mr. Waters said, he was unable to find any proof of German atrocity. On the other hand, he said, the pathos were beyond the power of man to describe. He painted a contrast of brilrations. They came in droves, these overflowing with gorgeously uniformed German soldier revellers, while outside of these hotels hundreds of women waited in the cold and snow for the food that would keep themselves and their children alive another day. He mentioned in particular the Weber Hotel, at Brussels, patronized by these Germans, while around the corner a theatre was besieged by starving freezing women.

"In Antwerp," said Mr. Waters, "I saw more than a thousand poorly clad women, some in bedroom slippers, standing shivering in the snow and slush, waiting for food to be doled out to them, and this under the shadow of a big hotel where well fed, well clad soldiers drank and made merry. In Mechlin, under the shadow of the Cathedral, its walls caved in, its old stained glass windows now are ragged remnants of a beauty that will never be replaced, I saw men, women and children gazing disconsolately at the ruins of the houses that once were theirs, nor people who begged something to eat of us as we passed. On the road to Brussels we overtook thousands of refugees tramping dejectly along, weary and forlorn, returning to villages and towns where there is not now food enough to sustain those who are already there.

Women Beg in Brussels.

In Brussels we saw women holding babies snuggled to their necks, standing on the cold street corners, begging a centime for food. We visited the distributing stations and saw the food sent over by kind hearted Americans being handed out in all too meagre rations. They came in roves, these people, from all directions and the clatter of their sabots on the pavement was a sad accompaniment to their saddened thoughts, for none spoke, except to murmur a thankful 'Merci, Monsieur;' as each portion was handed out.

"In Holland I found thousands of men, women and children refugees from Belgium huddled in retaining camps and on barges, some refined, some coarse and brutalized, all sleeping together without partitions to insure the least privacy. The following sentences are from a report of these conditions by Commander Gherardi, of the United States Navy, who personally investigated them.

"A barge near Rotterdam contained about 400 men, women and children. At Dordrecht a long, low built house contained 700 men, women and children. At Roosendaal a large factory building held more than 700. At Bergen on Zoom a camp of tents held more than 3,000. These was no heat in some of these. The barges are long iron lighters. The people are placed in the holds. There is no heat, the barges leak and the place is constantly damp from this leakage and from the sweating of the iron hull. There are neither windows or skylights and one kerosene lamp lights each hold. Wooden bunks in two tiers are in each hold and tables are roughly constructed. There was not sufficient straw to cover the boards of the bunks. The place was therefore in a state highly dangerous to health and the people suffered intense misery with the thermometer, as it was, standing several degrees below the freezing point. Little children were constantly damp and their feet wet. There was no fire to dry them."

Entire Country a Burying Ground.

'I drove all the way through ruined villages from Antwerp to Brussels and I could liken it to nothing else than going to a funeral with the cemetery a long way out. Indeed the country is one huge burying ground. Always between the ruined houses we could see graves. In some would be stuck a bayonet with a Belgian soldier's cap hanging on it. Above others were rough white crosses rudely inscribed, "To the memory of a Belgian soldier.' On one grave was a child's shoe, poor little mark of its parents' grief. Graves, graves! Orphans, orphans! A country desolated; its trees felled in rows to make way for the bullets; its crops, long gone to seed, sticking leanly out through the snow, dead things in rows like markers in a miniature cemetery. Houses in ruins, or party in ruins with the word "Bewoond' (occupied) nailed upon the door to warn the homeless wayfarer that no more could be taken in.

"In some of the ruins women could be seen grubbing in the debris on the chance of finding some lost possession. We passed a woman trundling a heavy barrow on which were part of a stove and some small kitchen utensils. She did not even look as we passed her by. In one village we saw a house with a hole made by a shell in the second storey big enough to drive a waggon through. Two little girls looked out of this hole at us curiously. They were the only sign of life about the place.

At a door of another house, the stucco front of which was spotted all over with bullet marks, stood a girl probably fourteen years old. Her peasant face was heavy and dull; her dress was ragged. She wore sabots, but no stockings. And it was very cold.

Hungry Fight For Coins.

"Another house had evidently been struck by a descending shell. Its whole front was gone and all of the floors except the third floor at the back, and there hanging, as it were on the edge of a precipice, was an old white enamel bed, a red coverlet still clinging to it. We saw innumerable who were nearest tore at his hands to of doors gone and the places where they had been broken out apparently with pickaxes. Evidently the soldiers had been there.

"At Mechlin my travelling companion, a man from Pittsburg, looked at some disconsolate peasants standing mutely by and, seized with a generous impulse, pulled out a handful of small coins and began handing them out. Instantly the place was a turmoil. As though by magic, men, women and children came running from every direction. A man with money! They crowded around him, fought with one another to get at him, and those who were nearest tore at his hands to obtain even the smallest coin. They were frantic, mad, and finaly to protect himself he flung all the coins he had left far from him.

"The crowd pursued the centimes and he escaped to the carriage. We drove away and left them fighting among themselves. His hands were badly scratched and torn from the nails of the mob."

A LUMBERMAN'S OPINION.

"I was troubled with palpitation of the heart and sleeplessness," writes Mr. Wm. Pritchard, Lumber Inspector, Lumsden Mills, Ont., "and used Dr. Chase's Nerve Food with very great benefit, as my whole system was strengthened and built up." Dr. Chase's Nerve Food forms new, rich blood and restores the feeble, wasted nerve cells.

A POULTRY FANCIER

A minister of the gospel and a poultry fancier! Why not? One of the most enthusiastic poultry fanciers I have ever met is the Rev. S. F. Sharp, Presbyterian minister at Exeter, Ont. Mr. Sharp's favorites are White Wyandottes, and he has been breeding them for strictly utility purposes for years.

"My chickens give me a point of contact with lots of my parishioners," said Mr. Sharp to me. "For instance, I can talk chickens to the boys and they soon see that I know what I am talking about; in fact, can give some of them pointers. Along with chicken talk I can talk more serious subjects to them, which would otherwise be hard to approach."

Mr. Sharp could make his chickens a splendidly paying commercial proposition. He does not, however, push that end of his poultry department. He prefers to encourage his parishioners to keep more and better poultry, and so long as the supply holds out he exchanges settings of pure bred eggs for the eggs that his people bring him from their ordinary flocks.

Mr. Sharp is not alone in his district as a ministerial poultry enthusiast. A neighboring minister, Dr. Fletcher, also has good pure bred poultry of the White Wyandotte breed. Recently the farmers of his congregation, with whom he has lived for nigh on to a generation, showed their appreciation of Dr. Fletcher by building him a henhouse on the model of the fresh-air house designed by Prof. Graham of Guelph. Dr. Fletcher anticipates that his hen house will be a model to all the farmers round.

Why should not ministers be poultry fanciers? It gives them a point of contact with their congregation. It enables them to do better work spiritually than would otherwise be the case. And what more desirable hobby can any man have than chickens

"A WHITE FEATHER."

(London Times.)

A fortnight ago a white feather was pushed through the letter-box at the lodgings at Harrogate of Robert Greaves, whose death was on Monday the subject of an inquest.

His landlady said that he had taken this action very much to heart. He had talked of nothing but the war lately, and could not eat or sleep.

A doctor said the man was not fit for the army, and would never have been passed.

The coroner (Mr. J. R. Wood) said Greaves had a nervous, sensitive disposition. The white feather action was a cruel, wicked thing to do and should cause life-long regret to the stupid person responsible. He hoped it was done by a child knowing no better; if by a man, he had better join the army at the best opportunity.

Ostend Dismal

OSTEND, Belgium, Dec. 7.—The normal life of this usually lively city has been radically changed by the German military occupation.

Inhabitants are forbidden to leave their houses between 7 in the evening and 7 in the morning, and no lights may be shown during that time. No one can leave town without passports from the German authorities.

The usual market gatherings are almost suspended. Villagers from outside Ostend can come in only when attended by their burgomasters, and the market hours are limited to Monday and Thursday mornings.

All Fishermen Have Fled.

All horses have been taken by the military authorities, so only dog carts can be used to bring food into the town. Butter, eggs, meat and vegetables are cheap, but Ostend is without fish, because all the fishermen have fled to Britain.

Fishing would be impossible, because civilians are forbidden to approach the coast, and the inhabitants of houses along the seashore have been expelled.

The railways and electric trams have been stopped for everything except military purposes, and are being used night and day for sending provisions to the front and bringing back wounded.

Little is left of what formerly was Westende, Dixmude, Schoore, Ramscapelles, St. Picters, Capelle, and Meuaskensvere, and more than 150 farms in the neighbourhood have been destroyed.

Hundreds of wounded Belgians and French are brought to Ostend, and those who can stand the journey are sent along to Germany. A dozen or more Germans, dead from their wounds, are buried here every day. The wounded Allies are well cared for by the Germans.

Have No Soap or Coffee.

Ostend is without newspapers, soap, oil, candles, and coffee. The Germans have made heavy requisitions, not only of foodstuffs in large quantities, but of cigars and wine, and all available mattresses and covers, as well as clothing, linen, wire, and bicycles.

For the property taken the Germans have given requisition notes amounting to $1,000,000. The hotels are occupied by German officers, who live on the best.

Kingston Man Picked Up Dead

KINGSTON, Dec. 22. — William Doyle, aged 88 years, was found dead beside his bed at his residence at the corner of Princess and Macdonnell streets, yesterday morning, by his two nephews, who went to pay their weekly visit. The finding of Coroner Mundell was that the deceased came to his death through heart failure.

The deceased's two nephews, Mr. F. Milo and Mr. A. MacDonald, went to the residence of their uncle on Sunday morning about 11 o'clock and were surprised to find the place apparently deserted as the doors were locked. Thinking that he had become ill, they telephoned to the local hospitals to find if he had been removed to one of them. Finding that he was not in either one they returned to the house and gained entrance through a window.

ENTERPRISE

For a new and young firm the Morgan Hardware Co., 337 George Street, are showing great enterprise in their method in going after Christmas business. This firm recognizes the selling value of their windows and anyone who has inspected them will agree that they have two of the most attractive displays in the city.

This firm, being very much alive to the fact that in some quarters there is a money stringency, have shown remarkable Christmas spirit in offering to all their patrons a gift of 10 p.c. off the regular selling price of all lines of Christmas goods, such as pocket and table cutlery, scissors, carving sets, razors, silverware, skates, electric goods, etc.

They guarantee that their regular price on all these lines are as low as anywhere in the city, and with their discount present bargains which should be quickly picked up.

PROGRESS ALONG THE ENTIRE FRONT

PLAN TO BLOCKADE ENGLAND BY SUBMARINES

Allies Are Advancing Along The 200 Mile Battle Front

Germans Driven From Their Trenches at the Point of the Bayonet---Market Progress Between the Argonne and the Meuse in Spite of the Wire Entanglements by Which German Positions Are Protected.

HEAVY CANNONADING IN BELGIUM

Special Cable:

PARIS, December 22.—Driving the Germans from their trenches in the Argonnes at the point of the bayonet and taking up new positions in Northern France and Belgium on the western end of the battle line, the official communique issued from the war office to-day reports new progress along practically the entire 200 mile line upon which the allied offensive is being continued. In Belgium the action yesterday was marked by heavy cannonading. The Germans attempted an offensive movement between the Lys and the Aisne, but were repulsed. 'About Carency, Mametge and Lihons, where violent fighting has been in progress for some days, gains were made by the French at several points. "Between the sea and the Lys action during the 21st was largely confined to cannonading," the communique stated. "Between the Lys and the Aisne repeated attacks of the enemy were repulsed. We made gains at several points in the regions of Carency, Mametge, and Lihons.

"In the region of the Aisne and at Rheims, cannonading continues. In the Champagne district and in the Argonne we advanced by bayonet charges, while between the Argonne and the Meuse the French made marked progress. Trenches were taken despite the wire entanglements by which they were protected."

BERLIN, via wireless to London, December 22.---Admission that the French were successful in attacks about Richebourg, is made in an official statment issued here to-day. Assults upon all other points were repulsed, it is declared.

Was Placed on Saturday by F. Stobart—Big Contract for Buttons Placed

Montreal, Dec. 22.—An order for 120,000 shovels was placed on Saturday by Frederick Stobart, purchasing representative of the British War Office. Mr. Stobart stated that shovels are not made in any great quantity in Canada, except by two firms, the Jones Shovel Company of Gananoque, and the Hamilton Shovel Company, at Hamilton. Consequently these two firms divided the order, which was estimated to be worth over $80,000. The shovels are to be delivered in weekly shipments and two orders will be completed within two months.

A cable on Saturday requested that Mr. Stobart made arrangements to purchase no less than 28,000,000 trouser buttons.

Suggestions For The Man

The most satisfactory answers to the Christmas question of what to give her are found in this store. Please her with a gift of "something to wear." Every woman likes nice clothes, and you are certain of her hearty appreciation of your gift, if you give her "something to wear." Whether it be mother, sister, wife, sweetheart or friend you can depend upon it that you will get the most appropriate here, as she always comes here herself when in search of "something correct in wearing apparel." You need not feel embarassed at coming into a ladies' store, as there are two men clerks to "suggest and serve you." Look for our advt. in this issue. The Reid Co.

THE CHILDREN'S SHELTER XMAS AS USUAL

The Examiner Will Receive Gifts For the Little Ones Under Mr. Henry's Charge

The Children's Aid Society has its hands full in taking care of, and making provision for, the children in the Shelter, and there is every appearance of there being a larger number than heretofore to look after. Any one who wishes to help out during Christmas may be sure of their gifts being appreciated and needed, no matter what they may be, if handed over to the Shelter.

The Examiner will take charge of contributions of clothing or eatables, if left at this office. The first of these to arrive is a nice-sized parcel from the Marathon Candy Kitchen.

COMMITTEE WILL MEET

This Afternoon---Work is at a Standstill

The Relief committee of the newly-formed local branch of the Canadian Patriotic Fund will be held this afternoon at four o'clock. Until some provision is made for the disbursement of the funds, the work of dispensing relief will be at a standstill. A number called on Mr. Miller to-day, but he was unable to do anything due to lack of authorization, since the new organization came into being last evening. It is expected that the much talked of question of appointing a paid disbursing officer will materialise this afternoon.

GEORGE MAY IS RESIGNING

An advertisement in another column notes the passing of Mr. George May as caretaker of the North Monaghan School, which unofficially bears his name. For twenty-two years he has been caretaker and secretary. The new building has increased the janitorial duties, and besides Mr. May is getting close to those years in which the average man lays aside his cars and completes the journey in ease and without toil. He remained with the School Board until all the details of the new building had been completed, and now he feels that some of the younger men should assume the work. Hence he resigns from his dual position after a quarter-century's service.

AERODROME WAS ATTACKED BY ALLIES' AVIATOR

Attempt to Drop Bombs on the German Aviation Station at Etterbeck Was a Failure

DRIVEN OFF BY GUNS

Special to The Examiner:

AMSTERDAM, via London, Dec. 22.—A French or British aviator unsuccessfully attempted to drop aerial bombs over the German aerodrome, in the suburb of Etterbeck, Brussels, on Sunday, according to mail advices received to-day. A concentrated fire from the German aerial guns compelled the aviator's retreat.

Etterbeck has been occupied as a military barracks drill ground and Aviation Station by the Germans.

No Bail For Hold-up Men

Assailants of Nicholas Minicola will Remain in Custody

In yesterday's Police Court the two Italians, Frank Carnival and Nicholas Latanzo, were promised their freedom for $1,000 bail each. Two sureties of $500 were asked for by the authorities for each of the prisoners, but so far no one has come forward with the required amount. As a result the two alleged malefactors will remain in custody until their trial to-morrow.

Family of Seven Children Suffer

A woman with seven children residing in the township of North Monaghan has been seeking assistance from the municipal authorities of the township in which she resides. The husband is out of work and the family is in destitute circumstances. A report reached the ears of the authorities to the effect that a beer waggon stopped at the house occasionally, with the result that the relief was refused. Investigation revealed the fact that the mother prior to the birth of the latest acquisition to the family, decided that she was in need of some form of nourishment. With this object in view a half dozen bottles of invalid stout was ordered. The family resources were at a low ebb so it was necessary for the driver of the beer waggon to make several calls before the goods were paid for. This came to the notice of the neighbours, who lost no time in chronicling the visitations of the beer waggon. It is this story that has so far prevented the family from receiving any assistance. The matter is entirely out of the hands of City Relief Officer Miller, owing to the fact that the family resides in the township of North Monaghan. Mr. G. A. Gillespie, M.P.P., has interested himself in the matter and steps are being taken to provide some relief.

GLASGOW WAS DAMAGED IN NAVAL BATTLE

British Cruiser is Not However Disabled and With the Bristol is Searching for the Dresden

ARE IN THE PACIFIC

Special to The Examiner:

SANTIAGO, Dec. 22. —The British cruiser Glasgow was damaged in the bow and stern during the battle off Falkland Islands, during which the German fleet of Admiral Von Spee was sunk. This was reported from Puerta Monte today, where the Glasgow and Bristol arrived in their search for the German cruiser Dresden which is reported steaming in a northerly direction. The Glasow appeared to have been hit several times, but the damage suffered was not so serious as to force her to remain in port for repairs. Both the Bristol and Glasgow proceeded north after spending a few hours at Puerta Monte.

Some Things And Others

Interviews With The Great And The Near Great—What The People Are Saying

The story is told of a local Collegiate teacher, who was informed of the death of the late Dr. Vowell. "What!" exclaimed the teacher. "Vowell dead. Well, thank heaven it is neither U nor I."

The American Government has prohibited Chas. Schwab from supplying materials of war to Great Britain, has forbidden the export of contraband goods in any form and stopped the singing of "Tipperary" in the U. S. Navy. We may expect next an order-in-council against the use of the English language throughout the schools and public institutions of the States.

Scene—Last night's meeting of the Peterborough Patriotic Association. Mr. J. H. Burnham, M.P.—"If they start any of that kind of hum-buging I will leave the City." Voice in the gallery — "I wish they would start right away."

It is not likely that Mr. A. A. McIntyre will enter the municipal field. The family is already represented in the Council by Ald. M. McIntyre and Ald. A. Weir, brother and brother-in-law respectively of Mr. A. A. McIntyre.

Sunlight will kill the ordinary germ in six hours, so science tells us; but, as one of our correspondents pointed out, "The little cusses won't stay in the sun that long."

An evening contemporary says that the two Italians who assaulted Nicholas Minicola were charged with "carrying a hammer and assaulting with intent to steal." If that law against carrying a hammer is enforced the local carpenters will henceforth have to ply their trade safe from the eyes of the police.

No Peterborough boys have been returned from Salisbury Plain or Kingston for misconduct. This is a splendid record.

Christmas as usual seems to be the slogan of visitors this year. The G. T. R. have found it necessary to put double-headers on the trains to and from this City to expedite the heavy Christmas passenger traffic.

There was no Police Court this morning, but next Monday morning, when the hold-up men come up for trial, the crowd which was turned disappointed, away to-day should be satisfied.

In spite of all rumours to the contrary, the outlook now indicates a municipal election in January. Should an election materialize it is likely there will be a contest in every ward.

Superintendent Cayley, of Belleville, and Tresbarrister Middleton, of Lindsay, both officials of the Grand Trunk Railway, were in the City yesterday for a short time.

WAR SESSION OF THE FRENCH GOVERNMENT

Will Fight Without Mercy Until Europe is Definitely Liberated, Announces President

A WAR TO THE END

Examiner Special:

LONDON, Dec. 22.—To fight without mercy until Europe is definitely liberated by a fully victorious peace.' This is the only policy considered by the French Government. France's declaration for a war to a finish was made to-day by Premier Viviani, in a statement before the Chamber of Deputies, convening the new session of Parliament. The Government's statement was brief. Responsibility for the war was placed with Germany, but the very opening paragraph of the Government's pronouncement left no doubt that France was prepared and considered no other policy than a war to the bitter end.

The opening of this session of parliament was under exceedingly dramatic conditions. Many members of the Chamber of Deputies, as well as Senators, returned from the front, where they are serving with the Army. Three Deputies and one member of the Senate have been killed in action. The session is expected to be short.

MAYORALTY CONTEST STIRS UP INTEREST

One Citizen's Attention Aroused by Reported Promise of Mayor Buller to Ald. Duncan

The interest in the Mayoralty contest is beginning to attract attention from the talk which the ward developments have monopolized up to the past few days. One prominent citizen, while talking over the two candidates with an Examiner reporter, remarked that Mayor Buller had evidently promised to leave the field to Ald. Duncan this year and to any others who would be requested to stand. It seemed strange, he said, that the Mayor waited until the last minute to change his mind and run again, even though a new law practically discountenances this practice on the part of civil servants. He pointed out that the new Act does not take effect until next year, but its spirit was contrary to the practice of which the Mayor proposed to take advantage in spite of a promise to a colleague some time previous to the last election.

SMALLPOX IN MADOC VILLAGE

MADOC, Dec. 22.—This village has been suffering for the past several weeks from a fast-spreading epidemic of small-pox. There are over thirty cases in the village now, but fortunately the disease is not of the serious nature usually associated with the name small-pox. As yet no deaths have resulted from the epidemic, and few residents have been seriously ill. Farmers of the neighbourhood are going to Stirling and other places with their produce owing to the prevalence of the disease.

League Heard Fine Address

An address on "Sweden," by Mr. Worth of the BonnerWorth Co., was the feature of the meeting of the George Street Epworth League, last night. The talk was instructive and interesting, especially when it was known that Mr. Worth has spent fifteen years of his life in Sweden. The speaker dealt with the different phases of the subject, including a reference to some of Sweden's most noted rulers, geographical conditions, and some of the quaint habits and customs of the people.

A vocal solo by Miss Bentley was appreciated by all. Birthdays, relating to the time Christmas spirit were given by Miss Bedford and Miss Pentland. Mr. Moule capably occupied the chair.

GERMAN FLEET WILL NOT OFFER BATTLE

Grand Admiral Von Tirpitz is Credited With That Statement in an Interview With a Representative of the United Press--Will Fight if British Give Them the Opportunity.

Special to the Examiner.

LONDON, December 22.---(Special Cable.)---The big London and New York papers are to-day publishing a remarkable interview by Karl Von Wiegand, of the United Press, with Grand Admiral Von Tirpitz, the German Minister of Marine, which Von Wiegand secured at the German headquarters in France some days ago.

Von Wiegand takes the characteristic German attitude that the British ambitions to crush Germany are responsible for the present war. The interesting portion of the interview however follows, as related by Von Wiegand:

"Discussing the work of the submarines, I asked if one of the lessons of the war is that Dreadnoughts have been rendered obsolete. 'It would be difficult at this stage to draw conclusions,' replied the Admiral; 'that submarines are a new and potent factor in naval warfare is unquestionable. Our successes so far however hardly justify the conclusion that the big ships have become obsolete. We have always figured that submarines could not stay out more than three days on account of the men becoming exhausted. We now learn that larger types have cruised clear around England, and have often remained out for fourteen days. This is accomplished by going down in shallow and quiet water, settling on the bottom, and staying there while the men get their required sleep.'

"'Will your fleet give the English fleet battle?' I inquired.

"'If the English give us the opportunity, certainly,' said the Admiral, 'but it cannot be expected that our fleet, numerically one-third that of England, will itself offer battle.

"Von Tirpitz gave the impression that he did not think much of Zeppelin invasions of England. Admiral Von Tirpitz had talked with an openness and frankness which astonished me. Among the impressions I carried away was that Von Tirpitz advocates what would virtually be a submarine blockade of England, and that he contemplates torpedoing several merchant ships with the result that others would not venture to approach that country, which would thus be bottled up and starved."

BORN OF DESPERATION

NEW YORK CITY, December 22.—The interview given out by Von Tirpitz, the German Minister of Marine, to-day, is regarded here as most significant. The war expert of the United Press commenting says it is a warning, born at the most of desperation, to Britain. Von Tirpitz voices the fear that Britain may insist that the war be fought to a finish, and such an outcome would be more beneficial to the British than to any other warring nation. Von Tirpitz suggests, says the United Press, that Germany must protect herself in accordance with the first laws of nature, even to the abandonment of that principle of civilized warfare which recognizes that unarmed ships of the enemy cannot be sunk unless all souls aboard are rescued. Von Tirpitz's proposition is to make submarine raids against these trading passenger vessels and send all souls to the bottom, even as warships are torpedoed.

Kingston Man Picked Up Dead

KINGSTON, Dec. 22. — William Doyle, aged 82 years, was found dead beside his bed at his residence at the corner of Princess and Macdonnell streets, yesterday morning, by his two nephews, who went to pay their weekly visit. The finding of Coroner Mundell was that the deceased came to his death through heart failure.

The deceased's two nephews, Mr. F. Mills and Mr. A. MacDonald, went to the residence of their uncle on Sunday morning about 11 o'clock and were surprised to find the place apparently deserted as the doors were locked. Thinking that he had become ill, they telephoned to the local hospitals to find if he had been removed to one of them. Finding that he was not in either one they returned to the house and gained entrance through a window.

This firm, being very much alive to the fact that in some quarters there is a money stringency, have shown remarkable Christmas spirit in offering to all their patrons a gift of 10 p.c. off the regular selling price of all lines of Christmas goods, such as pocket and table cutlery, scissors, carving sets, razors, silverware, skates, electric goods, etc.

ANOTHER RED SPOT.

As the Red Sea flowed over the hosts of Pharaoh and covered them so has the red sea of British supremacy flowed over Egypt, and added another red spot to the crimson splashes on the map of the world that indicate where the flag of the Empire, holds sovereign sway and masterdom, the sign and token of human freedom, human right, and of the blessings and benefits that go with the highest civilization, with the highest evolution of human government and settled sovereignty. The British have annexed Egypt, and placed a ruler over it who replaces, with the concurrency of France and other civilised great powers, the Khedive who was a traitor to his trust. Egypt is now altogether British. Turkey, by playing into the hands of Germany, has lost even the nominal sovereignty she held up to a few weeks ago. The Ottoman High Commission has become only a "scrap of paper."

This is only one of the important territorial gains Britain will make at the expense of Germany and German interests. Great Britain did not enter into this strife for territorial aggrandizement. She went into it to protect the weak, to safeguard small nations against the greed and grinding of organized despotism; and parallel with this idea lies the necessity of establishing British influence or rule over the possessions that Germany has occupied, with the application of her settled policy of government by force.

Egypt is an important acquisition. It means virtually the addition to British territory of an area, including the Sudan, of 1,347,706 square miles, nearly seven times greater than the area of the German Empire, and a population of about fourteen and a quarter millions; a fertile country with immense possibilities of production, a country that was the granary of the world in the time of the patriarch Jacob. Under British administration, the condition of the country will be advantaged in all ways; and with the removal of the interfering, and reactionary nominal sovereignty of Turkey, the future spells greatness.

The establishment of an all-British protectorate over the country, the presentation to the Empire of the Egyptian Christmas box, was celebrated by Australia, India, New Zealand, and Tasmanian troops now in training in Egypt, fitting for the fight at the front in France. At this moment among the pyramids of Gizeh is quartered the greatest expeditionary force that that ever sailed the southern seas; and it is historically interesting to note that the soldiers of the overseas contingent are making themselves agree by climbing the 450 feet of the great pyramid. The occasion also recalls the address of Napoleon the Great to his soldiers on his invasion of Egypt—"Soldiers, from yonder pyramids twenty centuries behold your actions!" Now twenty-one centuries behold the soldiers of a great empire encamped at their feet—not concerned in a war of subjugation and conquest, but in the interests of enfranchisement, and a wider freedom.

And Egypt is not the only possession gained to Britain and betterment, and lost to German influence; for other possessions will slip from her grasp in company with those she has already lost, Kamerun, Togoland, etc. German East Africa, of nearly 400,000 square miles, and German Southwest Africa, with an area of 322,000 square miles, will certainly be wrested from Germany's possession, and perhaps permanently—all depending upon the terms the Allied nations will dictate when the final accounting is made.

We are sometimes disturbed by little reverses that come to Britain in this great struggle; but we have no reason to be discouraged—we are not down hearted. All the reverses we meet are as pinpricks compared with the stabs in the vitals Germany is getting. We should have reason to be down-hearted if, like Germany, we had our commerce swept from the seas and starvation facing our people; if our navy were cabined, cribbed, confined in home ports, only able to sally out on piratical quests and barbarous feats of baby-killing, shaming ourselves and our civilization; if we had had, like Germany, our prized territorial possessions wrested from our grasp and our Empire confined to the British Isles; if our armies were losing ground every day; if the circle were closing in from every side, and if the inevitable disastrous end were threateningly imminent, then we should have reason to be down-hearted. Instead of all that we are gaining ground, even if step by step by step, every day; our sea strength is intact, and our armies and our capacity for waging successful war, for achieving ultimate and smashing victory, are growing every day.

IF PULL WON'T WORK, TRY PUSH.

There's a screw loose some where or "something rotten in the state of Denmark," in regard to the distribution of army contracts, at least as far as some Peterborough industries are concerned. The following paragraph appears in the Toronto Star under date of Montreal, Dec. 21:

An order for 120,000 shovels was placed on Saturday by Frederick Stobart, purchasing representative of the British War Office. Mr. Stobart stated that shovels are not made in any great quantity in Canada, except by two firms, the Jones Shovel Company of Gananoque, and the Hamilton Shovel Company, of Hamilton. Consequently these two firms divided the order, which was estimated to be worth over $50,000. The shovels are to be delivered in weekly shipments and the orders will be completed within two months.

Mr. Stobart, must have been imperfectly informed when he states, as is attributed to him, that there are only two firms in Canada that make shovels. He should know or have been informed that we have a thoroughly well equipped factory in Peterborough, devoted exclusively to the making of shovels, and prepared to fill contracts, of reasonable size, promptly. It certainly could have made a third of the order divided between the above two firms. There is no objection to these firms getting the work; but if speed if of the essence of government contracts for war supplies, one would have thought that a Canadian and British concern like the local shovel company, would have got a piece of the contract, in share with, if not in preference to, an United states firm, as is that in Hamilton. In the matter of contracts it is presumable that the purchasing agent is influenced by the information in his possession. It is a matter of local patriotism that special effort should be made to bring the capabilities of our local concerns, to the attention of the British Government's agent. The firms themselves cannot do so as effectively as some influential local individual or body, which would have no self-interest like the firm, would have. One would naturally think that our local man of influence and authority, would take steps to bring things effectively to the attention of those entrusted with giving contracts. The Board of Trade, and the Manufacturers' Committee of the City Council might well take a directer and more enthusiastic interest themselves in promoting things that would give employment and promote circulation of money in the city. We look to these bodies; for vain is the help of our Federal representative. He takes the extraordinary position that it is useless to disturb with appeals or pressure the autocratic power of the government, to get things; write a letter and go to sleep and wait; we must simply open our mouths and shut our eyes, and take what we get, whether kicks or contracts.

In this war we are, or should be, all pulling together, and if we can't exercise pull to get contracts, except through authorised intermediaries or stool pigeons, it is certainly lawful to exercise a little push. We don't seem to have very effective enginery to bring things Peterborough's way, who or what will wake us?

THE ROYAL BANK.

In spite of the financial and business stress of the last third of this year, the Royal Bank has been so wisely managed that it has not only achieved a distinctly strengthened position, but has made satisfactory growth. In preparation for any stress that might come the cash in hand has been brought to the new high level of $27,683,855, 17 per cent. of the liabilities. Including this cash the liquid assets total $71,244,677, nearly 47 per cent. of liabilities to the public. The general business landtade has touched the bank rather lightly, the shrinkage in current loans being only about two millions less than the total of 86 millions the previous year. Deposits not bearing interest showed a slight falling off compared with last year; but interest-bearing deposits advanced from $101,700,790 to $104,827,976. The fact that the total deposits showed a decrease of two millions for the year should be considered in connection the payment of the deposit of the Alberta and Great Waterways Company, amounting to $7,000,000. With this taken into account the total ordinary deposits show an increase of $5,000,00 during the year. The profits of the year, $1,020,142, equivalent to 16 1-3 per cent. on the paid-up capital. This added to the balance of profit and loss brought down, made a total for distribution of $2,901,262. Of this dividends absorbed $1,387,200. A contribution of $50,000 to the patriotic fund; 250,000 millions written off bank premises account, and $500,000 allowed for depreciation in investments, left $614,062 to strengthen profit and loss. Taken as a whole this year's annual statement of the Royal Bank is possibly the strongest ever issued by it—satisfactory to the shareholders and reassuring to the public, and indicating the ability of the bank to bear a prominent part in helping the country through an unprecedented situation. Mr. Vincent Eastwood is manager of the local Branch.

SOME POLICY WANTED TO INCREASE CANADIAN PRODUCTION ALL 'ROUND

The Department of Trade and Commerce and the Conservative Commission could do a very great service to the Canadian people just now by investigating and reporting upon opportunities for Canadian business development presented by the great upheaval in Europe. Along some lines this is already being done. We know in a general way that there are openings for the chemist, and the manufacturer of many textile articles used by women, for the paper-maker, and for the manufacturer of fancy goods and toys formerly secured in Germany. So far as it goes this information is valuable, and the advice given with it to increase Canada's production all along the line is sound and necessary.

But there is need of a wider outlook than Ottawa has yet given evidence of. The development of new industries is a slow process requiring frequently the investment of much capital without immediate return. Many business men sufficiently enterprising to become pioneers of new industries are chilled at the outset by the reception given to their projects by the bankers upon whose co-operation they must depend. We shall not become rich in Canada during the next few years on the profits derived from the making of articles formerly imported from countries whose industries are now disorganized by war. This is apparent from the fact that few applications have been made for licenses to manufacture even patented articles of general use, the importation of which from Germany and Austria has been prohibited.

Canada will need many extra sources of income during the next year or two if she is not to wallow in the slough of business adversity. One of the chief anticipated sources of this revenue is the sale of foodstuffs. If weather conditions are favourable the greatest acreage ever sown in the Dominion will be devoted next season to the growth of spring wheat. In Ontario and Alberta the planting of winter wheat has been far above the average. The advice to grow wheat and lots of it seems to be sound, but an authoritative statement from the Department of Trade and Commerce as to probable market conditions would be of great value to the grain-growers. If half a dozen of the leading experts in the grain trade were to be called into consultation by the department and were, after inquiry, to say that the world will need at good prices all the wheat we can grow public confidence would be greatly strengthened.

Figures from the United States indicating a record planting of winter wheat there are somewhat disquieting. The Department of Agriculture estimates the winter wheat acreage at 41,283,000 acres. That is an increase of 4,155,000 acres over the area sown last fall and on which the record crop of 634,300,000 bushels of winter wheat was harvested this year. The area sown is 5,255,000 acres more than was harvested this year. A feature of the planting of winter wheat is the great increase in acreage in the Southern States, where farmers are decreasing their acreage of cotton. South Carolina's acreage has been increased 200 per cent., compared with the 1913 planting, Alabama 185 per cent., Mississippi 125 per cent., Georgia 118 per cent., North Carolina 75 per cent., Arkansas 44 per cent., Texas, Tennessee and Oklahoma 20 per cent., and Virginia 10 per cent. In the great wheat-growing States the increases in acreage range from 4 to 15 per cent., except in the greatest of winter wheat States, Kansas, where a 2 per cent. decrease in acreage is shown. The increases are: Ohio and Nebraska 5 per cent., Indiana 12 per cent., Illinois 15 per cent., Missouri 10 per cent., and Washington 10 per cent.

Canadian hard wheat is a far more desirable cereal than the soft wheat of the Southern or Midwestern States, but the point of importance is that the southern product will be on the market months before our spring-sown wheat and may bring down prices very seriously. It may be that inquiry would prove it advisable to grow barley and oats upon Canada's extra acreage as well as wheat. The Department of Trade and Commerce could do a national service in providing rock-bed information regarding the kind of production Canada should concentrate her energies upon in the agricultural industry.

Take another possible source of extra revenue during war time—the tourist trade. Europe will be closed next season to three or four hundred thousand globe-trotting Americans who spend money very freely. Why should they not spend a hundred millions seeing Canada? The Great Lakes, old-world Quebec, the pine woods of the North, the grandeur of the Rockies are attractions such as few nations on either side of the Atlantic can offer to the tourist. There is no Niagara in Europe, and the Rhine is insignificant beside the St. Lawrence. Government action, prompt and decisive, in co-ordinating all the existing agencies of the tourist business and in advertising Canada's attractions as a holiday region throughout North and South America would bring to the Dominion next summer an entirely unprecedented number of people with money to spend, and might even create a vogue that would continue long after the close of the war. There are other possibilities of securing a bigger national income which need not be elaborated here that might prove worthy the attention of the Government. Ottawa should regard as scarcely less important than the organiing of contingents for service abroad the organization of industry at home, so that the strain of war will fall as lightly as possible upon the Canadian toiler.—The Globe.

CANADIAN CONTINGENT FINDS GETTING FIT STRENUOUS GAME

Salisbury, England, Dec. 4.—As the days go by great changes come over the scene here, all in the direction of welding the Canadian contingent into a well-disciplined fighting machine. If the men can stand the eternal drizzle, here, the oceans of mud, and the damp, cold nights, they can assuredly stand anything, after Salisbury Plain. Several hundreds of the troops are more or less bothered with colds and sore throats. It would be a miracle if they were not. Yet complaints are few, though the language sometimes used in describing the quagmires that abound is emphatic. But to the most casual observer there are many signs of progress, all in the right direction. For the first month many heads were shaking and many tongues were wagging. Level-headed officers asked themselves and their neighbours whether the Imperial officers, who were greatly liked, were going the right way to work, whether they sufficiently understood Canadian characteristics and Canadian temper to make anything worth while of this free and independent army. Discipline seemed slack, the conduct of many was not too good, and there was an army of absentees of quite formidable dimensions.

Took Many Liberties.

How were these things which everybody saw going to be cured? Unaccustomed as many of the men were to strict military discipline, it seemed to matter little to them whether for a week or two they were in camp or abroad. Others, who found the rigours of the open plain a little fierce, took up their abode in private homes. Strong men in uniform got abroad, as far even as London, whose lures are not less potent than in days gone by. Then the change came. Those who had overstayed their leave, quickly found themselves in the train on the way back to camp, while those who essayed trips without permits found impassable barriers at Salisbury station, with the result that the absentee list was soon cut in half and brought within reasonable dimensions. Day by day there has been a manifest improvement and strict military rule is getting enforced as it has never been enforced before.

Obviously it is impossible to bring 33,000 men from any part of the world at any time without finding many turbulent undisciplined spirits included who make a deal of trouble and noise out of all proportion to their numbers.

Are Many Changes.

Metaphorically speaking, a few heads have been cut off, and a few seats have become vacant. Other and wiser heads have ceased to shake, interrogating tongues have ceased to wag, and discipline has been vindicated. The Canadian army is being brought into line, and purged of its elements of weakness, it will go into action, when the day comes, one of the strongest units in the army. From the all-too-meagre scraps of Canadian news that appear in London newspapers, one gets the view that in the Dominion irritation is felt at the continued stay of the Canadian contingent on Salisbury Plain. Nothing less than six months' training suffices to complete and fit the ordinary soldier for the field, and Lord Kitchener is not the man to be rushed into any premature step to please the impatient at the expense of the whole contingent.

Confidence Everywhere.

There has never been a time within the memory of living man, when the British Government, the War Office, and the Admiralty commanded such universal approval and such complete confidence as at present. Even Lord Curzon has within the past few days gone out of his way to pay a magnificent tribute to those in office, and the way in which they have managed the nation's business. There are one or two carping critics, mostly anonymous, who kick and scream about the necessity of this or that, or the other action, but nobody takes serious notice of them. The British public do not appear to be in the mood to tolerate any interference with the men at the helm. The Canadians here who watch closely the day's events as reflected in the newspapers have but one feeling—intense admiration for the magnificent fight which the Empire's sons are putting up on foreign soil. At a time when Canada, by her splendid gifts of men and material is arousing the admiration of the whole of the English-speaking world, it cannot be too widely made known that those who stand in the forefront to-day leading the nation, are sustaining the high traditions of a great race.

ALLIES FORCE GERMANS FROM STRONG POSITIONS

Belgians Are Merely Holding Their Own at Northern End of Line

LONDON, Dec. 22. — The most startling gains recorded in the French official reports of yesterday were made in the Champagne country and in the region of Varennes. Northeast of Beausejour, in the Champagne region, the French took 1,200 yards of the enemy's trenches and made appreciable gains in the region of Prosnes and Perthes. Four mined saps dug by the Germans were blown up in the forest of La Grurie, and the French advanced and occupied the positions the Germans were forced to quit.

An advance of 500 yards beyond the brook of Cheppes, in the district between Gercourt and Bethincourt, near Varennes, is reported from the right.

On the right bank of the Meuse some ground has been gained by the French at La Croupe, about a mile and a quarter northwest of Brabant.

A Times' despatch from West Flanders says: The fighting around Nieuport has diminished in intensity. At Lombaertzyde, St. Georges and Capelle the Belgians have made no attempt to more than hold their own against the German counter-attacks.

There is no foundation for the rumor that the allies are within a mile of Ostend. The rumor probably arose from statements made by French soldiers who did not know the country, and mistook the houses of Middelkerke for those of Ostend.

The object of last week's movement from Nieuport was doubtless to secure a footing farther from the bank of the Yser river in order to make it easier to take the offensive at that point later on.

The rainy spell of the last fortnight is at an end. The bright weather is welcomed by all the troops, particularly by the air service. The airmen have been carrying out regular reconnaissances in spite of the wind and the wet, but it has been bitter cold work.

The Belgian airmen who flew over Ostend two days ago tell me that Ostend appears to be quite dead. There is not a single vessel at the quays and hardly a sign of life in the streets. At the German [illegible] Zeebrugge, where repeated attacks have been made against the Germans, who have been attempting to make repairs there for the establishment of a naval base.

The following official communication was issued by the War Office last night:—

"The British troops have attacked and yesterday morning regained most of the trenches previously lost. Before Lihons the enemy delivered four successive attacks for the purpose of recapturing the trenches which we had previously won in that region, but all of them were repulsed.

"In an attack to the northwest of Pulsaleane, south of the Noyon, we have gained a foothold in the enemy's trenches of the first line, and have made progress in the wood of Saint Mard.

"There has been no other report of any note on the operations of the day."

The French War Office gave out an official communication yesterday afternoon, which said, in part:—

"The day of Dec. 20 brought nothing of importance in Belgium, if exception is made of some progress in the region of Lombaertzyde and St. Georges, and at a point to the southeast of the inn of Kortaker, which is southeast of Bixschoote, the occupation of some houses in Wartelem, south of Zillebeke, and the bombardment by the enemy of the Ypres hospital.

"Between the Lys and the Aisne we have occupied a forest near the route between Nouiettes and Souches, and we also took possession of all the first line of German trenches between this highway and the first houses of Notre Dame de Lorette, southwest of Loos.

"Our heavy artillery silenced on repeated occasions the artillery of the enemy to the north of Carnoy, which is to the east of Albert. The artillery also demolished the German trenches, and sent head over heels two cannon of a battery established near Hom, which is to the southeast of Carnoy. The heavy artillery also secured distinct advantages on the Aisne and in the sector of Rheims.

"Between the Argonne and the Meuse there has been progress along all the front, particularly in the region of Varennes, where the brook of Cheppes has been left 500 yards in our rear, and in the region of Gercourt-Bethincourt.

"On the right bank of the Meuse we have gained ground at La Croupe, at a point two kilometers northwest of Brabant, and in the forest of Consenvoye."

New Home Mark[et] at Canadia[n] Gow[ns]

The great financial loss to th[e] growers of Canada that seeme[d] inevitable three months ago o[n] the failure of the foreign mar[ket] a result of the war has been completely averted by the in[crease] domestic demand for apples o[f] by the Apple Advertising Co[m]m of the Department of Trade an[d] merce.

Three months ago apples [were a] drug on the Canadian market [the] war had suddenly cut off a lar[ge] tion of the demand from the U[nited] Kingdom and Continental E[urope] which in previous years had ta[ken] much as 1,064,165 barrels of th[e] fruit and 75 per cent. of the to[tal] duction of dried apples [which] is claimed from Berlin. The Russian armies in northern Poland and in the Mazurian Lakes region of East Prussia continue their operations with indomitable energy. A demonstration in the Mazurian Lakes region is expected as the logical move by Hindenburg to free his army in Poland from the peril which threatens its left.

The official communication issued by the Russian General Headquarters says:—

"In the region of Mlawa (northern Poland), the Germans have fallen back towards the line of Lautenburg-Neilenburg (across the frontier into East Prussia).

"On the left bank of the Vistula there is no incident of importance to report.

"In Galicia, the Austrian offensive is being greatly hindered by our

RASSED RUSSIAN SUCCESSES

Flank'at Mlawa German Field Marsha[l] Is Weight Into That District

[illegible] regions have taken on appearances more favorable to us. One of the Austrian divisions which was operating in the vicinity of Dukla Pass was easily defeated by a bayonet charge made by our troops.

"The enemy left on the battlefield 500 killed and we captured 10 officers and more than 1,000 soldiers.

"The attempts of the Przemysl garrison to break through the Bloous line have been definitely repulsed. The garrison was forced back into the line of fortifications with heavy losses."

"The head of the General Staff says that owing to the malevolent reports widely printed in the newspapers during the past few days concerning the condition and strategic positions of our army he thinks it fit to warn the Russian public against the partiality and inaccuracy of these reports.

"The fact that our armies adopted a narrower front was the outcome of a decision arrived at after full and free consideration by the military authorities. The reason for this plan is obvious in view of the concentration in front of our army of considerable German forces.

"Moreover, this plan offers other advantages concerning which, unhappily, we cannot give details for the present for military reasons."

Berlin Mob Begs Peace

Paris Paper Contains Report of Grave Riot in Streets

PARIS, Dec. 22.—The French War Office last night made public a report of an eye-witness of events along the battle line from Dec. 4 to Dec. 15. It says:—

"During the period from the 7th to the 15th of December the ascendancy gained by our infantry has placed us in a position to make in various sections of the front progress which seems to have disturbed the enemy.

"The German infantry is more cautious, and continuous sniping by them denotes a certain amount of nervousness. The fact that they are using searchlights and lighting rockets more and more reveals also their fear of attacks.

"After the expensive and useless experiments of last month, our adversaries seem almost everywhere to be reduced to defensive measures, and it is we who on the whole of the front have assumed the offensive.

"Also, in the artillery duels our batteries are showing more and more their superiority."

According to a story published in The Paris Gaulois, travelers arriving at Warsaw from Berlin state that grave disorders broke out in Berlin after the publication of the last list of killed and wounded, accounting for 40,000 names. An enormous crowd gathered in the streets, and the mounted police charged with drawn swords.

The crowd refused to disperse, and cried out:

"Give us back our fathers and sons! Down with war! We want peace and bread."

One Landwehr regiment, ordered to charge the crowd, refused to obey. According to The Gaulois, the revolt was quelled only after great difficulty.

According to a letter from a German officer published in The Berlin Tageblatt, the German losses in Belgium and northern France have been appalling. Corpses are strewn so thickly over the ground, the officer says, that they cannot be buried for several days.

Mikado Gives To Salvationists.

TOKIO, Dec. 22. — The Emperor and Empress, according to an announcement made yesterday, have donated 3,000 yen (about $1,500) to the Salvation Army. This is the first time, it is stated, that imperial recognition has been given to that organization.

McWILLIA[MS] The Fur Man, 374 George Street

[illegible] German army of invasion and now they will not go back their work when ordered! The German Government is really losing patience with them. The Hamburg Fremdenblatt says the German Government has now issued the following proclamation:

"The German Government in Belgium has recently advised the Belgians to resume their occupation which have been so long neglected as the German Government wishes to prevent unemployment and distress and starvation which arise from it. Heedless of all these offers of the Government, the Belgian people refuse to resume work. There are even cases where the direct commands of the German Government for certain tasks to be performed have not been carried out by the people. The German Government hereby repeats the command for resumption of work, which is by this time possible, since the railway and telephone services are almost normal again.

"If this order is not complied with the distribution of the means of subsistence by charitable institutions will be forbidden so far as those are concerned who are out of employment through refusing to do the work offered to them."

On which the Hamburg paper editorially comments: "Germany will drive the Belgians to work."

BY-LAWS AND REGULATIONS GOVERNING PETERBORO' BRANCH

Of the Canadian Patriotic Fund Were Endorsed by an Enthusiastic Meeting---Officers Elected---Mayor Buller is President of New Organization

The Peterborough Branch of the Canadian Patriotic Fund is a fact. Its establishment dates from last evening when the original Peterborough Patriotic Association was finally relegated to the past and its place taken by an organization that will be more than upholding the traditions and dignity of its predecessor. It will provide for the administration of funds for the assistance of wives, children and dependents of those who have placed their lives in jeopardy for the honour and freedom of the Empire.

Over one hundred members of the Peterborough Patriotic Association, representing team captains, team and members of various committees, were present to welcome the new organization. His Worship Mayor Buller presided.

Two Organizations.

Mr. D. O'Connell opened the meeting with a patriotic eulogy of the manner in which the community had responded to the call for financial assistance. He explained the object of the meeting and the need for the proposed organization. Two organizations were given their initial impulse, namely a Peterborough Branch of the Canadian Patriotic Fund, and the Peterborough Relief Association. One body of officers was elected to serve both organizations. This is to simplify matters and avoid unnecessary confusion. The by-laws and rules respecting the two organizations were unanimously adopted by the meeting.

It was moved and seconded that those present at the meeting form a branch of the Canadian Patriotic Fund to be known as the Peterborough Branch of the Canadian Patriotic Fund and that application be made at once to the Canadian Patriotic Fund for recognition of this branch. And that members of Peterborough Patriotic Relief committee not present also be members of the branch upon filing consent thereto.

The rules and regulations are as follows:

Name.

1. The branch shall be the Peterborough Branch of the Canadian Patriotic Fund.

Object.

2. The object of this branch shall be, as a branch of the Canadian Patriotic Fund, to provide and disburse funds "for the assistance in case of need of the wives, children and dependent relatives of officers and men, residents of Canada, who, during the present war, may be on active service with the naval and military forces of the British Empire and Great Britain's allies."

Meetings

3. Regular meetings of the Branch shall be held on the evening of the third Tuesday of the month of January, April, July and October, and the regular meeting in January shall be the annual meeting.

4. Special meetings may be called by the President, of which not less than three days notice shall be given by written notice to each member or by a notice published in the local newspapers. The President shall within one week, call a meeting when requested to do so in writing by five members.

Officers.

5. The officers of this Branch shall be as follows: President, Vice-President, Secretary, Treasurer, and Auditor, who shall be elected at the annual meeting, or, if not then elected, at a subsequent meeting, and shall hold office until the next annual meeting or until their successors are appointed. In the event of the death or resignation of any office a meeting shall be called at which the vacancy shall be filled.

6. The President shall preside at the meetings of the Branch. He shall have general supervision of the work of the Branch and shall be a member ex-officio of all committees.

7. In the absence of the President, the Vice-President shall perform any and all of the duties of the President and the Vice-President shall be ex-officio member of all committees.

8. The Secretary shall keep a record of the proceedings of all meetings of the Branch, and of its Committees, shall conduct its correspondence and perform such duties as may be required of him.

9. The Treasurer shall receive all moneys contributed for the purposes of the Branch and deposit them in a bank to the credit of the Canadian Patriotic Fund, and shall have authority to endorse cheques for this purpose. He shall deposit cheques received from the Canadian Patriotic Fund in a bank in another account to the credit of the Peterborough Branch of the Canadian Patriotic Fund. He shall issue cheques on the bank account of the Peterborough Branch to assist the wives, children and dependent relatives of soldiers upon the order of the Relief committee, and for expenses of the Branch and of the recruiting campaign to raise funds on the order of the Finance committee, and all cheques shall be signed by the Treasurer and countersigned by the President. The Treasurer shall at the end of each month furnish the Finance committee with a statement of the receipts and payments in such form as that committee shall require, and shall at each quarterly meeting of the Branch present a financial statement of the previous quarter, and shall also present a statement for the previous year at each annual meeting.

10. The auditor shall at the end of each quarter, or oftener if so required by the Finance committee of the Branch, audit the books and vouchers of the Treasurer and make a report to the Finance committee to be presented to the branch meeting, and at the end of each year shall similarly report on the accounts and vouchers for the year.

11. There shall be three standing committees, namely, Finance committee, Relief committee and Membership committee.

12. The Finance committee shall consist of seven members in addition to an officio officer, three of whom shall form a quorum. It shall be the duty of the Finance committee to supervise the financial affairs of the branch, to take such action as it may deem wise to raise needed funds, to supervise the collection of amounts that have been or may from time to time be subscribed to the fund, and to examine and order the payment of accounts for expenses of the recent campaign for funds or in carrying on the business of the Branch.

13. The Relief committee shall consist of seven members in adition to ex-officio officers, three of whom shall form a quorum for the transaction of business. It shall be the duty of the Relief committee to disburse aid to those for whose assistance this Branch has been formed as set out in paragraph 2 of these By-laws, such assistance to be given in accordance with the scale recommended by and the regulations of the Canadian Patriotic Fund. The Relief committee shall have authority to incur expenses necessary in the performance of its duties and such expenses shall be paid upon the authority of a resolution of the committee by a cheque issued and signed by the Treasurer and countersigned by the President.

14. The Membership committee shall consist of five members in addition to ex-officio officers, three of whom shall receive and decide upon applications for membership in the Branch.

15. The provision in paragraph 5 in regard to the election and term of office of the officers shall apply to members of the committees. In the event of a vacancy in the membership of any committee that committee may temporarily fill the vacancy until the next meeting of the Branch.

Amendments.

16. These By-laws, except as to the purpose of the funds, may be amended, repealed or otherwise altered at any regular or special meeting of the Branch by a resolution passed by the votes of two-thirds of the members present at such meeting, or by the votes of a majority of the members present if notice of such amendment, repeal or alteration has been previously given at the next preceding meeting or by three days' written notice to the members or by publication in the local newspapers at least three days previous to the meeting, at which such resolution may be voted upon.

RELIEF ASSOCIATION.

(1) That those present at this meeting organize and form themselves into the Peterborough Relief Association.

(2) That the funds raised in the recent campaign or that may be contributed to the Association for local relief purposes be deposited in a bank to the credit of this Association and used for the relief of persons in need in this locality.

(3) That the By-laws or Rules of the Peterborough Branch of the Canadian Patriotic Fund be adopted, mutatis mutandis, as the By-laws or Rules of this Association.

(4) That the officers and committees of the Peterborough Branch of the Canadian Patriotic Fund shall be the officers and committees of this Association. All residents of the County of Peterborough of the age of 21 years may become members of the Branch upon making written application to the Secretary for that purpose and upon their applications being favourably passed upon by the Membership committee and upon notice being given to the applicant to that effect such applicant shall forthwith become a member of the Branch.

Would Return Sum Of Five Thousand Dollars

To the City---Ald. Dobbin Suggests That One-Half of the Civic Grant be Returned in Consideration of the Fund Being Oversubscribed--J. H. Burnham M.P. Threatens to Leave Town--Report of Finance Committee

At last night's meeting of the Peterborough Patriotic Association, Ald. Frank Dobbin fathered the suggestion that one-half of the amount contributed to the Patriotic Fund by the City Council be returned to that body this, in consideration of the fact that the objective was exceeded by nearly ten thousand dollars and that there is an isolated complaint respecting the extra mill that will have to be levied in order to provide the amount of ten thousand dollars that the Council has seen fit to subscribe. Mr. Dobbin asked that a resolution be passed rescinding the resolution passed by the Council, which lacked a qualifying vote, authorizing a grant of ten thousand dollars, and pass a new resolution with the unanimous approval of the Council, granting the sum of five thousand dollars. This would have the effect of reducing the tax rate by one-half mill. If the need exceeded the amount granted, the Committee could come back to the Council next year and ask for the other five thousand dollars.

A Material Benefit.

Mr. D. O'Connell expressed his regret at being unable to see eye to eye with Mr. Dobbin. He claimed that Peterborough had been materially benefitted as a result of the Council's action in granting ten thousand dollars to the fund.

"Instead of taking ten thousand dollars from the City of Peterborough we are returning fifteen thousand dollars in the form of municipal relief," said Mr. O'Connell. "In other words, the City is receiving five thousand dollars more than the amount subscribed."

Mr. O'Connell's remarks were received with considerable applause.

Must Not Turn Back.

Mr. F. D. Kerr referred to the gratifying impule that was given to the fund by the City Council. "Having put our hand to the plough we must not turn back," said Mr. Kerr. "We must not repent of our greatness." He moved that Messrs. T. F. Matthews and J. A. Aylmer be authorized to act as trustees for the local relief fund, and that they be authorized to endorse checks and transact any other business that they think may be necessary.

A Point of Order.

Mr. O'Connell rose to a point of order, claiming that Mr. Kerr's motion tended to shut out discussion of Mr. Dobbin's suggestion. He asked Mr. Kerr to withhold his resolution until Mr. Dobbin's suggestion had been disposed of. In this Mr. Kerr acquiesced.

Mr. Jas. Kendry submitted that the Council had taken the proper course in making the grant they did. He said that any contributor would be justified in asking for a return of fifty per cent. of their subscriptions if Mr. Dobbin's suggestion were carried out.

Mr. J. A. Aylmer recalled that one citizen had intimated his intention of demanding a return of fifty per cent. of his subscription if the Council were allowed a return of five thousand dollars.

Will Leave Town.

"If they start that kind of humbugging I will leave Town," put in Mr. J. H. Burnham, M.P.

Both his Worship Mayor Buller and Ald. Johnston agreed that the subscription should stand. The latter, it will be remembered, moved in Council the original motion to grant the sum of ten thousand dollars. "I only wish I had another opportunity of moving that motion," said Ald. Johnston.

J. A. Aylmer presented a verbal report of the Organization Committee. This committee was organized for the purpose of collecting money for the Patriotic Fund. Twenty-five per cent. of this amount will be retained for local use and seventy-five per cent. turned over to the National Patriotic Fund. A total of $59,700 was collected, including the first collection and the City's grant of $10,000. Of this amount $17,760.3 has been received in cash and checks. Checks to the amount of $1,102 were not endorsed, so that deducting this, a total of $16,597.83 remains to the credit of the Association. Three thousand dollars of the total amount subscribed has been "ear-marked" for local relief, leaving approximately $56,000 to be divided in the proportion of three to one.

HOW IT WAS ACCOUNTED FOR.

Teacher—"How does it happen that your name is Allen and your mother's name is Brown?"

Johnnie—"Well you see, she married again and I didn't."

TWO CHIMNEY FIRES PUT OUT

A chimney fire on Brock Street yesterday gave the fire brigade a run. The fire was at the home of John Briggs, 113 Brock Street and was put out without damage.

This morning at the home of Mr. Tougas, 289 Rubidge Street, a chimney fire broke out about twenty minutes after eight o'clock. The fire brigade was called and extinguished it. Very little damage was done by the flames.

Mr. Burnham Again Under Fire

To the Editor of The Examiner.

Dear Sir,—In your edition of the 18th inst. there again appeared the name of Mr. J. Hampden Burnham, M. P. for West Peterborough, over one of his usual academical epistles of rot. Among other things he says, after citing the uselessness of big deputations, etc.: "Now even Government business is positively not done in that way, the way in which it is done is" — now listen and mark well. I, J. Hampden Burnham will tell you how it is done. Well, well, what arrogance. I often wonder if Mr. J. Hampden Burnham really knows what an infinitesimal small fraction of the electors of West Peterborough he represents at the present date. This is the same gentleman who came within an ace of playing the Jonah in connection with the Patrtioic Fund, inasmuch as his name was mentioned in connection with the reception and entertainment of the Hon. W. T. White, Minister of Finance. It is a mighty good thing for the Patriotic Fund that his name was only very remotely mentioned in connection with it.

Further on, in his rambling rot, Mr. J. Hampden Burnham says: "Did I get Mr. Kendry his contracts; Mr. Ackerman his, the Lock Works, Turner and Sons, their's, the Wm. Hamilton Co., or Mr. Gunsolus, his, etc. etc.? I certainly did not." I am pleased to say I can here agree with Mr. Burnham when he says, "I certainly did not." Imagine if you can the supreme egotism and arrogance of the above implication. "Did I get Mr. Kendry his contracts?"—Mr. James Kendry, ex-M.P. for West Peterborough and one of the best known, most popular and influential Conservative leaders in this section of Ontario; the very man that made a member of Mr. J. Hampden Burnham. Well, well, in the common parlance of the day, "What do you know about that."

Yours truly,
Conservative.

'Around The World With Santa Claus'

Cantata Presented at Annual Sunday School Entertainment at Park Street Church

The annual entertainment of Park Street Sunday school held recently, was one of the most successful, as well as the most enjoyable ever held. It took the form of a cantata, entitled, "Around the World With Santa Claus." Much of the success of the affair was due to the painstaking efforts of Miss E. Hill and Mr. Harry Hill. The part of Santa Claus was taken by Mr. Goodwin, and Mr. Max Sloan was captain. The sailors sang their four songs in a lively style, the rendering of "Be British" by James Hunt being greeted with much applause. The Finnigan-Flannigan guards under Captain Bob Moore and L. Nicholls sang their song in splendid voice, and were twice encored.

The Brownies, James and George Batley, and Aylmer Moore, did the tumbling part, and also their plea to the captain, excellently. Little Miss Atkins played "Home Sweet Home" on her guitar very cleverly, and showed the result of careful teaching. Misses Doris Goodwin, Annie Cook and Eva Booth also sang their respective songs well. The four little Japanese girls in their becoming kimonas made a hit with the crowd. The two little Belgian children also got a free hand from the audience on their appearance.

The last scene was a tableau, with all those who had taken part grouped on the stage, with Belgium between the protecting arms of France and England.

The orchestra, consisting of Mr. H. Hill piano, T. Smith 'cello, and Messrs. Dunkley and Lee violins, played excellently. The greatest credit for the success of the entertainment is due to Miss E. Hill, who designed and made the beautiful and numerous costumes, and to Mr. Harry Hill, who prepared the children, and also played the accompaniments.

Mr. Hill has been asked to put on the cantata again, and it is the earnest wish of a great many people that he may do so.

TOM MARKS AT THE GRAND.

A representative audience greeted the opening performance of that ever popular comedian, Tom Marks, and his splendid company at the Grand last evening. To say the least the audience were appreciative and departed from the theatre with a happy smile on their countenances, which was proof that they thoroughly enjoyed the evening's entertainment. The play presented was "The Golden Rule," a pastoral comedy, beautiful in the lesson it taught, wonderful in its theme, and rich with comedy and humour. Mr. Marks was seen to advantage in the role of the priest and was the recipient of many curtain calls. He was ably assisted by a clever cast, and the vaudeville between acts was the best ever seen in Peterborough at popular prices. Mr. Marks certainly has a company of merit and should receive the hearty support of the amusement lovers of this city.

To-night the company presents "The Irish Attorney," an Irish humourestque in four acts. New vaudeville will also be given.

New Home Market For Canadian Apples Created By Government Apple Campaig

The great financial loss to the apple growers of Canada that seemed to be inevitable three months ago owing to the failure of the foreign markets as a result of the war has been almost completely averted by the increased domestic demand for apples created by the Apple Advertising Campaign of the Department of Trade and Commerce.

Three months ago apples were a drug on the Canadian market. The war had suddenly cut off a large portion of the demand from the United Kingdom and Continental Europe, which in previous years had taken as much as 1,664,165 barrels of the fresh fruit and 75 per cent. of the total production of dried apples. As there was no prospect of a new market being secured to replace the loss of the foreign market in time to dispose of this season's crop the buyers of apples were not disposed to buy, and many apple growers decided to let a large portion of their crop fall to the ground and rot under the trees.

At this juncture the Minister of Trade and Commerce, Sir George E. Foster, knowing that newspaper advertising had created increased demand in Canada for other commodities, decided to conduct a Dominion-wide Advertising Campaign in the newspapers as a means of creating an increased domestic demand for apples that would make up in part for the great shrinkage in the demand from Europe.

The Campaign began on October 1. A series of ten large illustrated advertisements were published in about sixty daily newspapers throughout Canada. These advertisements set forth the food values of the Canadian apple, its lusciousness, health-giving properties, etc. New ways of cooking and serving apples were suggested in the advertisements, and a booklet of 200 apple decipes was offered free upon request. Canadians were urged to eat more, and yet more, of Canada's national fruit.

With the appearance of the first advertisemen there commenced a deluge of requests to the Department of Trade and Commerce for copies of the booklet of 200 apple recipes offered in the advertisements. The first edition of ten thousand copies was exhausted before it was off the press. Several other editions were printed, and in all, upwards of forty thousand booklets were required to meet the demand notwithstanding the rule of the Department that bulk orders to lists of two or more persons would not be filled. Thus in over forty thousand homes throughout Canada the housewife learned for the first time that the Canadian apple would be served in 200 different ways instead of the relatively few ways with which she had been familiar. There was a new apple dish for every day in the season—and the making of each dish increased the demand for apples.

The new demand for apples was on the same scale as the demand for apple booklets. Those who had been consistent users of Canadian apples ate more of them than ever and laid in larger stocks for the coming winter—and not the advertisements and the apple booklet told them that apples could be served in 200 different ways? The advertisements renew the appetite for the Canadian app of many who, in recent years, h allowed imported fruit to take place. In many other Canadian hom the advertisements introduced t Canadian apple for the first time as suitable article of food.

Canadian apple dealers report th largely as a result of the Apple A vertising Campaign of the Depa ment of Trade and Commerce, th sales of Canadian apples this seas for domestic consumption have be from two to four times as great in any previous year. One of leading co-operative apple growe associations in Ontario which did little advertising in certain ne papers in that Province recently nounced that it was unable to many of the orders that had been ceived because the entire crop of members had been completely exha ed and it had not been able to se fresh supplies from neighbou apple growers' associations.

Thus, instead of apples bein drug on the Canadian market, as the case three months ago, there ready market for all the good ap the Canadian apple growers can nish. The stocks both in the h of apple growers and apple dealer day are much lower than at this in previous years. Many of the ers anticipate difficulty in securing further supplies of apples when their present stocks are exhausted. This feeling among the dealers is illustrated by the recent refusal by an Eastern wholesale dealers of an offer from a wholesale apple dealer in Western Canada of current retail prices for the Eastern dealer's entire stock equivalent to thirty-seven carloads. The Eastern dealer has a steady local trade in the city in which he is located and he did not wish to put himself in the position of being unable to supply the trade during the balance of the season should the supplies of apples in the hands of the growers become completely exhausted, as apepared not at all unlikely.

A Dominion-wide educational advertising campaign in the newspapers as a means of creating a domestic demand for an important natural product of Canada to replace the loss of a foreign market was a new venture for a Canadian government. The complete success of that campaign suggests the use of similar means in meeting similar situations in other lines that may develop in the future.

Monaghan Will Have Contests

The ratepayers of Sections No. 1 and No. 3 of North Monaghan, will hold a meeting on Wednesday night in May's school to consider the selection of candidates for the Council. It is now definitely understood that Mr. Thos. Hunter and Mr. W. G. Howden will fight it but for Reeve, while Herb. Foster and Ernest Dobbin will offer a warm contest for the Deputy Reeveship.

Germans Have Only Learned Tricks of Sea, Says Mayor.

LONDON, Dec. 22.—The Mayor of Scarborough, in a letter replying to the message of Winston Churchill, First Lord of the Admiralty, expressing the sympathy of himself and of the British navy at the losses sustained through the German bombardment of Scarborough, says in part: "We had been led to believe from the conduct of the plucky commander of the Emden that German sailors understood something about the glorious old traditions of the sea. It is evident from our experiences of Wednesday that this is not so.

"Some newcomers into honorable professions first learn the tricks and lastly the traditions. As their commanders get older in the service they will find that the iron crosses pinned on their breast will not shield them from the shafts of shame and dishonor."

TURKS IN RETREAT.

They Have Suffered a Severe Defeat in Region of Van.

PETROGRAD, Dec. 22.—The latest despatches from the Caucasus indicate that the Turks are suffering heavily in the fighting in that region. All the fighting is now on Turkish territory.

Especially severe conflicts have taken place in the last two days in the region of Van, from which the Turks are now retreating.

A number of newly-formed Arab regiments took part in these battles, of whom many were captured. The suffering from the cold is particularly great among the Arabs, who are unaccustomed to it. The whiter is the most severe that has been experienced in the Vilayet of Erzerum in years.

Sir Francois Langelier Ill.

QUEBEC, Dec. 22.—Although he attended his functions at the Legislature almost every day last week, Sir Francois Langelier is seriously ill to-day at the vice-regal residence at Spencerwood.

How the German Press Sees It

The Belgians, it seems, are going from bad to worse. First they resisted the German army of invasion, and now they will not go back to their work when ordered! The German Government is really losing patience with them. The Hamburger Fremdenblatt says the German Government has now issued the following proclamation:

"The German Government in Belgium has recently advised the Belgians to resume their occupations, which have been so long neglected, as the German Government wishes to prevent unemployment and the distress and starvation which arise from it. Heedless of all these efforts of the Government, the Belgian people refuse to resume work. There are even cases where the direct commands of the German Government for certain tasks to be performed have not been carried out by the people. The German Government hereby repeats the command for resumption of work, which is by this time possible, since the railway and telephone services are almost normal again.

"If this order is not complied with the distribution of the means of livelihood by charitable institutions will be forbidden so far as those are concerned who are out of employment through refusing to do the work offered to them."

On which the Hamburg paper brutally comments: "Hunger will soon drive the Belgians to work."

RAILWAY TRAFFIC NOT DISRUPTED

Snow Storms Have Not Resulted in Usual Upsetting of Schedules

The first heavy snow storm of the year, has not been marked as usual by a consequent dislocation of traffic on the railroads. Both the C.P.R. and G.T.R. trains were running as per schedule all day yesterday and to-day, and although the ordinary ploughs have been put in position ahead of the locomotives, very little trouble as yet has resulted from the blizzard of yesterday and this morning.

An Englishman Who Made a Hit

George Edwardes, the famous theatrical manager, has just returned to London from Bad Nauheim, where he had been "interned" since the breaking out of the war. In an interview, Mr. Edwards said:

"Germans are by instinct and training the worlds bullies. But there was one young Englishman they couldn't bully. He was a smart young chap, what you might call a 'nut,' and nothing seemed to upset him. When, like the rest of us, he was marched into the police office, shouted at, and told he must report himself, he just smiled and remarked: 'Quite seasonable weather we're having, don't you think, commissioner?'

"The Commissioner frowned at him, but made no reply, but the young fellow lounged gracefully against the wall and talked for ten minutes until he had the Commissioner furious but impotent.

"Two hours after he had been dismissed, our young Englishman again presented himself at the police station still smiling. 'What do you want?' growled the Comissioner. 'Oh, nothing,' was the cool reply. 'I thought as I was passing I might just as well report myself. And I forgot to say before that last year's weather could not compare with this. Talking about weather'—

"'Get out,' yelled the Commissioner, 'and don't let me see your dirty face again!'

"And he never did," said Mr. Edwardes laughingly. "The young man never reported himself again, though, as he said there was a good deal more about the weather he would like to have discussed with the Commissioner.

American Consul In Need of Bread

LONDON, Dec. 21—"I would request the American Relief Committees to let me have at the earliest opportunity some flour for myself and the families of the consular staff," writes Henry W. Deidrich, the United States Consul General at Antwerp, to the headquarters here of the American Commmttee for Relief at Belgium.

"About ten days ago," the letter explains, "Jarvis Bell of New York, while on his way to Brussels kindly informed me that if my family and myself needed anything to let him or the Relief Committee know, and that they would provide as best they could. At the time the offer was made I did not think it would be necessary to make use of it, but we have been suddenly made to realise that Antwerp is not victualled, as common report has it. Some days ago all the bakers in the City declared they were not able to supply bread any longer for want of flour.

"For the time being they again have started their work, but the outlook for a steady supply of bread this winter is very gloomy."

By direction of King Albert the following reply has been received to the message of good wishes sent on his name day by the American Commission:

"Your work should save Belgium from famine. His Majesty earnestly congratulates your commission on its generous and enlightened initiative. He desires that you should know he is grateful."

BONSPIEL HAS BEEN PUT OVER UNTIL FEBRUARY FOR REASONS

Nothing at the curling rink is more reassuring of the re-opening of the new season than the activities of the secretary, Mr. Felix Brownscombe. His official communique in regard to last night's meeting of the club states that the special committee recommended the change in the date of the first day of the open bonspiel from Jan. 19 to Feb. 2nd. It was felt that the earlier date would not afford sufficient time to properly prepare for the big event. As it is, the bonspiel committee, with Mr. W. G. Morrow as chairman, is going into the matter energetically and a big time is promised.

A meeting of the skips was also held last night. W. H. Denham and W. D. Campbell were selected as skips for the District Cup, and W. H. Tayler and W. M. Lang the Tankard skips. These four skips, with the committee of management will select the rinks for these games.

The schedule games commence on January 4 with a more extensive schedule than last year. The players are now divided into two groups and each rink plays 12 games instead of the seven of last year. This will provide more curling for the individual rink and the prize winners will know they have gone a long way when the honours are decided. The winners of the two groups will play off. Prizes will be warded the winners, also the second and third rinks. This last prize is a new one and will be appreciated when the scheduled games are decided.

Everything is promising well at the Charlotte Street rink. There is plenty of frost, and Angus is fast building up a solid sheet of ice. Four rinks were operative last night and several games already played prove that the interest is keener than ever.

Shuffle In The Cabinet

SPECIAL WIRE:

TORONTO, Dec. 22.—The greatest shuffle which has occurred in the ranks of the cabinet ministers for many years took place to-day when four changes were officially made and announced in the ministry of the Provincial Government. The most marked change is the retirement of Hon. J. J. Foy, Attorney-General, who becomes minister without portfolio, to be succeeded by Hon. I. B. Lucas formerly Provincial treasurer. The two new ministers to be taken into the cabinet are Messrs. T. W. McGarry, who becomes Provincial Treasurer, and G. Howard Ferguson who becomes the new Minister of Lands, Forests and Mines. Contrary to much speculation Hon. W. J. Hanna does not make any change in his position.

The ceremonies of swearing the new members into office was as brief as possible, and this duty represents the most important which has fallen upon Hon. J. S. Hendrie since he became Lieutenant-Governor.

A BIG CARGO

VICTORIA, B.C., Dec. 19.—Carrying as part of her shipments thirty-two carloads of arms and munition of war, including five great guns, the steamship Novgorod of the Russian Volunteer fleet, Capt. L. E. Kortomitinov, steamed to-day bound for Vladivostak, Siberia.

The implements of war will be sent over the trans-Siberian Railroad to the Czar's army in the field.

The big weapons, with their carriages, weighed 105 tons each and it was no small matter to load the shipments. On account of the great weight of the guns it was found necessary to brace the masts of the Novgorod with timbers measuring twelve inches in diameter. With the use of these supports special gear was of sufficient strength to handle the war munitions.

The shipments reached Vancouver over the Canadian Pacific Railway system, supposedly from the plant of a steel company in Pennsylvania.

Ald. Wm. Langford Enters the Field

Ald. William Langford will stand for re-election in the North Ward. This and Ald. Johnston's pronouncement that he will not oppose Mayor Butler under any circumstances, are the features in to-day's municipal prospects. Ald. Johnston announced some time ago that he would not stand for Mayor if the present incumbent decided to contest the election, failing to receive the position by acclamation. To-day he is just as determined as ever to remain by his original decision, so that the Mayoralty field narrows down to a contest between Mayor Butler and Ald. Duncan.

Ald. Langford will stand or fall by his aldermanic record in the North Ward. He will be opposed by Mr. R J. Kidd

In the Centre Ward, Ald. F. H. Dobbin will be a candidate for municipal honours. It was only last summer that he was elected to fill the vacancy created by the retirement of Mr. G. N. Gordon, who received the appointment of Solicitor for the city. It is understood that Mr. Harry Morgan of the Morgan Hardware Company, will oppose Ald. Green in the West Ward.

A Cablegram From Salisbury

The following cablegram has been received from Major G. W. Bennett of "A" Company, 2nd Battalion, at Salisbury Plain:

"Kindest remembrances, season's greetings, and sincere thanks to the women of Peterborough from "A" Company, for the Christmas parcel received. — G. W. Bennett, Major."

A farmer asked a negro farm hand the cause of his worried and harassed expression.

"De trouble, boss," said the negro, "is nah wife. She is de stravagantes pusson I knows. She is alwus after money. Money dis, en money dat, en mo' money. She comes ter me fer one dollar, en den she wants two dollars, en so hit goes."

"But, Joe," inquired the boss, "what does she do with all this money?"

"Well, de fac' is, boss," explained Joe, "I ain't gib er none yit!"

A RATEPAYER ON THE FLAG SCHEME

Editor, Examiner:

Dear Sir,—Is this a time for flag-flappery? During the hard winter now upon us, all available municipal funds are likely to be needed for the relief of actual want. Until food, fuel and clothing are assured for the destitute there should be no expenditure for the "wider use of the flag."

The Examiner will agree that flag-waving is not necessarily patriotism, nor evidence of patriotism; nor does it promote patriotism; neither is it characteristic of Liberalism; nor was it ever characteristic of those who conferred the greatest benefits upon their fellow-men.

If certain reactionary persons having an undue regard for "emblems," "symbols" and "creeds in bunting," . . . "so only when kept flying," have their way, this City will cut a silly figure. Those who wear the King's uniform and accept the honours, obligations, and emoluments of military office in time of peace, and then default in time of war, are away off if they think the promotion of flag-waving now will save their credit. Patriotism, Eh! . . . "Nothing will be made public until the matter has been submitted to the City Council." Indeed! Probably the flag scheme is too silly and extravagant for publicity.—Yours truly,

A RATEPAYER.

Recruiting Posters From Old Country

The Examiner is in receipt of a number of the posters that are being used in England to stimulate recruiting, sent to this paper by Major Jos. Mills, of Peterborough, who is quartermaster of the 2nd Battalion at Salisbury. Some of them were displayed in front of the Examiner Office to-day and attracted considerable attention. So strong were their appeals that one young man came in to enquire as to where he could enlist.

Arbitration Case Resumed

BRANTFORD, Dec. 22.— The arbitration between the Lake Erie and Northern Railway and the Brantford Ice Company was resumed yesterday before the Board composed of Judge Huycke of Peterborough; A. E. Watts, K.C., and Mr. Magee of Hamilton.

The principal witness was Dr. Caulfield, bacteriologist, of Toronto University, who gave evidence on the examinations for bacteria of the Grand river at points where ice made from the river would be made.

ADDITION TO THE ARCHIVES

It is the intention of Mr. F. H. Dobbin, chairman of the Publicity Committee of the organization created to raise fifty thousand dollars for the Patriotic Fund, to compile a record of all the publicity matter and other information pertaining to the campaign. This will be handed down to posterity in the form of a couple of bound volumes, one of which will be placed in the archives of the Public Library. In the event of a similar campaign being instituted at some future date, this information will be available.

Germans Have Only Learned Tricks of Sea, Says Mayor.

LONDON, Dec. 23.—The Mayor of Scarborough, in a letter replying to the message of Winston Churchill, First Lord of the Admiralty, expressing the sympathy of himself and of the British navy at the losses sustained through the German bombardment of Scarborough, says in part: "We had been led to believe from the conduct of the plucky commander of the Emden that German sailors understood something about the glorious old traditions of the sea. It is evident from our experiences of Wednesday that this is not so.

"Some newcomers into honorable professions first learn the tricks and lastly the traditions. As their commanders get older in the service they will find that the iron crosses pinned on their breast will not shield them from the shafts of shame and dishonor."

TURKS IN RETREAT.

They Have Suffered a Severe Defeat in Region of Van.

PETROGRAD, Dec. 23.—The latest despatches from the Caucasus indicate that the Turks are suffering heavily in the fighting in that region. All the fighting is now on Turkish territory.

Especially severe conflicts have taken place in the last two days in the region of Van, from which the Turks are now retreating.

A number of newly-formed Arab regiments took part in these battles, whom many were captured. The suffering from the cold is particularly great among the Arabs, who are unaccustomed to it. The winter is the severe that has been experienced [illegible] years.

THE WORLD OF SPORT

Date of Bowmanville Game Is Changed Will Play Monday

The O.H.A. hockey season will open in Peterborough a day earlier than was originally scheduled. Bowmanville were slated to play here next Tuesday night, but at the request of Secretary Taylor of the Bowmanville club, the game has been switched to Monday night next, so that a week from last night the team from the Rubber Factory town will try conclusions with the local braves, and incidentally open the 1914-15 O.H.A. season.

BIG BUNCH OF PLAYERS AT INTERMEDIATES' PRACTICE

The first big practice of the Peterborough intermediates at Brock Street rink last night was a lively affair, with a big bunch of candidates splashing in all at once. It was good hard going all the way and the players showed surprisingly good form for so early in the season. The new players out were Ack Hunter, the well known Toronto Rowing Club defence player and Pethick, who played in Regina last year. He is also a defence man. Both Hunter and Pethic showed class, checking well and rushing nicely. They should be of great assistance this winter. Maurice Park and Grover Halpin of last year's team were out and going strong. Orville Kennedy was another of last year's players in line, while Long and Morrow, the junior defence players, were also in uniform. Stan Wade, once upon a time a Peterborough junior, and who has played since at Montreal and in Hamilton, gave a good account of himself on the defence. Others out were Gerow, formerly of Belleville, Fleming, Murray and Jimmy McMartin. Fred Kelly was a little under the weather, suffering from a cold, and did not turn out. The material in sight was enough to warrant a most hopeful outlook for the coming season.

TEAM COMMITTEES ARE CHOSEN BY THE EXECUTIVE

At a meeting of the executive of the Peterborough Hockey Club last night, the question of team committees to select the junior and intermediate teams this season, was discussed. In connection with the intermediate team, after a long discussion, it was decided that the matter of selecting the team should be left to a committee composed of President W. J. Nelson, Secretary H. P. Morgan and Trainer Ed. Dillon. This committee will select the line-up for each intermediate game.

The selection of the junior team was left to F. D. Craig, who will have charge of the youngsters again this season. The selection of Ed. Dillon and Eugene Hurtubise as trainers was approved of, and the two will be on the job from now on.

Complimentary tickets are being printed and will be issued to the players in a day or two.

BOWLING

The Gladiators defeated the Unknowns two out of three games last evening in the Y. M. C. A. Bowling League, and won in pinnage by the small margin of 26 pins. The teams are well matched and a very interesting contest was witnessed:

Hank O'Day's managerial jobs in the National League have been short-lived in each instance, and Hank is kept busy alternating between umpiring and managing.

There has been much comment anent Lute Boone, the second baseman now on the ocean wave bound for Hawaii with the touring teams. The gist of the comment is that he is being watched carefully to see whether he shall be traded for Eddie Collins. This thing of taking a ball player to Honolulu to discover his ability

HOCKEY GOSSIP

The Peterborough Junior O. H. A. team will practice to-night at 7 o'clock. A full attendance is expected at this and all other practices.

The first junior game will be played two weeks from to-night, when the Port Hope juniors will play here.

There will be no change in the prices of admission at the Brock Street rink for hockey matches this season. The executive decided at last night's meeting that the same scale as last year will be in vogue. Reserved seats 50c., west side, gentlemen 35c., ladies 25c.; east side, 25c

New uniforms have been ordered for the Peterborough intermediates and juniors. The colours and design will be the same as last year. The intermediate outfit will consist of sweaters with a blue body and white shirt, collar and cuffs, while the junior sweaters will have a wide white band around the body and arms, with a white collar and blue body.

Arrangements have been completed for the exhibition game in Toronto on New Year's night with the Toronto Rowing Club seniors. It will be a good workout for the local intermediates. The Rowing Club will entertain the Petes at a supper after the game.

The local management has written Cleveland with a view of arranging a game with the famous C.A.C. team.

The executive decided last night that an exhibition game with the 'Varsity juniors during the holidays would hardly be a paying proposition.

Bears Arms For France

Alsatian Member of German Reichstag Reveals Himself

PARIS, Dec. 22.—Georges Weill, the long-lost deputy for Metz in the German Parliament, has been found or rather he has revealed himself. Nothing more dramatic or sensational has appeared in print than the first two sentences of his manifesto to his friends of Alsace-Lorraine.

"Since the outbreak of the war," he writes, "I have let the German press circulate all sorts of stories about me, and have neither protested nor denied that I owed complete allegiance to my aged parents, who were still in Strassburg, and I preferred to leave even them in ignorance as to what had happened to me rather than expose them to the anger of those who are still masters in that city. Now that they are in safety my liberty of speech is reconquered. On Aug. 5 I enlisted in the French army. In joining the army of the republic and thus continuing the struggle against militarized, Prussianized Germany, I am conscious of having well fulfilled my duty as a Socialist Deputy and representative for Alsace-Lorraine."

IGNORANT OF TRADITIONS.

Germans Have Only Learned Tricks of Sea, Says Mayor.

LONDON, Dec. 22.—The Mayor of Scarborough, in a letter replying to the message of Winston Churchill, First Lord of the Admiralty, expressing the sympathy of himself and of the British navy at the losses sustained through the German bombardment of Scarborough, says in part: "We had been led to believe from the conduct of the plucky commander of the Emden that German sailors understood something about the glorious old traditions of the sea. It is evident from our experiences of Wednesday that this is not so.

"Some newcomers into honorable professions first learn the tricks and lastly the traditions. As their commanders get older in the service they will find that the iron crosses pinned on their breast will not shield them from the shafts of shame and dishonor."

TURKS IN RETREAT.

They Have Suffered a Severe Defeat in Region of Van.

PETROGRAD, Dec. 22.—The latest despatches from the Caucasus indicate that the Turks are suffering heavily in the fighting in that region. All the fighting is now on Turkish territory.

Especially severe conflicts have taken place in the last two days in the region of Van, from which the Turks are now retreating.

A number of newly-formed Arab regiments took part in these battles, of whom many were captured. The suffering from the cold is particularly great among the Arabs, who are unaccustomed to it. The whiter is the most severe that has been experienced in the Vilayet of Erzerum in years. The temperance is at times as low as 35 degrees Fahrenheit. Many of the captured Arabs are found to be suffering with frosted hands and feet.

The condition of the Turkish transport service is lamentable. Men in the ranks are famishing in snowdrifts, which are six feet deep in places.

Captive British Landed.

LONDON, Dec. 22.—A telegram received here from Buenos Ayres informs the Foreign Office that the crew of the British ship Drummuir, sunk at sea by the German cruiser Leipsig, has been landed at Port San Antonio, Argentine, by the German ship Seydlitz.

The Leipsig was one of the German cruisers destroyed by British ships in the naval engagement off the Falkland Islands, December 8.

Two Years In Prison.

TORONTO, Dec. 22.—George Dickson was committed to the penitentiary for two years in the police court yesterday by Col. Denison for an assault on Alex. Gamble Duncan, a storekeeper.

Dickson went into the store on the pretence of using the telephone and without provocation smashed Duncan twice on the head with a heavy club, inflicting a serious wound. He had a bad record.

NEUTRALITY VIOLATED.

Improper Behavior of Germans Charged by Chile.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 22.—After a searching investigation of the activities of the German fleet in the Southern Pacific recently, the Government of Chile has made formal protest to Germany against alleged violations of neutrality by the German navy in Chilean waters.

The protest transmitted by the Chilean Minister at Berlin sets forth that the German ships, prior to their engagement with Read Admiral Cradock's British squadron, stayed as long as five days in one island owned by Chile and transferred supplies at another small island after a stay of seven days. The protest is understood to be couched in vigorous language, demanding reparation from Germany.

At the same time the Chilean Government has protested to Great Britain, charging that the British cruiser Glasgow recently took mail from vessels in Chilean waters.

Canadian Regiment for Egypt?

MONTREAL, Dec. 22. — That at least one Canadian regiment is in Egypt would appear to be proved by a letter received yesterday by Honore Betrand from his brother, Louis Bertrand, a private in the First Royal Montreals. In this letter Private Bertrand describes the life of the men in Egypt and says that they expect soon to be fighting.

Sir Francois Langelier Ill.

QUEBEC, Dec. 22.—Although he attended his functions at the Legislature almost every day last week, Sir Francois Langelier is seriously ill to-day at the vice-regal residence at Spencerwood.

BASEBALL FLIES.

Story from Gettysburg says that Eddie Plank will sign with the Federal League if he has not already done so. The story has it that Plank is piqued over the fact that Connie Mack asked waivers on him, and that two weeks ago he informed Arthur Irwin that it was useless for the New York Americans to try to arrange a trade for his services. Plank declares that he turned down an offer of $7,500 a year for three years, made last spring by John M. Ward, to accept $5,000 a year from the Athletics, and that his record last season did not justify Mack's action in trying to relegate him to the minors.

Catchers seem to be all the rage as managers. Pat Moran and Roger Bresnahan, recently appointed to head the Phillies and Cubs respectively, would bear out the idea at least. Connie Mack was a catcher in the old days. Bill Carrigan of the Red Sox is a backstop. George Stallings o fthe Braves never saw service elsewhere, though he was no great shucks as a receiver. Charlie Dooin, the deposed manager of the Phillies, likewise is a catcher.

Davey Jones, who helped win pennants for Hughie Jennings some years ago, but who was in the Federal League last year, is a successful druggist of Detroit. He says that all the talk of Benny Kauff's wonderful ability is pure bosh. "Kauff doesn't begin to class with Cobb, Speaker, Crawford, Milan and a dozen others I might name." said Davy. "To begin with, he has no head. He is all right when things break for him, but possessed of too much 'bone' to be of more than average major league ability."

Fielder Jones declares that major league players have used the Federal League as a club to hammer more money out of the club owners. He claims that Vick, Cooper and Mensor of the Pirates tried such a dodge on him. He tumbled when the players refused to do business at the terms they first stipulated.

James A. Gilmore is said to be on the trail of Hank O'Day as an umpire possibility. The Federal League might not be quite as bad as facing Evers, McGraw and Breshnahan.

The picturesque baseball career of Roger Bresnahan includes playing third base, the outfield and catching; the management of one team and the coming management of another; service in New York, Baltimore, Washinton, St. Louis and Chicago; a beaning which came near sending him over the range, and fights on the bench with Arthur Devlin and Heinie Zimmerman.

THE GREATEST HAPPINESS COMES TO OURSELVES WHEN WE MAKE OTHERS HAPPY WITH OUR GIFTS

THE value of a gift consists not in costliness or variety, but in the feeling of affection, or regard, or sympathy, or honor, which it is supposed to carry. It is time that both the giver and receiver realized this. Too often the spirit of Christmas is utterly sacrificed in the contest between the desire to spend and the duty of refraining. For a gift to be worth the giving, no sacrifice of duty must enter into it. A tiny flower given in love and simplicity is better than a rare and costly gem procured with worry, anxiety and doubt. When you give something TO WEAR you exhibit good sense, good taste and good judgment.

Let us suggest—

etc., in fact everything carried by first-class Clothing and Men's Furnishing Stores.

Y. M. C. A. NOTES

The Senior Bible Class, taught by Mrs. Joseph Wearing and Secretary C. N. Messrve united last evening to listen to an address by Mr. A. Kochaly. Subject, "Christmas in Persia." Mr. Kochaly described the customs of his country and said that Christmas was only observed by about one million people, although the population was fifteen millions, the majority being Mohammedans. The Persian Christian prepares for Christmas by a two weeks 'last, followed by two weeks of feasting. Christmas in Persia comes thirteen days later than in our country. The idea of Santa Claus has just reached Persia, having been brought in by natives from America. Mr. Kochaly's address on extemporaneous debate took place between Fred McNeely and Mr. Jones. Subject, "Resolved that we should not teach children that there is Santa Claus." Mr. McNeely held the affirmative and by the vote of the class was given the decision, although Mr. Jones made a strong point of the fact that the teaching of Santa Claus necessitated many untruths, shook the confidence of the children in parents when they found out there was not a Santa Claus and was unfair because it means practicing deceit.

The classes adjourned to meet again the first Monday evening in January, in view of the holidays an the Boys' Conference which will begin in Peterborough next Monday night.

KINGSTON, Dec. 22. — Kingston was in the grip of a terrible snowstorm. Early in the morning a storm set in, and, with the heavy gale prevailing, was drifting snow and making traffic very heard. WILL FIGHT INTACT.

Canadians Will Not Be Split Up, Says Gen. Hughes.

OTTAWA, Dec. 22.—The first Canadian contingent is not likely to be sent to the front in separate battalions brigaded with British troops, said Maj.-Gen. Sam Hughes yesterday. He also stated that he would not be surprised if the Princess Patricias had exchanged the Ross rifle for the British army rifle, but that was a thing that he had nothing to do with now. Gen. Hughes, who came back from the Maritime Provinces yesterday, said that the Nova Scotia regiment, the 25th, recruited for overseas service, had 85 per cent. of its establishment born in Nova Scotia, the 26th at St. John, N.B., also had a large percentage of Canadian-born. The Cape Breton Highlanders were a splendid body of men, and the artillery men mobilizing at Fredericton, N.B., were fine capable men. The engineers recruiting in the Maritime Provinces contained many civil engineers and university graduates.

Search of Ships To Continue.

LONDON, Dec. 22.—It can be stated positively that no definite agreement has been reached whereby England will refrain from searching ships which leave American ports with statements from British consuls that they are carrying no contraband. Britain is willing to accept such statements in cases where there is no reason to believe that the cargoes may have been augmented at sea. The long negotiations between the British Government and America, however, have resulted in no positive agreement or understanding between the two countries.

Japan Has Internal Troubles.

TOKIO, Dec. 22.—The Merchants' Association and Baron Shibusawa, president of the American Japanese Association, and Buainakane, president of the Tokio Chamber of Commerce, are urging the Diet and Cabinet to reach a compromise with a view to preventing dissolution of the House or the collapse of the Ministry. A crisis in time of war, they urge, would create an unfavorable impression abroad and hinder national progress.

Stole Peanuts, Fined $25.

BERLIN, Dec. 22.—The high price was reached yesterday for peanuts when two young men paid $5 a sack for having broken into and stolen five sacks of peanuts from a peanut vendor's shed in this city. They were each taxed $25 for the escapade, with an alternative of thirty days. They paid their fine.

Patriotism Runs Low.

SALISBURY PLAIN, Eng., Dec. 22.—Transportation finally afternoon carried the last of the Princess Patricia's Light Infantry of the first Canadian contingent, to France. On Saturday they were presenting to town Winchester. They left there Sunday morning. They were given a great farewell.

AUSTRIANS STIRRED.

Sympathy With War Is Waning—More Allies May Come In.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 22. — A despatch from a prominent diplomat in Vienna to his Government of which officials here learned yesterday, it is stated, insists that leading financial and business men of Austria desire peace.

The diplomat in a cipher telegram confirms recent press reports from Rome of the dissatisfaction which the Austrian populace feels at the lack of the success of its army and states moreover that indignation has been stirred up among all classes because of the recent reverses suffered at the hands of Servia.

The Austrian Government, he adds, through a strict censorship of the press, has withheld details of these defeats from an anxious public.

Another phase of the situation said to be disquieting to the Austrian Government is the report from the Czech part of Bohemia and Hungary to the effect that sympathy with the war is rapidly diminishing there.

The same diplomat's telegram states that reports are persistent in well informed circles in Austria that Italy will declare war against Austria about New Year's day. These reports emanate—the despatch says—from prominent Italians, but Austrian officials are still confident that Italy will remain neutral.

Greece and Roumanian Restless.

LONDON, Dec. 22. — Following categorical assurances of the Bulgarian Government of its intention to maintain strict neutrality in the war, the Entente powers, Great Britain, France and Russia, have given guarantees to both Athens and Bucharest that Bulgaria will not attack Greece in the event of the latter country assisting Servia, and will not attack Roumania should that state actively participate in the war.

This is taken to foreshadow the approaching participation of Roumania and Greece.

Edward S. Copeman, inventor of life-saving apparatus, is dead at his home in Lowestoft, Eng., aged 67. The best known of his inventions is a raft for saving life at sea.

LONDON HAS NO LURE FOR A GAY SHOW GIRL

All the Nice Men Fighting Germans and Christmas Outlook is Punk

A war story:

Writing from London to one of her sisters playing in a Broadway musical comedy, an American show girl temporarily "at leisure" in the English metropolis, says:

"Life is simply awful here. You are lucky to be out of it. Everybody goes about with a long face. All the nicest men are fighting the Germans. No more fancy suppers, no flowers or motor rides. The outlook for Christmas is punk. The only thing to do is to go out in the morning and see the soldiers rehearse."

RUSSIANS ANNIHILATE TWO THOUSAND GERMANS

Trapped Them in an Attempt to Cross the Bzura River on the Long Way to Warsaw--Fording Places Were Also Mined and Enemy Lost Heavily.

SPECIAL MORNING CABLE:

PETROGRAD, Dec. 23.—Two thousand Germans, part of a column of the advance on Warsaw, were annihilated in a single engagement along the Bzura River.

HELD FIRE TO CLOSE QUARTERS.

Details of the fighting reaching here to-day showed that the Russians west of Warsaw masked their artillery and did not open fire on the closely massed ranks of the enemy until they were in mid-stream. The destruction of life was frightful. Hundreds of wounded were swept off their feet by the current and, weighted down by their heavy equipment, were drowned. The advance was completely checked. The Germans withdrew and took cover to escape the Russian fire.

FORDING PLACES WERE HEAVILY MINED.

At other points mines were exploded along the banks where the Germans endeavoured to ford the crossing. Such explosions invariably resulted in heavy losses to the enemy and threw their ranks into the greatest confusion.

MILES OF TRENCHES HAVE BEEN CUT IN THE ENGLISH COAST REGION ON THE EAST

SPECIAL MORNING CABLE:

NEW YORK, Dec. 23.—Trenches are being dug about London, and extraordinary precautions are being taken throughout the English east coast region, in anticipation of a further German raid or invasion. This information reached the United States press to-day from a reliable private source in England.

NO LONGER CALLED PRACTICE WORK.

The trench digging around London began two months ago. It was announced at the time that this was mere practice work for the recruits. This pretence has now been abandoned. Any traveller by road out of London, especially to the north and northeast has ample opportunities to observe the lines of trenches, that would do credit to the seasoned sappers in Flanders. These extend in an almost unbroken line from Hendon on the northwest, through Potters Bar, across to Epping Forest, on the northeast, and thence southward as far as the Thames.

VIGILANCE HAS NOT BEEN RELAXED.

For two months the German invasion has been expected "in next week." The German cruisers made their spirited dash on Scarborough, Hartlepool and Whitby, but that the actual invasion is overdue is causing no relaxation of vigilance or preparation on the part of Gen. Sir Ian Hamilton, commander-in-chief of the defence forces. It is also known in London that Lord Kitchener recently made a personal tour of inspection of the point on the east coast where it is considered most likely the Germans may attempt landing.

Altogether there are now mobilized along the coast from Dover to Leith approximately half a million men. A large part of these are territorials, but at important points are a number of regiments of seasoned regular troops. All east coast harbours, inlets and waterways have been mined, a day and night patrol of seaplanes, steam yachts, motor boats and armed steam trawlers is maintained, and the navy has provided some 800 trawlers, manned by navy gunners. Altogether there are about 1600 small vessels, armed and unarmed, now on this patrol service between Dover and Leith.

A Super-Super Dreadnought To Amaze The World

LONDON, Dec. 15.—Great Britain is about to amaze the world with several warships of a new type, a super-super-dreadnought, as much above the super-dreadnoughts as these are above the dreadnough and as the dreadnought was above the best warships of the Spanish-American war era. Whether the Germans have several sea warfare cards up their sleeve, as has been intimated, Admiral Jellicoe will be able to lay down a hand on the playing table of the North sea next summer which the kaiser's navy will stare at in astonishment.

These new ships are the Queen Elizabeth class, not one of which is yet in commission. Details of them are carefully guarded and publication of facts concerning them in Great Britain would probably be followed by severe punishment. From a friend who recently visited the jealously barred Devonport yard, however, I have obtained a layman's view of one of these giant craft. It was Warspite, which will be ready for action within six months.

The Warspite will carry ten 15.5 inch guns. What this means can be realized when it is remembered that the latest American battleships, which are the most formidable now afloat, carry only 14-inch guns.

Even more important is the wonderful turret arrangement. The turrets rise above each other like boxes in a grandstand, so that it is possible to fire all of her 15.5 guns from the bow. This is an achievement of which naval construction would have despaired only yesterday.

More wonderful still, this monster floating fort is not like the older battleships, a slow boat, unable to pursue swift cruisers. She makes 28 knots, a speed greater than the fastest transatlantic liner. Her bow is narrow at the water line and widens in such a way as to offer the least possible resistance to the seas.

Another important feature is her armour. It is said she will be practically able to defy any ordinary torpedo or mine. This is accomplished by means of a triple coating of armour below the water line. An external explosion can damage her, but not sink her.

Of course she is oil-driven. Her cost wil lbe about $15,000,000. There are six such ships building, which are expected to shake out their colours within six months. Constructions are so perfectly organized that they can be built in eighteen months from the time they were started, it is estimated.

I am unable to learn, whether all or only one of the new battleships will be able to fire all ten of its large guns from the bow. I am informed, however, that besides these six new battleships, the Devonport and Portsmouth navy yards are to produce eight battle cruisers by next spring or early summer.

At the Devonport station 9,000 men are employed, with about 5,000 soldiers and marines always on guard against hostile or friendly prowlers.

You will remember that Winston Churchill, first lord of the admiralty, recently stated in the house of commons that Great Britain could lose a super-dreadnought every month for twelve months without diminishing her relative superiority over the German navy, even though the Germans kept all their ships intact. From what I learn this was no idle boast.

TAXED ON MILLIONS JOHN D. WANTS TO PAY ONLY $29.64

Says in Application for Injunction Against Cleveland County Treasurer That is All He Owes

RESIDENT OF NEW YORK SINCE 1885, HE CONTENDS

CLEVELAND, O., Dec. 23.—John D. Rockefeller, through his attorney, Virgil P. Kline, began a fight Saturday to keep from paying taxes in Cuyahoga County on $211,040,373 worth of personal property.

Tax Commissioners Agnew and Fackler early this year assessed Mr. Rockefeller's property when he remained longer than the usual four months at his Forest Hill summer home. Recently the Board of Complaints upheld the assessment.

Offers to Pay $29.64.

In Mr. Rockefeller's bill of complaint he insists he has been a citizen of New York since April, 1885; that he exercises all rights of citizenship there, including voting, and pays taxes there. He admits that he owes the County Treasurer $29.64. This sum he tendered to Treasurer O'Brien, but it was refused.

Mr. Rockefeller's application for an injunction, as given out by his lawyer, reads:

"I own Forest Hill estate, a summer home, in Cuyahoga County, and visit it three or four months a year, usually coming in June and leaving in October. I came to Cleveland on June 24, 1913, with Mrs. Rockefeller and Miss Spellman, a relative. Both became ill shortly after we arrived.

"I brought with me from New York two automobiles, assessed at $9,000. I arranged to leave October 1, 1913, but the illness of the women prevented. Miss Spellman was not able to go until January nor my wife until February.

Levy Is Illegal, He Says.

"Then the Tax Commissioners, without authority, assessed me a year's taxes on the automobiles and on money in stocks and bonds, amounting to $211,040,373. They also levied against me for $6,010 worth of Forest Hill property, but it was refused. The levy against the other property was illegal."

The Tax Commissioners will fight the case. Judge Clarke of the Federal Court has not set a date for the hearing.

500,000 NOMAD MOSLEMS FOR CZAR'S ARMY

PETROGRAD, Dec. 22...Half a million Calmucks, members of a nomadic, pastoral race which has always been free from obligation to furnish any soldiers for the Russian army, have just been added to the Russian forces.

A deputation from the Calmucks recently arrived in Petrograd with a request that they be allowed to serve in the ranks during the present war and offering to supply 500,000 mounted troops if necessary. "Our tribes have volunteered practically en masse," declared the leader of the deputation.

The Emperor's reply grants them a military organization and privileges similar to those enjoyed by the Cossacks.

The Calmucks are born horsemen, and their horses are among the finest in the world, closely resembling the true Arab breeds. The number of Calmuck subjects in Russia is given as about five million. They are Mohammedans.

In acknowledgment of the Russian Emperor's granting of their petition, the delegation announced that it was empowered to deliver to the imperial treasury a gift of $800,000 in money and 1,500 horses.

CARRIED TO THE PULPIT TO MAKE A PLEA FOR THE PATRIOTIC FUND

Son of Former Pastor of St. Andrew's Church Has Stirred the Hearts of the Presbyterians of Fergus.

THE ANSWER CAME

A most touching incident and one that will live in hearts of the Presbyterians of Fergus, long after the principal figure in the little drama has passed away, was an event that occurred a week ago last Sunday in St. Andrew's Church of that Scottish Canadian town. Pale in his ministerial robes and so weak that he had to lean against the reading desk, Rev. Logie Macdonell, risen from a bed of sickness, and in the pulpit for the first time in four years of desperate illness, addressed the congregation and implored them to help the Empire in this time of need, to aid the Patriotic Fund and the starving Belgians.

As his many Toronto friends know, after a brilliant career at college, and a few strenuous years in the ministry, his worthy son of a distinguished father, the late Rev. D. J. Macdonell, of St. Andrew's Church, was seized by a fatal malady. Despite illness, however, he laboured on at his Church in Vernon, B.C., until finally sheer weakness forced him to give in. Since then he has lived at Fergus, bravely fighting a relentless enemy. Though prone on his couch and debarred from all active work, his keen mind is ever busy, and a trenchant pen conveys his opinions on various public issues of the day.

With Heart and Soul.

Like his father before him, that beloved preacher of Toronto's oldest Presbyterian congregation, Rev. Logie Macdonell goes into everything with all his heart and soul. He took most strongly on the present war. And the fact that the Town of Fergus had sent only three men to the front, and furthermore, what he considered the general apathy of the people in the district, burned within him. He must do something.

Carried to the Pulpit.

When he, a sick man, so weak that he could scarcely rise from his bed, announced his intention of going into the pulpit, his friends and the doctor gasped in dismay. But the Rev. Logie was adamant, so with gloomy forebodings, they consented. Bundled up in a fur coat, the young minister arrived at the Church just as the time for the sermon came. Kindly hands assisted him to his place, and presently he faced the congregation, standing in that pulpit from which his grandfather Macdonell had preached long years before. Across the way, in the neighbouring Kirk, his maternal grandparent, Rev. Dr. Smellie, had exhorted the Scottish settlers in days gone by. Apprised of his intention, the people had turned out in full force. Every pew was filled.

The Answer Came.

For only ten minutes did the frail young minister address them, but his eloquence was burning, and his whole soul went forth to the farmers and townspeople. He begged them to do something for their native land, entreated them to help, and his prayer went home. Many an eye was dimmed with tears at the brave and pathetic figure speaking for the last time in the pulpit. At length he sat down, exhausted, utterly worn out by his brief exertions.

Never in the history of the Church had there been such a splendid response. Rich farmers placed cheques on the collection plater which, heaped with envelopes, coins and bills, were carried to the communion table. One thousand dollars had been collected. Rev. Logie Macdonell's appeal had not been in vain.—Toronto Telegram.

"THE BATTLE CRY"

Charles Neville Buck

At last a sudden turn in the road brought to view a wretched patch of bare clay circled by a dilapidated paling fence within which gloomed a squalid and unlighted cabin of logs. At sight of its desolation, the girl's heart sank. No note of cheery light gave comfort to her weariness. A square hovel, windowless and obviously of one room, held up a wretched lean-to that sagged drunkenly against its end. The open door was merely a patch of greater darkness in the grey picture. Behind it loomed the mountain like a crouching Colossus.

At first she thought it an abandoned shack, but as they drew rein near the stile which one must cross into the yard and which a knarled sycamore shaded, a dark object lazily rose, resolving itself into a small boy of perhaps eleven, who had been sitting hunched up there at gaze with his hands clasped around his thin knees.

As he came to his feet, he revealed a thin stature swallowed up in a hickory shirt and an over-ample pair of butternut trousers that had evidently come down in honorable heritage from elder brethren. His small face wore a sharp, prematurely old expression, as he stood staring up at the new arrivals and hitching at the single "gallus" which supported the family breeches.

"Airy one o' ye folks got a chaw o' terbaccy?" he demanded tersely, then added in plaintive after-note, "I hain't had a chaw ter-day."

"Sonny," announced the colourless mountaineer with equal succinctness, "we want ter be took in. We're benighted."

"Ye mout axe Fletch," was the stolid reply, "only he hain't hyar . . . Hes airy one o' ye folks got a chaw o' terbaccy?"

"I don't chaw, ner drink, ner smoke," answered the horseman quietly, with the manner of one who teaches by precept. "I'm a preacher of ther Gawspel. Air ye Fletch's boy?"

"Huh-huh. Hain't thet woman got no terbaccy nuther?"

Evidently whatever other characteristics went into this youth's nature he was admirably gifted with tenacity and singleness of purpose. Juanita Holland smiled, as she shook her head and replied, "I'm a woman and I don't use tobacco."

"The hell ye don't!" The boy paused, then added scornfully, "My mammy chaws and smokes, too—but she don't straddle no hoss." After that administration of rebuke he deigned once more to recognize the missionary's insistent queries, though with the laconic impatience of extreme ennui.

"I tell ye Fletch hain't hyar." The boy started disgustedly away, but paused in pasing to jerk his head toward the house and added, "Ye mout axe thet woman ef ye've a mind ter."

The travellers raised their eyes and saw a second figure standing with hands on hips staring at them from the distance. It was the slovenly figure of a woman, clad in a colourless and shapeless kirt and an equally shapeless jacket which hunk unbelted about her thick waist. As she came slowly forward the girl began to take in other details. The woman was bare-footed and walked with a shambling gait which made Juanita think of bears pacing their barred enclosures in a zoo. Her face was hard and unsmiling, and the wrinkles about her eyes were those of anxious and lean years, but the eyes themselves were not unkind. Her lips were tight clamped on the stem of a clay pipe.

"Evenin', ma'am," began the mountaineer. "I'm Good Anse Talbott. I reckon mebby ye've heered tell of me. This lady is Miss Holland from down below. I 'lowed Fletch mout lett us tarry hyar till sun-up."

"I reckon he mout—ef he war hyar, though we don't foller takin' in strangers," was the dubious reply; "but he hain't hyar."

"Where air he at?"

"Don't know. Didn't ye see him down the road as ye rid along?"

"Wall, now—" drawled the missionary. "I hain't skeercely as well acquainted hyarabouts as further up Tribulation. What manner o' lookin' man air he?"

"He don't look like nothin' much," replied his wife morosely. "He's jest an ornery-lookin' old man."

"Whither did he sot out ter go when he left hyar?"

The woman shook her head, then a grim flash of latent wrath broke in her eyes.

"I'll jest let ye hev the truth, stranger. Some triflin' fellers done sa'ntered past hyar with a jug of licker, an' thet fool Fletch hes jest done follered 'em off. Thet's all thar is to hit an' he hain't got no license ter ack thetaway nuther. I reckon by now he's a-layin' drunk somewhars."

For a moment there was silence through which drifted the distant tinkle of cowbells down the creek. Beyond the crests lingered only a lemon afterglow as relict of the dead day. The brown, colourless man astride his mule sat stupidly looking down at the brown colourless woman across the stile. The waiting girl heard the preacher surmising that "mebby he'd betetr sot out in s'arch of Fletch." The words seemed to come from a great distance and her head swam giddily. Then overcome with disgust and weariness, Juanita Holland saw the afterglow turn slowly to pale grey and then to black shot through with orange spots. She grew suddenly indifferent to the situation. She swayed in her saddle and slipped limply to the ground. The young woman who had come to conquer the mountains and carry a torch of enlightment to their illiteracy, had fainted from heartsickness and weariness at the threshold of her invasion.

CHAPTER III.

The weariness which caused the fainting spell must have lengthened its duration, for when Juanita's lashes flickered upward again and her brain came gropingly back to consciousness she was no longer out by the stile. Yet there could not have been a great interval either for now as the girl looked up the parallelogram of a door frame showed that though the twilight was dying the twilight's ghost still lingered. At the top of the opening was yet a streak of afterglow, paling in greying, and over it hung a single, diamond-clear star.

She noticed that detail before she became aware of nearer things. Gradually consciousness ceased to be fragmentary. She was lying in the smothering softness of a feather bed. On her palate and tongue lingered an unfamiliar, sweetish taste, while through her veins she felt the coursing of a warm glow. Over her stood the woman who had been across the stile when she fainted. Her attitude was anxiously watchful. In one hand she held a stone jug, and in the other a gourd dipper. So that accounted for the taste and the glow, and as Juanita took in the circumstance she heard the high nasal voice, pitched none the less in a tone of kindly reassurance.

"Ye'll be spry as a squirrel in a leetle spell, honey. Don't fret yoreself none. Ye war jest plumb tuckered out an' ye swooned. I've been a rubbin' yore hands an' a pourin' a little white licker down yore throat. Don't worrit yoreself none. We're pore folks an' we hain't got much, but I reckon we kin mek out ter enjoy ye somehow."

The four walls of the cabin might have been the rocky confines of a mountain cavern, so completely did they merge into the impalpable and sooty murk that hung between them, obliterating all remoter outline. Only things in a narrow circle grew visible and at the centre of this lighted area was the slender figure of a girl, holding up a lard taper, whose radius of light was yellow and flickering.

The girl on the bed smiled and murmured her thanks, and as the other girl, younger and unspeakably shy felt the eyes of the strange woman from the great unknown world upon her, her own dark lashes fell timidly and the hand that held the taper trembled, while into her cheeks crept a carmine self-consciousness. She was looking at the most beautiful creature she had ever seen, and the diffidence with which her isolated little life had been always fettered grew as poignant as though she were in the presence of some rare and superior being. And juanita, for her part, felt in her veins a new and subtler glow than that which the moonshine whiskey had quickened. The men and women of the hills had made her heart-sick with their stolid and animal-like coarseness. Now she saw a slender figure in which the lines were yet transitory between the straightness of childhood and the budding curves of womanhood. She saw a well-borne head surmounted by a mass of tangled hair which the taper lighted into an aureole about a face delicately beautiful. The lips were poppy-red and the eyes were as blue as her own, while below the ragged hem of the short calico skirt bare and slender feet twisted with the restless shyness of a fawn's.

It was to such children of the hills as this that Juanita Holland was to bring the new teachings. But even as she smiled, the child, for she seemed to be only fifteen or sixteen, urrendered to her shyness and thrusting the taper into her mother's hand, shrunk out of sight in some shadowed corner of the place.

Then Juanita's eyes occupied themselves with what fragmentary details the faint light revealed. There was something like a rough stone grotto which she knew to be the fireplace. The barrel of a rifle caught the weak flare and glittered. The uncarpeted floor of rude puncheon slabs was a thing of gaping cracks, and overhead there was a vague feeling of low rafters from which hung strings of ancient and shrivelled peppers and a few crinkled "hands" of "natural leaf." But as her senses weakened she was most conscious of a reek such as that which clings about a shed where hams are cured; the reek of a windowless house in which the chimney has smoked until the timbers are darkened.

"Dawn," commanded the woman, "take yore foot in yore hand an' light out ter ther barn an' see ef ye kin find some aigs." Then as Juanita watched the door she caught a glimpse of a slight figure that vanished with the same quick noiselessness as that with which a beaver slips into water.

"I reckon ye kin jest lay thar a spell," apologised the woman, "whilst I goes out an' see what victuals I kin skeer up."

Left alone, the girl from Philadelphia ran over the events of the day and seemed to smother under a weight of squalor and foreboding. The taper had gone with the hostess and even the door darkened with the thickening of twilight. Once or twice she heard the surreptitious fall of a cautious bare foot, and though at first she could see nothing she knew that one of the children of the household had crept in to lie fascinatedly gazing toward her from one of the other beds. As her eyes slowly accustomed themselves to the darkness until their widening pupils could recognise degrees of pitchiness—separating comparative from superlative—she could make them out, in strange immovable little shapes of black. Even in their idle curiosity there was that note which had all day been growing to an obsession with her; the note which strikes the stranger in the hills, of never ending and grim suspense; of being constantly watched and followed by unseen eyes.

At length from the road came loud shouts of drunken laughter broken by the evident remonstrances of a companion who sought to enjoin quiet, and by these tokens the "furrin" woman knew that the lord of the squalid manor was returning, and that he was coming under convoy. She shrunk from an immediate meeting with Fletch McNash, whose ribald laughter proclaimed his condition, but if she went out by the only door she knew, she would have to confront him, so she lay still, shrinking with distaste as she heard her hostess berating the delinquent consort, and heard also the interjections of another voice whose words she could not catch, so low pitched and quiet was the manner of their utterance.

Fletch had been deposited in one of the split-bottom chairs about the broken mill-stone which served in lieu of a doorstep, and palpably his drink had left him mellow and genial, beyond vulnerability to badgering.

"I jest went over thar ter borry a hoe," he exculpated. "An' I met up with some fellers thet wouldn't hardly leave me go. Thar was all manner of free licker. They had white licker an' bottled-in-bond licker an' none of hit didn't cost nothin'. Them fellers jest wouldn't hardly suffer me ter come away."

"An' whilest ye war a-soakin' up thet thar free licker them potater sets was a-dryin' up, waitin' ter be sot out," came the ironical wifely reminder.

"I knows thet. I harn't hardly ought ter of did hit—but them fellers they jest wouldn't hardly suffer me ter leave thar."

Justice of Peace Praises Dr. Chase's Ointment

After Nine Years of Agony He Escaped an Operation by Using This Great Healing Agent.

As a means of healing sores and wounds that defy ordinary treatment Dr. Chase's Ointment has long stood supreme. It is known far and wide as a positive cure for eczema and piles. Whatever uncertainty there may be about the results obtained by the use of medicines taken internally there can be no question of the healing of the skin when Dr. Chase's Ointment is applied. You can actually see with your own eyes just what takes place. The sore parts are cleansed, and gradually the new skin is formed and the sore becomes smaller and smaller, until it finally disappears. It is often wonderful the results which are accomplished in a single night by the use of this great healing ointment.

MR. HEATH.

Mr. N. A. Heath, J.P., Pitch Bay, Que., writes: "Nine years ago I was taken with an abcess, and cannot begin to describe what I have suffered as a result. I was examined by two doctors, both of whom said I would have to undergo an operation to be cured. Thanks to Dr. Chase's Ointment, it has rendered an operation unnecessary, and has completely cured me. I cannot say enough in praise of this wonderful ointment which cured me after nine years of agony."

THE FLY IN WINTER.

Health Bulletin Tells of His Actions in Cold Weather.

Because the fly disappears with the advent of cold weather, do not consider him gone for good is the advice given in this month's Health Bulletin.

Maggots hatched late in the season may hibernate in manure, and the adult fly may hide in crevices.

All possible breeding places outside should therefore be eliminated at any season, while a thorough house-cleaning is as essential in the winter as in the spring and fall.

Don't overlook the attic, flig flies show a preference for undisturbed places during the cold season.

The more flies you shelter through the winter the more you will have to start with in the spring.

Don't forget that the common fly deposits over 100 eggs at a time when she begins to do business next spring.

FIGHT IT OUT

"And lead us not into temptation."—Matt. 6: 13.

At a time of complete discouragement, a young man went to an old friend and said: "It's no use; I cannot make good here. I am going down to South America and begin all over, and won't you promise to pray for me every day; every day, now, promise; you will pray for me every day." The agonizing intensity of despair with which these words were uttered will ring in that friend's ears as long as he lives.

A while later a young wife came; she was passing through a time of great temptation. On her conquering or her failing depended the peace of that home; the loyalty of her husband; the fate of her little ones. But she, confident of her own strength, did not seem to think she needed a higher, greater power above and beyond herself.

It is with a great sinking of the heart that that friend thinks of her. She seems to think she can scheme to enjoy the doubtful pleasure, deceive those nearest to her, and then at any moment break off from the harmful thing. Little does she realize that all the time, she is growing weaker and weaker, and it, stronger and stronger.

You that are now facing a sore temptation, you that feel you can not struggle any longer and must yield, won't you determine now, at this very moment, that you will fight it once for all and put the wrong right out of your life? May the sweet clabses of that wonderful prayer that you have been repeating since a little child, help you and strengthen you: "Deliver us from evil, for Thine is the kingdom and the power and the glory." The kingdom, the universe, and all the forces in it are God's, and all these are yours, to help you in that hard struggle. In your own power it will be impossible, in God's it is possible. Then, after the struggle and the conquest, comes the bitter-sweet joy, such as only those know who have been tested and come out victorious.—I.H.N.

LITTLE GIRL HAD CHRONIC COUGH

Left from Whooping Cough—Was Terribly Rundown and Weak—Mother Tells How She Was Cured by Vinol.

Philadelphia, Pa.—"My little girl aged thirteen years had the whooping cough which settled into a chronic cough, with a run-down system and lung trouble. She had to stay at home from school while being treated by the doctor, and nothing seemed to help her. I saw Vinol advertised and decided to try it. I soon noticed an improvement, and after giving her four bottles her cough is gone, her strength has returned and she has a good appetite. We think there is nothing like Vinol."—Mrs. M. WHITE, Philadelphia, Pa.

What Vinol did for this little girl it will do for others, for it is the healing, curative, tissue building influence of the medicinal elements of the extract of cod's livers aided by the blood making, strengthening properties of tonic iron which makes Vinol so successful in such cases, and children like to take Vinol because it is pleasant, and it is much better for them than "cough medicines" which have no strengthening power, while Vinol builds up the body and throws off the cough.

Remember, if Vinol fails to benefit, we return your money.

OWES HER LIFE TO "FRUIT-A-TIVES"

Cured Both Stomach Trouble and Headaches

PALMERSTON, ONT., JUNE 20th, 1913.

"I really believe that I owe my life to "Fruit-a-tives". Ever since childhood, I have been under the care of physicians and have been paying doctor's bills. I was so sick and worn out that people on the street often asked me if I thought I could get along without help. The same old Stomach Trouble and distressing Headaches nearly drove me wild. Sometime ago, I got a box of "Fruit-a-tives" and the first box did me good. My husband was delighted and advised a continuation of their use.

Today, I am feeling fine, and a physician meeting me on the street, noticed my improved appearance and asked the reason. I replied, "I am taking Fruit-a-tives". He said, "Well, if Fruit-a-tives are making you look so well, go ahead and take them. They are doing more for you than I can".

A NATIONAL CAMPAIGN

Why not a national advertising campaign for an increase in cheese consumption in Canada similar to the campaign recently conducted by the Dominion Department of Agriculture on behalf of the fruit industry? Such was the question recently discussed at a meeting of the Montreal Press and Advertising Club, following on an address before the club by Chas. C. Nixon, B.S.A., of Toronto.

Business men are coming to realise the close connection between urban and rural prosperity. Many of them are anxious to see more active measures taken for the promotion of agricultural development. The resolution adopted by the business men who compose the Montreal Press and Advertising Club reads in part as follows:

"We would suggest that, in connection with the cheese industry, much good work might be done in getting Canadian consumers in Canadian towns and cities to appreciate the food value of cheese, and by means of literature, to follow the advertising, much worthy work may be accomplished to foster the great Canadian cheese industry right here at home.

"We understand that the home market for cheese is in a far from satisfactory state, and that Canadian consumers pay more for our own Canadian cheese than is paid by the consumers in London, England. Might we suggest that some investigation work be undertaken by the Department concerned to place the home market of Canadian cheese upon a better basis, and make cheese in suitable quality and in suitable packages more readily available to our Canadian people.

"We also suggest that, inasmuch as it is apparent that the prosperity of Canadians in general rests so largely on the prosperity of our rural population, there being 65 per cent of the population of Canada represented as farmers, or being closely and directly dependent upon the farmers, some educational work be done by the proper Department of the Government in the interests of the farmers to give them knowledge and insight into the possibilities of salesmanship and advertising as applied to their interests pertaining to the selling and marketing of their produce. This could be accomplished by the publication of a monthly bulletin relating to selling problems and giving helpful information."

GIVE FACTORIES A CHANCE

Making Balaclava caps, socks and shirts for Canadian soldiers is all very well in its way. Many kindhearted women in this country have gone into this movement as a matter of patriotism or benevolence. But there are a number of women in Canada who have let the sentimental view of the case crowd out the tremendously practical side of it. Of course no one pretends that making these articles is not a practical business. It is a thousand times ahead of passing resolutions and engrossing memorials to governments and municipalities.

But once you begin to make benevolence practical you naturally want to make it as practical as possible. The fact is that there are in Canada hundreds and thousands of expert workers who are able to make these articles for Canadian soldiers. There are factories in Canada who turn these things out as a matter of business. They make them by the most economical modern methods at the lowest possible cost. The time spent by Canadian women in making these things by hand at a high cost could perhaps be devoted to better effect in using their higher talents in raising money for the cause, or in a thousand matters of practical benevolence right at home. The cost of these articles could as easily be paid to Canadian labor, which would reduce the present big problem of unemployment and keep Canadian homes comfortable. Instead of society women making these articles, the soldiers' wives and sweethearts can be employed to make them along with hundreds of other unemployed who at a time like this need work.

Let the women of Canada who are concerned about these useful benevolent deeds make them ten times more practically benevolent by seeing what they can do to increase the amount of employment to Canadian women who are out of work and whose employment means the prosperity of Canada.—Contributed.

CHRISTMAS

With the Household Editor

The Christmas spirit is in the air again. Since this time last year we have been so fully occupied with other things that we have scarcely taken a thought of Christmas, until suddenly we find that the Yule-tide season is almost upon us and immediately we begin to think of Christmas gifts and what we shall select.

One of the most important features to keep before us when selecting gifts is, not the costliness but the fitness of the gift. While we rely to a certain extent on the love of our friends to appreciate whatever gift we may give them, still it is well to tuck in a wee bit of real usefulness in each one if possible. A very good way of finding out what our friends would appreciate is to make a note of it when they express a wish and we will often times be surprised at some of the simple little things that people are doing without and which we could give them quite easily.

We who live in the country can send many little things right off the farm to our friends in town, which will be appreciated more than the gayest of gilt-edged gift books or other fancy articles which they see displayed every day, and which are ordinary to them. For instance, little fruit baskets could be nicely lined with red or white tissue paper and trimmed with red ribbon. In them might be placed some choice eating apples, a couple of dozen fresh eggs suitably packed, a pair of chickens all ready for the oven, something in the culinary line in which one is especially adept, a jar of favorite jam or jelly attractively wrapped, and so forth. For the children, boxes of home-made candy or pop corn daintily packed and trimmed with tinsel or some gay decoration, will always be greeted with delight.

When our friends live at a considerable distance, it is sometimes difficult to know what will be a suitable gift to send. If we are in doubt, we can fall back on handkerchiefs, as they are always useful and there is no danger of a person having too many.

A very easily made and inexpensive gift for the girl friend may be made from a pair of shoe trees. The wire portion of the trees are wound with ribbon and a dainty bow gives an attractive finishing touch. Pretty workbags, handkerchief cases and such like can be made fairly cheaply if one buys material enough to make several of a kind, and at Christmas time especially, pretty designs can be secured in ribbons.

For those of us who feel that we cannot afford to give presents to all the friends whom we would like to remember, there is an easy way of getting around the difficulty. We can sit down and pen a real Christmas letter, the very nicest we can frame, expressing genuine appreciation of their friendship and carrying to that friend love and good wishes. It is in just such little acts as this that we can carry out a real manifestation of the Christmas spirit.

TAKE SALTS TO FLUSH KIDNEYS

Eat Less Meat If You Feel Backachy or Have Bladder Trouble

Meat forms uric acid which excites kidneys occasionally. You must relieve them like you relieve your bowels; removing all the acids, waste and poison, else you feel a dull misery in the kidney region, sharp pains in the back or sick headache, dizziness, your stomach sours, tongue is coated and when the weather is bad you have rheumatic twinges. The urine is cloudy, full of sediment; the channels often get irritated, obliging you to get up two or three times during the night.

To neutralize these irritating acids and flush off the body's urinous waste get about four ounces of Jad Salts from any pharmacy; take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast for a few days and your kidneys will then act fine. This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and has been used for generations to clean clogged kidneys and stimulate them to normal activity, also to neutralize the acids in urine, so it no longer is a source of irritation, thus ending bladder weakness.

Jad Salts is inexpensive, cannot injure; makes a delightful effercescent litha-water drink which everyone should take now and then to keep the kidneys clean and active. Druggists here say they sell lots of Jad Salts to folks who believe in overcoming kidney trouble while it is only trouble.

WHY BIG GUNS ARE LATE.

Kaiser Had a Quarrel With the Krupp Engineer.

LONDON, Dec. 11.—(By mail to New York, Dec. 21.)—The true story of the delay in sending three 42 centimetre German guns to the Belgian coast has just leaked out.

An English army officer, who arrived to-day in charge of German prisoners, ascertained from one of them that the distinguished Krupp engineer, Herr Blesner, was sent to take charge of the fixing and transportation of the guns. On arriving at Antwerp he had a dispute with the Grand Duke of Wurtemburg and appealed to the Kaiser.

The Emperor told the engineer that he must take his orders without question. Herr Blesner replied in a manner which the Kaiser regarded as disrespectful, and the Emperor struck Blesner in the face.

The engineer returned to Essen and declared he would not resume his duties until the Kaiser apologized. The Krupps asked the Emperor to apologize, but he declined and requested that another engineer be sent. Up to the time of this writing no engineer had been found to take Blesner's place.

THE RED FLOWER of COURAGE

JOHN ROBERTS POINSETT

FRED KULZ

POINSETTIA PULCHERRIMA

GEORGE POINSETT

POINSETTIA, crimson flower of war, comes to us at the tide of Yule to deck the house and set its glow of good fellowship upon the hearth.

It came to us from Mexico, long a land of strife, but its name is from that of an American statesman and warrior, and in the sharp, short struggle at Vera Cruz it was rechristened in the blood of a kinsman of Joel Roberts Poinsett, George Poinsett, of the United States marines. The army under General Funston after its long occupation following the Tampico incident returns to the United States. The earth is still filled with war and the rumors of war, and fleets and armies battle by land and sea. The shriek of shrapnel has taken the place of the Christmas carol and the snow rests upon field and wold where only the dead remain.

It is fitting that now the poinsettia lifts its starred flower and reveals its tropical beauty in the bleak lands of the north. It grows in garden and in greenhouse throughout the United States and at this season its petals are imitated in paper to serve as decorations at Christmas.

The legends tell that centuries ago the blood red flower was borne by those who went as human sacrifices to the altars of the Aztecs. And yet as one goes back over the ages there comes to the mind the visions of the Druids in the forests of England gathering the mistletoe and the holly with sickles of gold to adorn the feasts to heathen deities, at which their fellow men were victims of mystic rites. And may it not be that the red flower of war, the poinsettia, may find its way into the symbolism of a gentler age? This is a world of change and the seed of strife may bring forth fruits of peace.

How strangely the ways of the sage and the warrior were blended in the personality of Joel Roberts Poinsett, who gave so much to the service of his country and yet of whom his country remembers comparatively so little! The killing of his kinsman, a young marine, in the attack on Vera Cruz recalled for a time that the name of Poinsett had figured in American annals generations ago, but soon the suggestion passed away and there are few even now who could off-hand recall the part which the distinguished publicist played in the development of our national ideals.

Joel Roberts Poinsett was an American of the highest type who, in spite of many obstacles, served his country with an ardor which came of unswerving devotion to the cause of liberty.

His descent was from the valiant defenders of Rochelle, the Huguenots. In his blood was the bravery of that same French race which to-day is fighting to drive the invader from its soil. He was born in 1779 in Charleston, S. C., and after an eventful life he came to the end of his days in the State of his nativity. Southern in his sympathies, he came at an early age in contact with the more practical life of the North, for he received his education in Timothy Dwight's school at Greenfield, Conn. Mr. Poinsett afterward studied at universities in England. His inclination from the first, although he was frail in body, was toward the profession of arms.

Eugene Brieux, the distinguished writer who recently brought to this country the greetings of the French Academy, spoke only last month of tyrants, great and small, and first he placed in the category the well meaning parent who forces his children into occupations for which they are unsuited because forsooth the father has made up his mind that the son must be merchant or lawyer or physician, just as the idea occurs to the mind of paternal authority. And so the father of Joel Roberts Poinsett decided that because his son seemed to have more leaning toward the life of the soldier than to any other he should know naught of the clash of arms. He commanded, instead, that the young man should study the law. Who knows but that the name of Poinsett might not have been that of one of the great military chieftains of the world if matters had worked out differently! In another age the blood red flower might have adorned a coat of arms and been the emblem of a race of warriors. It came to pass then that Joel Roberts Poinsett devoted himself to the law until his health gave way and he was sent on a tour of the world by his father. He travelled extensively in Europe and Asia, visiting many lands and peoples who were not then in the beaten tracks of travel. It was in these years of pilgrimage he obtained that wide knowledge of men and affairs so useful to him in later years. His linguistic accomplishments for he learned to speak numerous languages and dialects with fluency made him welcome not only in the courts of Europe but in the remote parts of Asia. He became the friend and adviser of Tartars, he mingled with the Cossacks of the Don, he was received in the courts of Cipango and Cathay. An unofficial ambassador, he brought to many a land the knowledge of the United States and was received as a typical American citizen. On account of his wide learning and varied accomplishments he became a welcome guest at the Russian Court in Petrograd, and there is to be found in his reminiscences a delightful account of a dinner at which he was the guest of the Tsar. The Emperor of Russia offered him a commission in the army, in which he was contemplating making changes of organization and personnel. The turn of affairs at home and the illness of his father compelled his return to the United States. After the estate of the elder Poinsett had been settled he applied to President Madison for military employment and was about to become quartermaster general of the army when the Secretary of War interfered.

Mr. Poinsett was then intrusted with the delicate diplomatic mission of finding out what was the state of the South American republics, which a century ago were engaged in their struggle for independence against the might of Spain. Although he was there as an ambassador, Mr. Poinsett was none the less obliged to be a man of action. He was in Chili when the Spanish representatives in Peru, believing that hostilities had broken out between the United States and Spain, seized several merchant vessels of this country. A force then marched into Chilian territory and at Talcahuano captured several other American craft.

Here was the opportunity for the born soldier who hitherto had been prevented by whims of destiny from following his natural bent. The new republic of Chili placed under the command of Mr. Poinsett a large force of men, who attacked the Spaniards and recaptured all the vessels. He was in Valparaiso in 1814, toward the close of the War of 1812 between the United States and Great Britain, when the American man of war Essex came to that region after a remarkable career as a commerce destroyer in the Pacific, to be destroyed by the superior strength of the Phoebe and the Cherub. Mr. Poinsett wished to return home, but he was regarded as a dangerous character by the British.

They refused to permit him to be sent back on the Essex, Jr., on which some American officers were being returned, to New York on parole. He therefore made the adventurous crossing of the Andes and landed in this country too late to offer his services for war, peace having been declared.

Civic affairs engaged his attention for many years to come. He was elected to the United States House of Representatives from his native South Carolina and became interested in public highways and other extensive schemes for internal improvement.

Mr. Poinsett went in 1822 on an important special mission to Mexico during the rule of Iturbide and afterward went there as the Minister from the United States. During one of the revolutionary outbreaks which for so many years have been a feature of the life of the republic to the south, certain prominent Mexican families took refuge in his house. He placed on the front of the building an American flag and, standing on the balcony, defied the mob to harm him or the building, which was then under the protection of the flag.

He became involved in a controversy with certain of the authorities in Mexico who accused him of introducing Freemasonry into the country. As a matter of fact, he had been asked by certain Freemasons in Mexico to send to the grand lodge of the State of New York for charters for their lodges, and this he did. On his return to the United States Mr. Poinsett wrote a vigorous pamphlet in defence of his action.

An intense federalist in his sympathies, he gave loyal adherence to the national government when his own South Carolina was the hotbed of nullification agitation. He became the leader of the Union party there. It is said that he secretly developed a powerful military organization which was ready on short notice to defend the cause of the Union. General Jackson, then President of the United States, gave him authority to get arms and ammunition from the government arsenal and the tradition is that he even had a commission of colonel in the regular army.

The following administration saw him Secretary of War of the United States. His influence in that office abides to this day. Mr. Poinsett brought about a radical reorganization of the artillery arm of the service and gave especial attention to the development of field batteries. His recommendation to Congress in 1840 that all States of the Union have their militia reorganized under federal supervision was far in advance of his time. There are many things in the National Guard organization of the present day, however, which were largely due to the recommendations of Mr. Poinsett.

His last public office had been filled when he closed his portfolio of War. The rest of his life, which was given so much to action and still more to great schemes which were always on the verge of action, was spent in studious retirement at Statesburg, where he died on September 12, 1851. He took interest still in public affairs and was one of the most earnest opponents of the war with Mexico.

His garden in the South gave him much pleasure and there it was that he cultivated the beautiful red flower he brought from Mexico and to which his fellow botanists gave the name of Poinsettia pulcherima. The popularity of this flower for decorations at this season of the year has been steadily growing and at the present time there are few who think of its Mexican origin, and regard it as a plant indigenous to this country.

To the scholar, the antiquarian and the scientist the name of Poinsett means much, for he was one of the founders of the National Museum at Washington and gave to it a most valuable collection. His discourse on "The Promotion of Science," delivered on the first anniversary of the opening, in 1841, is a document which is quoted to this day. Mr. Poinsett was also the founder of an academy of fine arts at Charleston, which existed for several years. There are in existence many of his unpublished papers besides his "Notes on Mexico," which have an important bearing on our national life. Columbia University, of this city, conferred upon him the degree of doctor of laws.

And from the career of the publicist and the statesman we go to the all too short one of a grand-nephew, George Poinsett, of the United States marines, over whose body at the Brooklyn Navy Yard only a few months ago the President of the United States spoke words of eulogy. Thus it is that fine American traditions, intelligent zeal in the performance of duty and devotion to the cause of country are all expressed in the petals of poinsettia, blood red flower of courage.

"If England Had Had 900,000 Territorials."

"THE territorial force as at present organized and equipped could no more stop the advance of a modern German army than could a colony of chickens stop the advance of a steam roller." So wrote Mr. John Graham, of Grasmere, author of "The Coming Struggle for Our National Existence," in a little pamphlet called "The National Peril" more than a year before war was declared.

"Two years ago," said his son, Mr. George Graham, who is connected with the Forty-eighth Street Theatre and has lived in New York for five years, "my mother wrote me that my father believed that there would be war with Germany in the summer of 1914, and set July or August as the probable time for its beginning. Moreover, he believed that it would not come through a direct declaration of war on England by Germany. My father was in France from 1868 to 1872 and he saw France drifting into war then, just as he has believed for the last few years that England was doing.

"He was enthusiastic about getting Territorials trained and equipped so that they would be ready to fight when the war came. In this he had the support of Lord Roberts, who pleaded in vain for a prepared England to meet a prepared Germany."

Although the government failed to appropriate the funds for this project, some of the wealthy men of England did all that they could to give the men of their estates and neighborhoods such drilling and equipment as were necessary. Both in Westmoreland county, where Mr. Graham lives, and elsewhere the owners of large estates have been lending the farmers' sons good horses and letting them learn to ride under as good conditions as if they were members of the regular cavalry.

Mr. Graham's brother-in-law, Mr. Chalmers, of Lanthgow, who owns very large estates, has been able to make up the losses in three Scottish regiments from Territorials who have been drilled through his efforts, most of them on his own places.

In the first days of the war London found it difficult to believe that there was to be any trouble that the fleet and the Russians could not take care of. The first thing that stirred the citizens to a fuller appreciation of the situation was the rumor, suddenly arising from the rigidity of the street, "The Territorials have been sent to the front."

The regular army could not cope with the situation—the "Terriers" had to go—it must be very bad. Then every one was asking why there weren't more Territorials to go. The government was attacked. "Good old Bobs"—every one suddenly remembered how Lord Roberts had struggled to get the Territorials properly equipped and drilled.

This is what Mr. John Graham said on the subject early in 1913:

"The government seems to think that they have performed their patriotic duties by making an occasional appeal to the youths of the country to come forward and join the territorial ranks and so be ready to defend their country against the skilled, well equipped, well led forces of the invader. And this they are to do with an obsolete rifle, inferior artillery, inefficient transport, lack of horses for both cavalry and artillery and led by inefficiently trained officers.

"The patriotism of young England is second to none in the world, but patriotism which smothers common sense is not patriotism at all, but folly. With universal service no invader will ever set foot in England, but with the present Ministers the policy of drift will continue until the blow is struck, and when the poor Territorials are assembling for their 'six months of rigorous training' they will be wiped out of existence.

"All the civilized world is now watching with almost breathless interest the astounding rapidity with which Germany is overtaking us in the building of battle ships," he wrote, still in 1913, "and all save ourselves feel sure that she will rest neither day nor night until she has outbuilt us, as she has already surpassed us in the output of her armaments. At Essen within the last two years the staff of workmen has swelled from 60,000 to 124,000, creating a productive capacity to keep pace with which will tax the resources of all our greatest firms.

"It is stated on reliable authority that the Krupps are now able to turn out guns, gun mountings and armor plates for ten battle ships in one year.

"'Germany strikes when Germany's hour has struck.' This is and always has been the policy of her Foreign Office. It was the relentless policy pursued by Bismarck against unprepared Denmark, against unprepared Austria and against unprepared France, and it is her policy at the present hour. Her immense advantage lies in the fact that she always has the initiative and can select her own time, which is extremely unlikely to be our time. As the late Lord Roberts so impressively put it: 'At the present day, now, in the year 1913, just as in 1860 and just as in 1870, war will take place the instant German forces by land and by sea are, by their superiority at every point, as certain of victory as anything in human calculation can be made certain.

"Now when Lord Roberts, the most experienced and probably the greatest living soldier in Europe, tells us it is his firm conviction, founded upon evidence, past and present, that in the heart of one nation on the Continent it is the intention to lower the pride of Great Britain to the dust, a fact which must be clear to the mind of every man capable of reading the signs of the times, he is called 'a dreamer,' and the government tries to wave him aside.

"The government in its wisdom waved aside the advice of our best naval and military authorities. Lord Kitchener, the man of all others peculiarly fitted for the emergency, was sent to Egypt and a lawyer put in his place. Our highly efficient regular army was reduced by 30,000 and the militia and volunteers abolished. A scheme emerged to give us a highly trained, thoroughly equipped territorial force of 900,000 men of the best blood in the land.

"Unfortunately no persuasion could bring 900,000 recruits into the field and the great scheme had to be reduced by two-thirds. Now we know that even this small force cannot be got by voluntary enlistment. The present actual strength on paper of the promised 900,000 is 281,000, and of these only 141,000 have qualified in musketry."

CONFLICT IS NOW IMMINENT ON THE MEDITERRANEAN

Italy and Greece Have Ancient Scores to Settle With Turkish Empire.

German Officers Hard at Work Drilling and Mobilizing the Turks.

OF secondary interest only to the great struggle now actually being waged in Europe is the curious situation which is shaping up in the Mediterranean where Turkey, Greece and Italy all stand on the verge of participating in the conflict. Any day's despatches now may bring word that one of them has plunged into war and only a few hours can elapse after such a declaration of war before the other two will be involved.

Only one thing now is certain to bring Italy into the arena and that is the opening of hostilities against the Triple Entente by Turkey. Italy was never a strong member of the Triple Alliance. Her hatred of Austria under whose domination she spent so many years of cruel slavery, is too strong ever to make a war alongside Francis Joseph's soldiers popular with the Italian people, and nothing but the iron hand of Bismarck ever drew her into the Central European alliance. That astute statesman foresaw the need of easy access to the Mediterranean as well as another frontier along which the German allies might attack France, and Italy with her dread of the menace of the Austro-Italian border, dared not refuse to enter the pact. Since the Triple Alliance was formed things have changed in Europe and in Italy. Popular upheavals have put the governance of that country more in the hands of the people than in either Germany or Austria, and popular sentiment forbade the Government going to war alongside her allies, and on the technicality that she was only bound to assist Austria and Germany if they were the victims of aggression, Italy remained neutral.

KAISER WANTS "HOLY WAR."

Within the past month events have occurred which still further modified Italy's attitude to Austria and Germany. The Kaiser has been moving heaven and earth to drag Turkey into the war against Great Britain and France, in the hope that with the aid of a Mohammedan ally he could start a "holy war," which would seriously embarrass both Britain and France with their Mohammedan subjects in India, Egypt, Algeria, and Madagascar. Every ounce of pressure has been brought to bear upon the Sublime Porte to force that highly Germanised Government into the fight against Sedvia. The sale of the cruisers Goeben and Breslau, now lying off Constantinople with their German crews, was part of the scheme, and it is known that German officers are now busy in Turkey mobilizing the troops and preparing for hostilities against the Triple Entente. Turkish diplomats insist that the move is purely defensive, but there is no doubt the German Government looks forward to the assistance of Turkey as an offensive ally.

Nothing could so surely settle the role of Italy in the present war. Her recent war with Turkey in Tripoli and Benghazi has left a strong bias against the Ottoman Empire with the Italian people, and apart from popular sentiment Italy would from purely commercial reasons resent any warlike activity on the part of her ancient rival.

As for Greece, her action is easily predicted. She is under bond to act in concert with Servia against Turkey, and even without a treaty would lose no time in assailing the Mohammedan if he showed any disposition to attempt the recovery of his Balkan war losses.

TURKEY'S SMALL CHANCE.

The immediate outcome of such a conflict is easy enough to predict. It would mean that the fleets of Great Britain, France, Italy and Greece would be pitted against those of Turkey. Austria and Germany on the Mediterranean side, and Russia would descend swiftly on the Bosphorus from the Black Sea.

Turkey's only hope of success would lie in the eventual success of German-Austrian arms in Europe, in which case her reward would be a slice of her lost European territory and possible tit-bits in North Africa. Her payment in case of failure would be the loss of Constantinople and the Bosphorus to Russia. The odds are against her, but with Germany urging her on to a "holy war" and foes on every side Turkey has little choice. Recent despatches say that public prayer for Germany has already been ordered by the Sultan, who is the official head of Islam.

Sultan Mahomed V. has probably little stomach for war. He is essentially a man of peace, but his advisers are war lords, with German ideals. Mahomed himself has spent most of his life in imprisonment at the hands of his brother, the notorious Abdul Hamid, upon whose disposition in 1909, Mahomed was released and made Sultan. He is seventy years of age, and described as a kindly, peaceable man, but of no particular weight as a ruler or diplomat.

ITALIAN KING POPULAR.

After the rulers whose countries would be involved in such a struggle the biggest figure in European affairs is Victor Emmanuel III. of Italy, the third constituted King of that country. He is the son of the martyred King Humbert I., who was assassinated in 1900, and is immensely popular with the Italian people. Long before he ascended the throne he had won the respect and confidence of Italians and the world at large, and his kindliness and rectitude of purpose are universally acknowledged. Quite as popular as King Victor is his Queen, who was the Princess Helene of Montenegro.

The third monarch who would be involved is Constantine of Greece, a newcomer to the galaxy of crowned heads in Europe, and like Victor Emmanuel, the son of a murdered King. King Constantine ascended the throne about a year ago, when his father King George I. was murdered. King Constantine is a nephew of Queen Alexandra, and also of the Dowager Empress of Russia. He is therefore a cousin to both King George and Czar Nicholas. So far relationships and his national alliance harmonize, but his wife is a sister of the Kaiser. Such divisions of family are common enough, however, in the present war, and neither King Constantine nor Queen Sophia will hesitate to throw in their lot against Kaiser Wilhelm if conditions require it. Constantine is a brilliant soldier and covered himself with glory in the Balkan wars.

NARROW ESCAPES.

Sir John Jellicoe Three Times at Death's Door.

For they say there's a Providence sits up aloft,
To keep watch o'er the life of poor Jack.

Dibdin's familiar lines must long ago have impressed themselves on the mind of Admiral Sir John Jellicoe, Commander-in-Chief of the Home Fleet, for surely no sailor has experienced more narrow squeaks. Several times he has escaped death by little short of a miracle.

The first exciting episode in his career occurred in 1880, when he was serving as lieutenant on H. M. S. Monarch, near Gibraltar. The weather was thick and stormy, and early one morning a Glasgow steamer, the Ettrickdale, was stranded off Europa Point, on the Spanish coast, about three miles from Gibraltar, with heavy seas breaking over her. All attempts of her crew to get the vessel off failed.

The Monarch had gone out for target practice, and had left all her boats but one small one behind. Seeing the almost hopeless position of the steamer, the commander of the Monarch called for volunteers, and Lieut. Jellicoe and seven seamen got into the small boat and pulled for all they were worth. The boat, however, could not live in such a mountainous sea, and was quickly capsized. Fortunately each man had donned a cork jacket before starting, and after a terrible struggle in the waves all of them were washed ashore more dead than alive. Finally the crew of the steamer were rescued by a Spanish fishing boat, Lieut. Jellicoe and his gallant comrades being rewarded by the Board of Trade with medals.

The story of how he lost the medal is the story of another of Admiral Jellicoe's escapes from death. This occurred on June 22nd, 1893, when he was in command of Admiral Tryon's flagship Victoria, which was run into and sunk by the Camperdown in the Mediterranean, resulting in the loss of 300 lives. At the time of this terrible catastrophe Admiral Jellicoe was down with a sharp attack of fever, and was confined to his bunk. When the crash came he struggled from his bunk and staggered up on deck clad only in his pyjamas. He stood on the bridge with flags in his hands ready for signals when suddenly the great vessel sank, and he was flung into the whirling waves.

Too weak with fever to do much to save himself, he would undoubtedly have perished had it not been for a young midshipman who helped him to struggle away from the sinking ship. Admiral Jellicoe's medal went down with the rest of his property, and when the Board of Trade was informed of the loss the hero was told that he could have another medal by paying for it.

End Came Quickly.

The experiences of local jewelers with prospective bridegrooms have been many and varied. Some wish to buy on the instalment plan, some wish to take a half dozen sizes to be sure of a fit and some bring "beautiful verses" to see whether they can be engraved in the ring.

One jeweler in recounting his experiences said a young man came into his store and when asked whether he wished anything engraved inside the ring became confused, fumbled a bit in his pockets and finally produced a paper on which was scrawled, "The love that never endeth," which the jeweler said was just the proper sentiment.

A month later the young man returned and told the whole history of his marital life in five words, "Can't you cut that out?" pointing to the engraved sentence.

Duke's Interest In Horses.

The Duke of Teck, who is to be president of the forthcoming Richmond Horse Show, has been devoted all his life to horses. Horses in general attract him, and horses for polo-playing in particular. His Serene Highness has signalled his presidency of the Richmond Show by presenting a magnificent trophy, the Teck Cup, to be won outright in a jumping competition for officers in uniform. The duke has apartments in Henry III.'s tower, Windsor Castle, where is gathered one of the most interesting collections of curios ever gleaned from the corners of the globe. The duke was military attache in Vienna for some time, and has seen service in most foreign countries.

G. B. S.'s Suspicions.

Mr. G. B. Shaw has a way of his own, even on post cards. A second-hand book-seller secured, in the ordinary way of business, a manuscript of his story, "Love Among the Artists." The book-seller told Mr. Shaw that he held it, thinking, perhaps, that the author would be as keen a purchaser as anybody. "Excuse me, where did you get it? . . . Are you a book-seller by day and a burglar by night?" wrote "G.B.S." The book-seller is still asking one hundred guineas for his "find"; the post card he will not part with.

Radway's Ready Relief

E. B. Baldwin, of McGee, Me., writes: "I had a number of attacks of sciatica, lasted three doctors, but did not get much relief. A friend insisted on me trying R. R. R. and sent me two bottles. In twenty minutes after the first application I could turn in bed with ease. Have used two bottles and am well."

Rheumatism

Apply the Relief externally to the part or parts affected, as briskly as circumstances will permit. Benefit will also be derived from Radway's Pills, their alterative action being chiefly noticed in that disease. Where the Blood are enriched, pure or contaminated, the Relief, when rubbed on, is an unfailing remedy.

Presents for Belgian Children Ready For Distribution.

ROTTERDAM, Holland, Dec. 22 (Via London). The Belgians allotment of the Christmas presents brought here by the United States naval collier Jason has been divided into three parts and forwarded to Antwerp, Brussels and Liege, whence the toys will be distributed throughout the country.

Unfortunately, owing to the frontier regulations, it was necessary to unpack all the packages and to remove letters and Christmas messages written for the most part by American children.

The Dutch Government has granted free railroad transportation of the American food supplied to Belgium.

Thaw Must Go Back.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 22.—Harry Thaw lost his fight yesterday in the Supreme Court of the United States, against being extradited from the State of New Hampshire to the State of New York.

In a brief decision by Justice Holmes, which was the unanimous decision of the court, it was held that he should be turned over at once to the New York authorities to answer an indictment charging conspiracy to escape from Matteawan asylum for the criminal insane.

Rich Ore Find Made.

NORTH BAY, Dec. 22.—Several prospectors arrived in town yesterday morning from Ruthergien, a settlement about 29 miles from North Bay, with excellent samples of gold, silver, copper, platinum, radium and iron. The discovery has raised quite a furore about town. About 2,000 claims have already been staked.

RUSSIA SURPRISED AT AUSTRIAN RESISTANCE.

PETROGRAD, Dec. 15.—Since the war began Austria has lost 36 commanding generals and 190 colonels and other officers in proportion, but they have rallied to the task of beating back the Russians in a way which is arousing even the admiration of the Russian military authorities, here and at the front. The crushing effect of the recent Austrian defeats is shown by the fact that the last ten casualty lists issued in Vienna contained nearly 40,000 names. But their power of resiliency is one of the surprises of the campaign.

The heaviest losses have fallen upon the Hungarian regiments. Most of the prisoners are Slav conscripts who have no heart in the fighting, and are more in sympathy with the Russians than they are with the Austrians.

BRIEFS FROM THE WIRES

Loder Ignatoff, a Bulgarian, who stabbed a countryman about a week ago in Berlin, Ont., has been sentenced by Judge Hanning to three years in the Kingston Penitentiary.

The Norwegian steamer Anita, 734 tons, from Halifax for Jamaica by way of Turk's Island and Santiago, Cuba, is stranded on North Caicos Island, and probably will be a total loss.

The Ontario Mounted Rifles, the mounted section of the Exhibition camp, Toronto, are all armed with the Lee-Enfield gun instead of the Ross rifle, and it is likely they will retain this arm when they go to the front.

An order for 120,000 shovels has been placed in Canada by Frederick Stobart, purchasing representative of the British War Office. Mr. Stobart must also make arrangements to purchase no less than twenty-eight million trouser buttons.

HEAD STUFFED FROM CATARRH OR A COLD

Save Cream Applied in Nostrils Opens Air Passages Right Up.

Instant relief — no waiting. Your clogged nostrils open right up; the air passages of your head clear and you can breathe freely. No more hawking, snuffling, blowing, headache, dryness. No struggling for breath at night; your cold or catarrh disappears.

Get a small bottle of Ely's Cream Balm from your druggist now. Apply a little of this fragrant, antiseptic, healing cream in your nostrils. It penetrates through every air passage of the head, soothes the inflamed or swollen mucous membrane and relief comes instantly.

It's just fine. Don't stay stuffed-up with a cold or nasty catarrh.

EXAMINER PATTERN SERVICE

There are only two seaming places, the shoulder seam and the dart under the arm. The dart is very useful because it fits the apron to the figure where a little fitting is needed. A single button at the top, in back, fastens the apron. The pocket is not a necessity, but many people like to have such a thing, even two, one on each side. Any of the apron materials can be used, such as gingham, calico or percale, plain, striped, checked or figured.

These big aprons are needed when arduous work of some sort must be done, but there are many occasions where a small apron is quite enough protection. Some of them are very dainty, made of dotted Swiss, fine lawn, organdy and batiste. Whether they shall be trimmed or not depends upon the person and the amount of time available for such things. It is doubtful, however, if there is any good reason for spending much time on aprons, in view of the fact that they are always intended to protect something else. If they are made elaborate with lace and embroidery it might happen sometimes that they required more protection than the dress beneath. Logic is rather against the elaborate apron.

Price, 10 cents.

When ordering remember to give your name and address as well as the number and size of pattern required and age of a child.

Target Tips and Hunting Helps by Alfred P. Lane

Send questions to Mr. Lane, care of this paper.

A WORD ABOUT THE MAN WHO WILL ANSWER THE QUESTIONS.

Most readers of the sporting page of this paper do not need an introduction to Alfred P. Lane, the man who is pointing a revolver straight between your eyes from the head of this column.

Those who follow the shooting sport at all will recall that Mr. Lane, then just bursting out of his 'teens, made a clean sweep of the pistol and revolver championships for Uncle Sam at the Olympic Games, Stockholm, in 1912. In these competitions, the young American was pitted against the short arms experts of the world and his triumph was heralded as one of the noteworthy achievements of shooting history.

Before going to the Olympic Games, Mr. Lane has made three world's records and had won the indoor pistol championship of the United States. His shooting has kept up to championship standard without a relapse, the latest important winning with which he is credited having been the grand aggregate of the revolver ranges at the 1914 Sea Girt tournament.

Starting with a .22 calibre rifle—practicing in his father's cellar as a boy — Mr. Lane has grown up with a natural penchant for firearms of all sorts, being almost equally expert with pistol, revolver, rifle and shotgun. Along with this inclination toward "shooting irons," Mr. Lane has been able to carry an exceptional faculty for concentration and analysis, and a natural talent for things mechanical and scientific. He digs into shooting subjects and goes to the bottom. Not content with claims, he is continually conducting experiments with arms and ammunition to satisfy not only his own inquiring mind, but to answer intelligently the continual flow of questions that come to him, as an authority, from individuals, publications and many other sources.

There is no doubt that Mr. Lane is peculiarly adapted to handle queries that may come to him from readers of the Examiner.

MR. LANE MAKES HIS BOW.

Interest in shooting in all of its branches has greatly increased of late. More trap shooting, rifle and revolver clubs are being organized, and the public in general is making insistent demands upon authoritative sources for information covering the whole field of the sport.

Because of the number of questions which the Sporting Editor of the Examiner has received, he has arranged with me to take care of a department on the subject.

This column is open to queries on any subject concerning the use of firearms for hunting or target work. If space permits, I will also throw the column open to discussions, by readers, of various types of firearms and other things pertaining to the sport.

On questions regarding the abundance or scarcity of game in any particular locality, there will be some delay, as in most cases it will be necessary for me to write to some correspondent living in the section asked about.

Please make your questions as specific and definite as you possibly can. Such questions as "Which is the best revolver?" or "What rifle shall I use for big game hunting?" obviously cannot be answered. Give me all the details, such as the conditions under which the arm is to be used and just what you expect to be able to do with it. If your questions are of such a nature that a lengthy answer is necessary, send me a stamped, self-addressed envelope and I will write to you personally. All questions should, of course, be sent to me in care of this paper.

Unsigned communications will receive no attention, but the writer's name will be withheld if he desires.

From my experience with this line of work I am led to anticipate that many questions will be asked which will be, in substance, identical, and therefore an answer to one such will answer all the rest.

The Dum Dum Bullet.

There is one question which I know will be among the first, and that is "What is a dum-dum bullet?" so I'm going to answer that one right now.

A dum-dum bullet is, broadly speaking, any bullet designed to expand upon striking soft material such as flesh. The regular hunting cartridge used for big game is a dum-dum because it has a soft lead nose sticking out of the front end of the bullet's metal jacket. When such a bullet strikes flesh, it "mushrooms," i.e., the soft lead nose spreads out like the top of a mushroom and the result is a big hole which usually kills the animal struck. Cartridges for use in war have large pointed bullets and are supposed to drill a neat little hole, which, if not perforating a vital part, will heal quickly. The only trouble is, pointed bullets frequently act erratically and instead of going straight through, they tip and tumble end over end and tear a hole just like one made by a dum-dum. This peculiar phenomenon occurs mostly at the shorter ranges and is perhaps the cause of the accusations regarding the use of dum-dums by both sides in the present European trouble.

Now hustle along with your questions!

ABOUT CHEESE

Makers and patrons know their side of cheese business and their complaints are often voiced. It is not often, however, that we hear from the merchants in public. Eastern Ontario dairymen, however, had that opportunity at one of their recent conventions. Mr. W. C. Wieland spoke for the Montreal Produce Merchants' Association.

"The Montreal Produce Merchants' Association," said Mr. Wieland, "believe that all concerned in the dairy business should get what is rightly coming to them. I know that we are not generally given credit for such sentiments.

"I can remember," he continued, "when September cheese could be bought for nine and one-half cents to 10 cents. In 1903 all cheese bought for 10 cents lost the dealer money. Nowadays we pay 12 to 12½ cents. Expenses have gone up, I know, but not in the same percentage as has the price, and I believe the farmer is getting a pretty fair price for what he makes."

Speaking more directly of his own business, Mr. Wieland said: "No business is conducted on such a narrow margin as the cheese trade. One-quarter to one-half a cent a pound is considered good profit. Winter stocks used to yield a decent profit, but now New Zealand cheese comes on the market during our winter, and kills the trade. Cheese bought at 12 cents to 12½ cents here is sold to the consumer in Britain at 14 to 16 cents. Only occasionally does it reach 17 cents. Compare this margin with the ordinary margin of business, and you will see that it is narrow indeed."

FIRE DESTROYS HORN WOOLLEN MILLS OF LINDSAY

The Factory Was Busy on War Office Orders and the Loss is Heavy—Great Loss to Wage Earners

175 PEOPLE AFFECTED

LINDSAY, Dec. 23.—The extensive mills of the Horn Bros. Woollen Co. were totally destroyed by fire yesterday evening. Fire broke out between 6 and 7 o'clock, and owing to the inflammable nature of the contents the flames were soon beyond control. The mills have been working night and day filling orders for blankets for the Canadian overseas army and upwards of 175 people were employed at good wages. The loss to the town and to the wage-earners employed in the mills will be almost irreparable.

Relief will be dispensed on the same scale as provided by the Canadian Patriotic Fund.

It is proposed to increase the membership of the committee and to add some one connected with the local militia.

Emergency Cases.

The Relief Association Funds will be used to assist persons in need residing in Peterborough and immediate vicinity as the committee may in their discretion, desire to aid. Relief Officer Miller to report to the committee all cases of need that the committee may decide to aid and that in cases of emergency, the chairman and Relief Officer be authorized to assist all such cases and the aid given be reported to the committee at a subsequent meeting.

DANNY SIMONS MAKES A HIT IN CALGARY

A Calgary Exchange says of Danny Simons, the well-known local comedian: "Danny Simons, 'The Military Hobo,' is making as big a hit this week at the Pantages as any comedian who has ever appeared over the circuit of theatres Danny not only seems to have discovered the way to make people laugh, but he is demonstrating at every performance that he is a real artist in character impersonation. His twenty-minute offering consists of three characterizations, the first as Colour-Sergeant of the Regiment, the second as "Sandy," the Scotchman, and the last as "Theodore Roosevelt at the Battle of Santiago. In the first two Danny keeps his audience in wars of merriment by his songs, talk and dances, but in the last, the impersonation of Roosevelt, he arouses veritably to hysterics. Danny has made friends in Calgary during his last visit here, and this week is largely increasing this circle."

C.O.F. ORDERED TO PAY.

Court Holds He Is To Be Presumed Dead.

Mr. Justice Britton has given judgment at Osgoode Hall in favour of Mrs. Carl Linke against the Canadian Order of Foresters for $1,000, the amount of a policy on the life of her husband. The Order alleged that there had been no proofs of death of Linke, who disappeared in 1907 after saying that he was going to visit Preston, and who has not been heard of since. He left a wife, whom he married in 1899, and two children. His home was in Berlin, where he lived with his mother-in-law. Mr. Justice Britton holds that the man is to be presumed dead, having been absent for several years and nothing having been heard of him.

GAINS MADE ALONG THE BELGIAN COAST

Between the Sea and the Road Between Nieuport and Westende the Allies Have Advanced---British and French Make Progress Near Bixschoote.

Special Cable:

PARIS, France, December 23.—The full text of the official communique follows:

"We made slight progress in Belgium between the sea and the road from Nieuport to Westende, in the region of Steenstrawe and Bixschoote we progressed, capturing a wood near Bixschoote.

"East of Bethune the French and the British troops re-captured the village of Givenchy.

"A fog interfered with the operations in the region of Arras. East of Amiens, in the Aisne and Champagne regions, there was cannonading.

"We captured the last line of trenches which were previously retaken in the region of Porthes and Leshurluex, gaining 800 yards.

"Guns and prisoners were captured.

"Progress was also made in the region of Beau-sejour. In La Crurie forest we captured 400 yards of trenches.

"About Bourielles we were unable to retain the great advantage obtained yesterday."

The statement also outlines the situation of the eastern front, confirming the repulse of the Germans along the Neidenburg-Lautemburg line and stating that the Germans have reached the Bzura and Rawaka rivers in their advance on Warsaw. The operations in Southern Poland and Galicia are also confirmed.

Germany and Austria are to be cut off entirely from all French trade. Commercial relations between France and her enemies are completely severed by a bill introduced in the Chamber of Deputies to-day.

This will make trading with German or Austrian subjects an offence punishable by imprisonment or heavy fine.

PARIS, December 23.—Slight progress along the fighting front, marked by the retaking of the village of Givenchy, east of Bethune, and the advance of the British and French in the region of Bixschoote, is reported in the official communique to-day. The statement announces gains along the Belgian coast between the sea and the road between Neiuport and Westende. Advances were made in the region of Steenstrawe and near Bixschoote. The French and British troops together captured a stretch of woods held by the Germans. A fog interfered with the operations in the region of Arras yesterday, the statements asserts. East of Amiens in the Aisne and Champagne regions there was heavy cannonading. Lively combats are reported in the regions of Berthes, Beau-sejour and La Grurie woods in the Argonne.

PARIS, December 23.—The greatest obstruction to the advance of the allies are the hundreds of miles of barbed wire entanglements which the Germans have thrown up all along their lines. The French have now adopted grappling iron arrangements thrown from cannons on a rocket which grapples these entanglements which are then dragged out of their places by traction engines, leaving the course clear for bayonet charges.

CONFIDENCE IS PLACED IN GEN. JOFFRE

Session of French Parliament is Marked by Unprecedented Patriotism and Enthusiasm

ADVANCE CONTINUES

SPECIAL TO THE EXAMINER:

PARIS, Dec. 23. — The unanimous approval of all government measures to be presented to Parliament is assured to-day, and with adjournment to-morrow with all measures enacted, the session marked by unprecedented patriotism and enthusiasm will pass into history. Complete confidence is placed in General Joffre, the supreme commander of the French forces.

The attack of the French and British troops to-day continued throughout the battle line. It is evident, however, that the shifting of the German troops or the arrival of reinforcements have resulted in the German resistance being strengthened. The action along the coast continues to be marked with heavy bombardments. Between Arras and Rheims the infantry attacks have been especially violent.

RUSSIAN MAIN LINE 20 MILES FROM WARSAW

Russians Are Stubbornly Opposing Attempts of Germans to Cross Bzura and Rawka Rivers But the Enemy is Pressing for Every Advantage.

Special Cable to The Examiner:

LONDON, December 23.—The main line of the Russian defence before Warsaw has been withdrawn to within 20 miles of the Polish capital. This was indicated in the reports from Petrograd to-day of desperate fighting which is in progress west and south west of that city. The Russians are stubbornly opposing the attempts of the Germans to cross ehe Bzura and Rawka rivers. but the forces of Field Field Marshall Von Hindenburg have succeeded in establishing themselves in strong positions and are pressing for every advantage.

BUENOS AIRES, December 23.—The German cruiser Dresden and all other German supply ships and merchant vessels, are being searched for in both the Atlantic and Pacific waters to-day by the British-Japanese fleets and the warships of Peru, Brazil, Argentine and Chile, the latter countries being determined to prevent any further violations of neutrality. The countries allege that the German ships are guilty of repeated violations of neutrality.

British Alliance Says Sending Envoy to the Vatican is Illegal.

LONDON, Dec. 23. — The appointment of Sir Henry Howard as a special Minister to the Vatican has called forth a protest from the Protestant Alliance, which denounces the appointment as illegal.

The Northern Church Council of the Church Association, at its December meeting in Manchester, has framed an appeal to the King's Ministers in which it is stated that diplomatic relations between England and the Vatican have been discontinued for 400 years, and asking for the withdrawal of the present mission, which it says, "cannot but give grave offence to a vast majority of Englishmen."

The protest continues: "This council regrets that any action taken by his Majesty's Government at this time of crisis in the nation's history should place upon the country a controversy which will strain to the uttermost the endeavors of all loyal Englishmen to sink all differences and work together for the defence of the Empire."

XMAS MAIL VERY HEAVY

Express Companies and Post Office Employ Extra Help and Staffs Are Working Overtime

In the sending of post cards, letters and parcels, large and small, the Christmas activity for this year is now in full swing. Nineteen extra men have been taken on by the local postal authorities and are finding it all they can do to handle the annual Christmas rush. If the number of parcels, letters, etc., sent by mail, is in any indication of the amount of money spent this year, there has been very little falling off from the normal. Five extra post office clerks are kept busy with the regular staff, collecting, sorting and despatching letters, cards and parcels.

Last night the English mail came in and was very heavy. Parcels predominated, and many local homes were cheered to-day by thoughtful Christmas greetings and useful Christmas presents from friends and relatives in the old country. The post office is thronged and has been thronged for the past two days, from early morning till closing time. To-day stamps were on sale at the general delivery, as well as the usual wicket, and both vendors were kept busy throughout the day. Fifteen extra post men are delivering the mail in this city.

The Express companies are equally busy. Both have extra men meet the trains from every direction, and both local companies are as busy as can be delivering and sending parcels of every size.

'We have got all we can handle,' said a Dominion Express man to the Examiner to-day. "Both going out and coming in, a delivery rig left the office early this morning and has not yet put in an appearance. It may take the driver all day to get rid of his cargo of presents." So in spite of the hard times cry, or whether conditions of hard times may actually exist, there can be no doubt that the usual number of presents are being exchanged by friends in different parts of the globe.

A PUBLIC SKATING RINK

The Matter Will Come Before City Council This Evening

The question of a free public skating rink will receive the consideration of the City Council this evening. His Worship Mayor Buller stated to-day that the necessary permission had been secured from the Government to use the site selected for the Post Office and Customs House that was to have been erected last summer. This site is at the corner of George and Sherbrooke streets. The magnesite are light at the street corner will be sufficient to illuminate the rink. There is a shed on the property which, with a little repair, will make a first-class building wherein to adjust skates and get a chin-heat. The work of looking after the rink will devolve upon one of the unemployed.

GOOD OUT OF EVIL.

The German Kaiser in his war against humanity and all that humanity holds dear, has outraged the spirit of Christianity, but he has not been able to kill the Christmas spirit of peace and good will and unity of sentiment throughout the British Empire. He expected, and his lying spies reported, that if Britain were involved in a war there would be dissension at home, rebellion in Ireland, dissension and aleofness, if not something more in Canada, rebellion in South Africa, sedition in India, and the declaration of a jehad or holy war among the Moslem subjects of the Empire. He blasphemously called down the blessing of Heaven on his alliance with Turkey, which was to promote culture and Christianity by the slaughtering of Christians. Germany's chief reason of embracing the gentle Turk as an ally, was to embarrass Great Britain by the proclamation of a holy war that would involve her Moslem population in India and Egypt by uniting them against Christianity of which Britain is the greatest representative in the world. In this the Kaiser has met another of the thick-coming disapointments that have struck him from the beginning. He made one of the blunders, which in diplomacy is classed as a crime. He was much deceived in thinking that the Sultan of tottering Turkey held any place of influence in the Moslem world. His claim to be "Commander of the Faithful" has been repudiated. India, with a Mohammedan population of 64 millions out of a total population of 244 millions, has repudiated his leadership. Aga Khan, president of the Moslem League of India, Mohammedan leader, tells his people that Turkey is "a vassal of Germany," and that she draws the sword "in an unholy cause"; that she "has lost her position of trustee of Islam." In a word the Mohammedans of India are invited and incited, as they are actually doing, to fight against Turkey and her Christian ally, Germany. We were told from German-American sources, that the Ameer of Afghanistan was ready to "follow the call of the Calif and declare war against his hereditary enemy, England." In answer to this the Viceroy of India received from the Ameer, a letter expressing the general feeling of Moslem regret at Turkey's action, and asserting his determination to maintain the neutrality of Afghanistan. The emmissaries of Turkey sent to Afghanistan, India, Persia, Egypt, and Morocco, to incite a holy war against Great Britain, and Christianity have failed. Even the Moslems have more sense of fitness, more principle than Germany. If they declared a holy war against Christianity they would have to fight Germany as a Christian nation, though perhaps the Kaiser thought that he had so thoroughly de-Christianized Germany in principle and practice, that she would be immune from the effects of a "holy war" against Christianity.

The Kaiser has succeded in one or two things. He has failed in inciting a holy war, but he has succeeded in creating and waging the most unholy war of history. His alliance with Turkey is a delusion and a snare. But he has made one alliance that sticks. He has allied himself with the Prince of Darkness, and the devil is working cordially with him. Witness the diabolical work of murderous militarism in devastated Belgium; witness the work of the baby-killers on the east coast of England. Germany has failed in her hopes as she is failing in her accomplishments. She is being beaten to her knees, on sea and shore. She sought world domination and she has brought about her own ruin. Her alliance with Turkey is in course of justification—instead of one sick man of Europe there are now two; for the glory of Germany as a great European state is passing away with the passing of Germany as a powerful factor in disturbing the peace and prosperity of Europe. Germany is become in prospect, if not yet in effect, as moribund as Turkey itself. It is said that German soldiers, sent Belgian citizens, slated for slaughter, dig their own graves. As a great nation, as a leading power, as an influence in world politics and diplomacy, Germany is digging her own grave. And, though far from her intent, through the inscrutable workings of divine Providence, Germany is preparing the triumph and fulfillment of the Christmas message of twenty centuries ago—

GLORY TO GOD IN THE HIGHEST; PEACE ON EARTH AND GOOD WILL TOWARDS MEN.

TREASONABLE TACTICS.

Appeals to race antagonism have ever been among the favourite devices of certain low-class politicians attached to a certain party. And they cannot resist resorting to them now. While the leaders of the party, and the more honourable of the rank and file, carefully abstain from indulgence in this vicious practice, there are, and we suppose always will be, some of the hangers-on, and some of the more unscrupulous, who will not hesitate to stir up racial dissensions for political purposes.

A Liberal made the incidental remark in a speech that the foreign-born element in Canada was very large, and could have a material effect in an eletcion. At once someone declared that here was a direct appeal to the foreign-born for their votes against the Government on account of the loyal support it was giving Great Britain. And at intervals we have that story cropping up as a definite fact, despite its absurdity. A Liberal would be very foolish to make an appeal to a certain class to vote against the Government because it did something which the Liberals themselves were doing. The Liberals have supported the Government without a word of criticism in everything it has done to help Britain since the war began. If the foreign-born of German or Austrian nationality are to vote against the Government, they certainly cannot vote for the Liberals. Of course, they might vote for Mr. Bourassa who was a warm friend of the Government at the last election, and helped to place it in power.

A Toronto paper has lately started another absurdity. It declares that the suggestion comes from Liberal headquarters that in the event of a general election the Opposition will look to the German and Austrian vote to help defeat the Government. And smaller papers of the same stripe repeat the story with solemn comments. It would be a poor compliment to the intelligence of German and Austrian voters in Canada to expect them to vote against one party and in favour of another which is just as bad, and which had supported the same policy.

But it is not the foreign vote that is in question, except in so far as it might be effected by a belief that the Liberals accused all foreign-born but adopted Canadians of being disloyal. What is intended is simply, if possible, to stir up a little extra feeling against Liberals by suggesting that they really object to giving aid to the Empire, and are only waiting for a chance to defeat the Government which represents the only "truly loyal" in the Dominion.

Such tactics are not only unfair, and inconsistent with the political truce which Liberals are trying faithfully to maintain, but they are really treasonable in that they will have a most injurious effect both at home and abroad. It is an attempt to brand a party, or the leaders of a party, with disloyalty. If read or believed by our enemies abroad, it would encourage them in the idea which they seemed to have had before the war, that a large section of the people of Canada were not in sympathy with Great Britain. It tends to breed dissensions among our own people, and intensify political hatred. In other words such conduct is opposed to the cultivation of harmony among Canadians of all classes It weakens our own faith in each other. It lessens the confidence the motherland should feel in the sincerity of our professions. It encourages our enemies to believe we are only half-hearted and insincere in our support of the Empire. It is treason, and for very little profit after all.—London Advertiser.

NEED OF SYSTEMATIZING BUSINESS OF THE NATION

Stirred up by the recent articles running in The Financial Post, showing how impracticable were the efforts and how inefficient were the methods of the Departments of Trade Agriculture and Labour in meeting the present emergency, the Government is responsible for the following inspired despatch which has been sent out from Ottawa:

"The Government is planning an active campaign to stimulate agriculture production of all kinds in 1915. Hon. Martin Burrell is arranging for a series of conferences throughout the Dominion in January and February, at which the farmers of the various districts will be called together and given full information as to conditions in Europe, and the great demand for food supplies by the allies while the was is on. The best means of meeting these demands will be fully discussed by the farmers and those who address them."

The Post's articles on this subject have not been intended as criticisms of the Government, but rather of the system under which Cabinet Ministers are selected. As a rule, the selection does not fall upon the best men available for the vacant posts, men with successful experience in the fields which they are called upon to administer. On the contrary, the appointments are generally awarded in return for party services or with an eye to the political influence the new Minister may wield in his section of Canada. The result is that, under this system, party interests are frequently considered before public advantage. The Financial Post has been urging that in this, the greatest opportunity for extending Canadian trade which has ever occurred, the Ministers referred to above have not risen to the emergency. Though no doubt directed with the best of intentions, their efforts have been quite inefficient.

This will be seen by referring to the despatch above quoted. Mr. Burrell proposes to tell the farmers throughout Canada of the great demand which has arisen for foodstuffs on account of the war. Thanks to their local newspapers, however, every farmer in Canada already knows all about this, and further thanks to the urgent suggestion of a brainy railway man who started a campaign early last autumn, in which he was supported by these papers, there are few farmers who have not already prepared for the greatest crop on record next year.

That part of the campaign is, therefore, wasted effort, and consequently inefficient.

Suppose Mr. Burrell's scheme were, as he seems to think, the one thing needful, where is he to find his big corps of lecturers? The Provincial Governments are now at their wits' end to find such men. He will be compelled to appoint, in most cases, incompetent party workers—a class of men who seldom show much capability. More than that, what will the cost be? Good men cannot be got under $30 to $40 a week, and another $25, perhaps $50, will have to be added for expenses, travelling, supervision, etc., say, $75 a week. Most of them will not be worth their salt, and the attendance at their meetings is likely to be small.

The Financial Post makes this suggestion to this well intentioned Minister: There are in his department, in the agricultural departments of the provinces, in the agricultural colleges, and on the farms, a number of very able, enthusiastic, public-spirited men whose practical experiences if followed out, would enable the average farmer to double the present average income from his farm.

A committee of the best of these men could concentrate on a series of the most practical and telling suggestions. This is the work now being done by the splendidly-edited agricultural newspapers—which, by the way, Hon. Mr. Burrell in his capacity as a party man, proposes to suppress. The best of these agricultural papers are not read by the mass of farmers, but only by the more enterprising class. There are, however, few farmers who do not read and swear by their local weekly. The Government should, therefore, arrange to present this series of practical and timely suggestion in the form of well-displayed announcements in these local weekly papers, regardless of whether they are Liberal or Conservative. It is a business, not a party, proposition. In this way all the farmers of Canada would have an opportunity of profiting by the advice of the best agricultural experts, and the cost should be much less than the totally inefficient plan proposed by the Minister of Agriculture.

If this suggestion were intelligently carried out it would give a tremendous impetus to the increase in quality and quantity of farm products to be sold and turned into money. The farmers are the most generous spenders when money is plentiful, and the investors, merchants, manufacturers, financiers and other business interests for which The Financial Post is the mouthpiece would also greatly benefit.

TO A COUNTRY AT WAR.

The nursling Hate you nourish in your streets;
The bitter Word you fondle on your lips;
The rage of shallow love you consecrate—
These will not guard your grey, sea-smothered ships.

The baleful gaze you turn in prayer aloft,
The fist you clench against the tender sky,
Your boastful vaunt that is but weakness stripped—
By such you will not teach your sons to die.

II.

But if grim-eyed, a man must leave his farm,
Because he must, and not because he would;
If, sobbing-glad, his wife must watch him go
Down the white road, and turn, and name life good;

If with this high brow and every ideal set,
Fronting his face and beating in his eyes,
The clerk his desk forsakes, takes up his gun,
Happy if his blood helps scrawl SACRIFICE;

If out of city mansion, country lane,
Untired of life, loving it through and through,
Sobered, your sons their abdication make,
Passionate their spiritual armour to endue—

O, if you see it thus, and feel the power
Of God's own might thrill in your steady veins;
Standing or going, if you know as His
Your drab, hard task of glory, then He reigns

And owns a people for His strong care;
Then a deep love, a wise, a sad and sure,
Shall hush your crowds; while Resolution high
Guards well your arms till Peace be made secure.

Christmas Dinner Will Cost No More Than It Did Twelve Months Ago

The European Conflict Will Have No Material Effect Upon the Cost of Commodities Such as Go to Make Up a Christmas Dinner—Sugar and Fruits Are Somewhat Higher in Price.

The gloomy forebodings of a few months ago that the high prices of food on account of the war would mean for many Peterborough people a scarcity of good things on Christmas Day have not materialized. A glance over the prices of edibles in season at Yuletide when contrasted with prices prevailing this time last year, reveals only slight differences, and the efforts being made by the various charitable institutions to provide for the poorer families are meeting with such success that it is not likely there will be many hungry ones in this city on December 25.

Imported relishes and other luxuries, not to speak of some kinds of fruit and such commodities, are higher this year on account of the difficulties of making shipments and the war time insurance rates, but an analysis of the prices now ruling for Christmas delicacies shows that it is possible to celebrate a Canadian Christmas largely with "made-in-Canada" or "grown-in-Canada" goods.

Turkeys and Meats.

One of the essentials of the Christmas dinner is, of course, the entree, and the prices now being paid for turkeys, geese, ducks and sirloin and porterhouse roasts throughout the city show no material changes. Some of these prices with comparisons are as follows:

	1913.	1914.
Turkeys	.28 to .35	.17 to .19
Geese	.14 to .16	.14 to .15
Ducks	.18 to .19	.16 to .18
Chickens	.16 to .18	.14 to .16
Sirloin roasts	.20 to .22	.24 to .28
Porterhouse roasts	.25 to .30	.26 to .30

Other adjuncts of the Christmas dinner, such as potatoes, are cheaper. This year a bag of potatoes may be obtained from 75 cents upwards, while last year the minimum level was $1.15 a bag. Apples are selling at $1.75 to $3.00 and last year they brought $3.75 to $4.00 a barrel. Butter is about the same price, 30 to 32 cents a pound, but eggs at 40 cents a dozen, represent at least a slight advance over the price last year, and in connection with that necessity, one might say "eggs is eggs," and nothing else will take their place in many Christmas dishes.

Sugar Up Two Cents.

Sugar is also higher, but about two cents a pound, as are also raisins and currants, but sage and savory still sell three bunches for 10 cents, and the slight difference in the price of lemon and orange peel are of little consequence, considering the amounts used in the ordinary Christmas confections.

The one Christmas fruit that always seems necessary, oranges, can not be had this year at anything like the prices that prevailed last year, when they were selling at twenty cents a dozen.

"We cannot help it," declared a wholesale fruit dealer, "and when the retailer lets them go at 30 and 35 cents a dozen this year, he is not making more than he did when they were selling at 20 cents." Figs and dates, however, are about the same price, ten cents a pound, and celery, which last year sold at three bunches for 25 cents, is this year 5 cents a bunch, all of which helps lighten the load on the not too heavy purse.

A Dinner For Five.

An estimate of what a Christmas dinner for say five people, would be somewhat as follows, providing, of course, purchases were made at present prices, rather than at the values which may prevail the day before Christmas. On account of the increased demand, advances are possible for the last-minute rush, especially in foods which cannot be carried over the holiday by the merchants. The amounts indicated for a family of five, would, of course, vary. Those herein given with comparison for last year have been calculated by a down-town caterer.

	1914.	1913.
1½ pints of soup	.15	.15
1½ pounds of fish, trout or white fish	.28	.20
12 pounds best turkey	2.64	2.88
Cranberry sauce	.10	.10
Potatoes, possibly a small measure	.10	.12
Parsnips or vegetable marrow	.10	.10
1 plum pudding	.75	.65
Hard sauce for pudding	.15	.15
1 mince pie	.25	.25
Coffee	.15	.15
Fruit, oranges, dates, figs	.30	.25
Nuts	.25	.25
Candies	.50	...
Flowers or table decorations	2.00	1.50
	$7.97	$7.85
Fuel and labour	2.50	2.50
	$10.97	$9.85

A Difference of 44 Cents.

Another caterer gave the following estimates with comparisons for a Christmas dinner for a family of five:

	1914.	1913.
Soup, clear	.25	.25
Fish	.30	.30
Turkey (ten pounds)	2.00	3.00
Cranberry sauce	.15	.15
Potatoes	.10	.10
Tomatoes	.15	.15
Squash	.10	.10
Plum pudding (three lbs.)	.51	.45
Mincemeat pie	.30	.25
Coffee	.10	.10
Bread and butter	.09	.09
Nuts, 15 cents; almonds 25 cents	.40	.40
Labour and fuel charges would be about the same
	$4.85	$5.24

Wines and Liquers.

All Christmas dinners will not, of course, be on the scale indicated, the addition of wines and liquors would materially increase the total, while on the other hand the elimination of such items ase flowers, fish and such things would bring the amount down to modest proportions. It would be difficult for five people to completely consume a dinner such as the one indicated, and there would be a quantity of turkey and other edibles left for future meals.

A Vexatious Job.

It has been estimated that some of the philanthropic institutions which provide Christmas meals do not spend more than fifteen to twenty-five cents a head, and for that they are able to make a satisfactory "spread" by reason of the fact that they buy in very large quantities. For the householder who does not require more than is enough for a few people at a time, the difficulties of keeping expenses within bounds are numerous and vexatious.

GERMANS STILL PRESSED BACK ON WESTERN FRONT

Vigorous Operations in Belgium Leave Both Sides Tired Out But Allies Have Gained Advantage at Several Points

LONDON, Dec. 23. — By vigorous artillery fire, supporting valorous infantry action in which the bayonet was used with deadly effect in a number of man-to-man encounters, the allies yesterday made appreciable gains in localities of great strategic importance wherever they were on the offensive, and in these positions where their troops were called upon to resist the German counter-attacks the Teuton hordes were rolled back, and the allies' line maintained intact.

A lull induced by exhaustion has come on the battlefield in Flanders, and in the extreme northeasterly corners of France, where the energy spent by the combatants during the past week was prodigal and not highly profitable, although the allies have advanced their lines at several points to positions better suited to offensive operations.

On the French right, however, important gains were made against the forces formerly commanded by the German Crown Prince.

The invaders were driven back from the right bank of the Meuse in the first important attack made by French forces on that side of the river.

The following official communication was issued by the War Office last night:—

"To the northwest of Puisaleine, south of Noyon, the enemy executed last evening violent counter-attacks, which have all been repulsed.

"To the south of Varennes we gained a foothold last evening in Bourguilles, where our attacks continued to-day. These attacks appear to be making progress in Bourguilles and to the west of Vauquois.

"There is nothing else to report from the rest of the front."

The following official statement was given out in the afternoon:—

"Between the sea and the Lys during the day of Dec. 21 there was nothing other than artillery engagements. Between the Lys and the Aisne we repulsed a German attacking column which was endeavoring to come out from Carency, and we took several houses at Blangy.

"An attack of the enemy on Mometz and the nearby trenches made it impossible for our troops to make material progress in this direction. In the region of Lihons three attacks of the enemy were repulsed.

"We made slight gains to the east and to the west of Tracy-le-Val, and our artillery delivered an efficacious fire on the plateau of Nouvron.

"In the sectors of the Aisne and of Rheims there were artillery engagements.

"In Champagne and in the Argonne, in the vicinity of Souain, there have been violent bayonet engagements. We have not made perceptible progress in this region. We have occupied in the suburbs of Perthes-les-Hurlus three German positions, representing a front of entrenchments 1,500 yards long. To the northeast of Beausejour we have consolidated the positions occupied by us Dec. 20, and we have occupied all the trenches in the immediate vicinity of Mount Calvaire.

"In the forest of La Grurie our progress continues. At St. Hubert we repulsed an attack in the forest of Bolante. Here certain ground had been lost, but we recaptured two-thirds of it.

"Between the Argonne and the Meuse there has been slight progress. In the suburbs of Vauquois, to the north of the forest of Malancourt, our troops were successful in making their way through a barbed-wire entanglement and in taking possession of certain trenches of the enemy, where they maintained themselves.

"On the right bank of the Meuse, in the forest of Consenvoye, we first lost and then reconquered after a lively fight the territory gained by us Dec. 20."

RICHARD HALL & SON LIMITED

REV. CANON DAVIDSON ON THE WIDER USE OF THE FLAG

To the Editor of The Examiner.

Sir,—An anonymous letter which appeared in your columns last evening, was founded (of course unknowingly) on certain misconceptions which it may be well to point out.

No appeal for funds has been for a moment contemplated, and the fear of undue suffering being inflicted on the needy is groundless.

The proposal is a very simple and natural one that our people should be stirred up to use a valuable possession.

It is easy, by catch-phrases, to cast ridicule on any suggestion, good or bad, but think out this question, quietly, on its merits: (1) Has our Flag any value? (2) If so, can its value be brought out in any other way than by flying it? (3) At this time of national crisis is it appropriate that putting the National Emblem out of sight we should go on our usual way with apparent unconcern, giving no sign of our interest or feelings?

It was by the Mayor's suggestion that the very moderate proposals resulting from the Citizens' meeting, as referring to a matter of public import, were reserved to be brought before the Council.

I shall not defend myself nor my honoured military comrades, who can stand fire without retort, and surely the representative citizens behind this movement neither require thereby to parade their loyalty nor would they dream of doing so.

In conclusion, I do not in this season of good will, make any attack upon your correspondent. He would not, I feel sure, have written as he did had he known the facts, or had he realized the injury and harm which is unwittingly done to the community by letters and sayings of this type.

Over and over again, in this City, when capable and efficient men have been urged to acts and careers of public service, direct refusal has been made on the ground that instead of any appreciation of the hard work involved, their motives would be misconstrued, and they would become targets for anonymous abuse. Thus has Peterborough lost, in the past, an untold amount of powerful assistance.

In regard to this particular movement it may be that people will fail to put necessary effort to carry it into effect. We may tacitly agree to allow our City to remain largely cheerless, colourless, expressionless. That will be all too easy. But much interest has already been expressed, and it is more than possible that a real advance may be made. It may not be an all-important matter, but at least is it not worth an experiment? Why not give the Flag a chance and see what can be done through it.

Yours, etc.,
J. C. Davidson.

THE THIRD ADVANCE IS NOW DOOMED TO FAILURE

Russians Again Have Whip Hand on Eastern Front—Invasion Must End Soon Because of Decisive Russian Victories on the Northern End of the Line Which Will Compel a German Retreat at South End.

LONDON, Dec. 23.—The end of Gen. von Hindenburg's third invasion of Poland is in sight. A Russian force advanced on Sunday against the right wing of the Germans before Warsaw and attacked south of Rawa, pushing the enemy back upon Tomaschow and relieving the threatened danger to the lines of communication south of Warsaw.

The report of the successes of the Russians north of the Vistula continue to grow in detail and magnitude. With the exception of Nieuschwawa, on the border southeast of Thorn, all of northern Poland on the right bank of the Vistula is virtually free from invaders.

The strength of the Russians in this field threatens the army of Von Hindenburg to the south, and a retrograde movement may be forced soon there. The attempt of the Austrians to relieve Przemysl and central Galicia has failed.

A Petrograd despatch says that the German force which had been driven across the East Prussian frontier from Mlawa, Russian Poland, by the Russians is spreading out to the east and west, the object being to reinforce the troops in the vicinity of Thorn for protection against the Russian advance on the Thorn-Allenstein-Insterburg Railroad, the main strategic line paralleling to the North Poland frontier.

Fighting also continues in Galicia, but here, as along the east Prussian frontier, the Russians seem to have been successful in holding back the Austro-German forces. The Germans, who are extremely strong along the whole eastern frontier, already are reported to be moving troops back to the west to meet the allies' offensive, but it is not considered likely that this movement will reach large proportions until some decisive result has been attained in the contest against the Russians.

The following statement from the General Staff of the Russian commander-in-chief was issued last night:—

"On Dec. 21, on the left bank of the Vistula river, between its lower course and the Pilica river, a number of fierce encounters took place. Among these the fighting on the left bank of the Pilica developed particularly.

"In general we repulsed all these attacks, inflicting heavy losses upon the enemy."

"We only evacuated some small positions and fell back toward the east in order to occupy more advantageous positions.

"Our counter-attacks resulted in the throwing into the river of the German troops who had crossed the Bsura near Sachaczew. These troops suffered heavy losses in killed. Also we captured nine quick-firing guns.

"The situation between the Pilica river and the upper Vistula river is without important change, except in the region of Skrzynno, where the Austrians, after having crossed the Nida river, were pushed back upon that stream by the bayonet attacks of our troops. Eighteen of their officers and about one thousand soldiers surrendered.

"It has been established that in the region of Przemysl on the 19th instant we took 17 officers and about 1,000 men.

"In Galicia our operations on the 21st instant continued to develop successfully. Near Rydlice an Austrian division made a sudden attack upon our troops, but eventually was thrown back in disorder, leaving behind 1,500 dead.

"Another Austrian division which attacked us with the bayonet at Godlowo also fled, leaving on the battlefield the bodies of 500 of their men. In this same region the Austrians, under pressure of our offensive, lost many prisoners, three guns and some mitrailleuses.

"The sorties attempted by the garrison of Przemysl all were repulsed. The Austrians were thrown back toward their fortifications and suffered heavy losses."

"OPPORTUNITY" IN PROSPECT

Editor of the Examiner:

Dear Sir,—In last night's Examiner it stated that Mr. Burnham said if there was any more hum-bugging he would leave the City, and then Mr. O'Connell and Mr. Kerr apparently took the ground that they would not support Alderman Dobbin's motion to pay back to the City $5,000. It would almost seem that Mr. O'Connell and Mr. Kerr had something in store for Mr. Burnham in future, as they both have shown very great anxiety to keep him in the City, notwithstanding his threat to leave.

Possibly in the next year, or when there is another election, we will have an opportunity of seeing what will be handed out to Mr. Burnham by these gentlemen.—Yours truly,

A STAYER.

NEW CABINET MINISTERS.

Premier Hearst Calls McGarry and Ferguson to Office.

TORONTO, Dec. 23.—The Ontario Cabinet is now made over and stands complete for the business of the session. Hon. I. E. Lucas becomes Attorney-General with Thomas McGarry assuming the duties of Provincial Treasurer, and Howard Ferguson, of Orenville, taking the portfolio of Lands, Forests and Mines. To the surprise of the public and of his colleagues, Hon. W. J. Hanna retains the Provincial Secretaryship and will continue the administration there as before. Hon. J. J. Foy, according to the announcement of the Government, felt unequal to the task of his portfolio and will remain in the Cabinet without specified responsibilities.

In addition to stating that Dr. David Jamieson of South Grey would officiate as Speaker for the House, the Premier announced his intention of retaining control of the colonization work under way in New Ontario. This work has been under his direction since its inception and there are several millions yet to spend.

For some time a rumor to the effect that Mr. Hanna was about to drop out of the Government altogether has persisted in political circles. When broached with it yesterday, however, he stated that there was no basis for it.

The two new men in the Cabinet come from Eastern Ontario and both show a record of service to the Government. In debating on the floor of the House and in the committee work which has featured the last two sessions both bore prominent parts, and their accession to portfolios has been expected. The two "unattached" members will be Hon. Mr. Foy and Hon. Dr. Preston.

Public attention will focus on the new Attorney-General because of several outstanding matters that are demanding consideration. Counties along the shore of Lake Huron are appealing for assistance in connection with the Moyes railway fiasco, and other matters of importance will confront Mr. Lucas as he steps into the office.

PLANS FOR CHRISTMAS.

Those Who Remain at Salisbury Will Have an Interesting Day.

LONDON, Dec. 23.—Preparations for celebrating Christmas are in full swing among the Canadians at Salisbury. A good many will celebrate it by putting many miles between themselves and the camp, about eight thousand having obtained leave, varying from three to seven days, according to the distance they intend travelling. Several thousand more will get a day of leave.

A bright day with plenty of agreeable incidents is promised for those who remain. Church parade will be held; also celebrations of Holy Communion. Evening smoking concerts have been arranged by the men themselves. Each battalion has been given carte blanche to provide a dinner according to its own taste and fancy. The second battalion has secured several barrels of Canadian apples.

Col. Williams had returned from the front, where he spent three weeks studying conditions. He was three days and nights in the trenches. On returning to Salisbury he delivered several lectures to officers at Bustard.

CANDIDATES ARE CHOSEN BY THE RATEPAYERS

A meeting of the ratepayers of North Monaghan, held last night in May's School House was well attended. The chair was occupied by Mr. Stevens. The Reeve, Mr. Howden, was called upon to give an account of his stewardship, and after a lengthy explanation which seemed satisfactory to all present, the same was well received, after which Mr. H. Foster also gave a satisfactory account of himself. The meeting was called to select candidates to contest the different offices. The chairman called for nominations. First, that of Reeve. Mr. Howden was the only selection. Then Deputy-Reeve. Mr. H. Foster the only nominee. Then it fell upon the ratepayers to select candidates for the council. Mr. Th. Rife and Mr. Wm. Stevens were the choice, and by the feeling of those present every effort will be made to elect their men.

GEORGE STREET SUNDAY SCHOOL GIVE $160 TO THE BELGIANS

As Well as Large Quantity of Clothing — A Splendid Anniversary Christmas Concert Last Night

One of the most successful anniversary concerts in some years was given in the George Street church last night when a splendid programme was presented and a handsome sum was realized for the Belgians. The primary object of the concert was to get together a substantial donation for the Belgians, and the concert last night netted over $160 and innumerable donations of clothes. Of this amount $154 was given by the various Sunday school classes, each class making their individual gift at the entertainment last night. The amount raised was a gratifying one, which exceeded all anticipations of those in charge.

The programme was a varied one and well presented. The Christmas carols sung by the school were tuneful choruses and were well sung. The numbers of the programme were given by members of the Sunday school, the recitations, solos, duets and piano offerings were warmly received, and merited the applause they elicited.

Two splendid numbers were given by the Primary Department of the Sunday school, their singing greatly pleasing the audience. In the motion song, "Nearer My God to Thee," the girls of the Grace Sunday school acquitted themselves admirably, as did the George Street girls in the cradle song of all nations. The sextette, "Merry Christmas Bells" was well given, and the flag drill by twelve girls of the George Street school was one of the most enjoyable numbers on the programme.

Two different offerings showed careful and effective training, and those in charge of the preparation of the numbers, as well as the scholars who took part, are to be congratulated upon the standard of the entertainment.

The programme was as follows.

Where Is Enver Pasha?

Turkish War Minister's Absence is Subject of Talk

PETROGRAD, Dec. 23. — A despatch to The Bourse Gazette from Bucharest declares that Enver Pasha, the Turkish Minister of War, has mysteriously disappeared.

He has not, according to the despatch, been seen in Constantinople for several days, and his absence at such a moment has caused contradictory reports. According to one, he has gone to the Caucasus to take command of the Turkish army there. Another is that he fears that he will be assassinated and that he has fled with his adjutant to a German warship.

There is no doubt that Enver Pasha has been subjected to constant pressure by the Germans, in pursuance of their plans in the war.

The Origin of Christmas

Subject Was Discussed by Elder Johnston at Woodmen Hall

A very timely topic was delivered last evening by Elder Johnston in Woodmen Hall, concerning the "Origin and Nature of Christmas." Taking for his text, Gal., 4:4-5, he opened up his remarks by inquiring as to what event in all history is capable of arousing more gratitude to God than that of the birth of the Redeemer of Mankind. Prophets foretold of the event of Christ's birth. Angels rejoiced when the time had arrived and ever since then the birth of the Lord Jesus has excited the admiration and wonder of the world.

The time of Christ's birth was especially significant. Rome ruled the world; and the Temple of Janus opened only in a time of war and commotion, was closed for the second time in the history of the Roman Empire. Rome was now at rest and enjoying a period of quietude and peace. Thus in harmony with this the angels declared to the shepherds of Bethlehem, "Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace, good will towards men." Such an announcement was not without meaning, for this was the principal aim of Christ's coming, that of bringing peace and reconciliation, as it says in Eph., 2: 13-17.

But many entertain the erroneous idea that the Saviour was born on December 25. Such a position, however, is unwarranted, for December is very cold in the country of Palestine, and shepherds never watch their flocks later than the end of October, and if any should not believe that the winter there is severe, let him remember the words of Christ in Matt., 24: 20. The most reliable authorities place the birth of Jesus Christ somewhere around the end of March or the first of April.

Question will therefore arise, how then came the festival of Christmas to be observed? The answer is very plain. The day was first honoured by the heathen as the birthday of the sun, being as it is the time of the winter solstice when the earth again returns on its axis toward the sun, which the heathen recognized and considered the beginning of a new life or the birthday anniversary of the sun. When the early Christian church, which afterwards apostasized from the truth began to lean toward heathenism, it adopted many customs peculiar to the pagan world in the hope that by so doing they would come to friendly terms and afterwards win them to Christianity. In adopting their many customs the Christians, however, dispensed with the pagan names and applied to same heathen rites same Christian names fastened. Thus, in adopting the 25th of December instead of regarding it as the birth of the sun, they said, we will honour such as the birthday of the Son of God. We will hold a mass on that day and call it Christ's mass or Christmas. This custom ever since has been handed down to successive generations and that is why people are observing it to-day. The heathen on that day used to sacrifice a goose to the sun, hence the reason for killing a goose on Christmas. The Sun God of the [illegible] at that time symbolized by a tree, hence the reason for the Christmas tree.

But supposing it were true that Christ was born at this time of year, we cannot but deplore the manner in which many celebrate this important event. Think of honouring this event by carrousing and drunkenness, gambling and feasting; in short a general time of dissipation. The Lord Jesus Christ was never born for this purpose, but rather that men and women everywhere might be born to a new life and become new creatures in Christ. Let us see to it, so the elder declared, that we will celebrate this event by giving our lives to God and His service, and such will again cause the angels to declare, "Glory to God in the highest."

Farmers' Market Well Attended

Supplies Were Plentiful and Demand Good

Back along the ribbon-like concession lines that radiate from this, the hub of Peterborough county, came a long string of farmers. They came down through white fields, with piles of freshly driven snow drifted through the snake fences and shining ghost-like in the early dawn. One and all agreed that this is to be a white Christmas, a fact which only served to add fuel to the holiday sentiment. No class of people welcome the snow more than the farmers. They have come to regard it as a necessary adjunct to the successful performance of their duties. Long before the market was open for business, several hundred fur-coated ruralites had stabled their horses and were consorting around the City in search of their Christmas supplies.

"How much are your chickens," enquired a shrewd-looking housekeeper of a farmer's wife whose face radiated a smile.

"Seventy-five cents a pair," was the reply. With that the prospective purchaser tickled one of the chickens in the ribs as if to make sure that it would respond to mastication, selected a pair of the feathered bipeds and, together with a fair-sized turkey for which she paid two dollars and a quarter, made as rapid an exit as the congested condition of the Market Hall would permit.

FOWL PLENTIFUL.

Fowl was a drug on the market. However, this did not prevent the majority of the farmers from disposing of their supplies. Turkeys sold at 17c a pound, geese $1.25 each, and chickens at from 75c to $1 a pair.

Butter was plentiful at 30c a pound and fresh eggs were practically an unknown quantity.

The outside market was littered up with meat, vegetables and not a few coonskin coats. The owners of the coats invariably took up a position close to their vehicles, where they stamped their feet and beat their arms in an endeavour to ward off the cold. Meat was the most common commodity offered. Beef in quarter lots sold at 10c and 12c respectively. Pork at 13c and 14c, and lamb at 15c. Potatoes were somewhat scarce. What was offered sold for 75c a bag. A few bags realized a little more.

FUNERAL OF LATE MR. TURCOTTE

Took Place This Morning—Was Largely Attended

The funeral of the late Francis Turcotte took place this morning from the residence of his son, 490 Cross Street, to St. Peter's Cathedral and thence to St. Peter's cemetery. It was very largely attended, many citizens turning out to pay their last respect to the memory of the deceased. Numerous floral tributes and spiritual bouquets testified to the high esteem in which the late Mr. Turcotte was held.

Requiem mass was sung at the Cathedral by Rev. Father Leonard and Rev. Father McGinty officiated at the grave side.

The pallbearers were Messrs. J. O'Brien, G. Archambault, P. McAveeley, John Delaire, G. Dainnard and C. Brisbois.

Assault Case Was Adjourned

The case of King versus Reynolds, which was to have been heard in the County Court this morning, was enlarged for one week at the request of Mr. Widdifield, counsel for the prosecution. George Reynolds is charged with assaulting his wife, and it was owing to the indisposition of the latter that the case was adjourned. The couple reside in Monaghan. County Police Magistrate Landley agreed to an adjournment so that the case will come up on Wednesday next at ten o'clock.

Mr. V. McElderry is appearing for the defendant.

COMPLAINS OF SHORT SEASON ON THE CANAL

Editor of The Examiner:

Dear Sir,—In reply to an article in the Review a few nights ago, I wish to say that this has been the shortest season on the Trent canal for fourteen years, and has not been the longest, as stated in the Review.

In previous years the government opened up the work on the first of March, and this year it did not commence until May, and the result was that the money sent down to pay the men working on the canal was returned and not used up.

I think if Mr. Burnham was watching the interests of the workingmen he would have seen that the new post office and customs house was started and finished this winter, because if it had been started when Mr. Burnham first announced that the government had decided to build a new post office and customs house, it would have been completed so that there would be nothing but inside work to do this winter for a large number of men.

It seems a pity when times are so hard that more attention is not paid to the needs of the workingman.

Yours truly,

Working Man.

How a Mail Order Business Demoralizes The Home Community

STATEMENT FROM A FARMER.

The following communication has been reprinted from an American farm journal. A farmer who secured his start in life through credit extended by the local merchant was lured into the habit of sending his money to the mail order houses. He now regrets his action in neglecting the local merchant, and incidentally his own interests. Mail order houses have secured a much firmer foothold in the United States than they have in Canada. Their influence in this country is growing rapidly and retailers have to constantly guard against this class of competition. Although the old fallacy that goods can be bought out of town cheaper has long ago exploded there are still thousands of people, especially farmers, who send their money to the mail order houses, thus deprecating the value and importance of the Home Community.

Editor, Farm Journal: We farmers need awakening to the fact that we have unmistakably reached the period where we must think and plan. I am one of the slow German farmers that had to be shown, and I am now giving my experience that others may profit, for knowledge at the school of experience is more expensive now than ten years ago.

Twenty-nine years ago I began my farm career. I had an old team and fifty dollars. Our furniture was mostly home-made—chairs, cupboards and lounge made from drygoods boxes, neatly covered with ten-cent cretonne by my girl wife. We rented eighty acres. Bein ga boy of good habits I got all needed machinery and groceries of our home merchants on credit, until fall crops were sold. The first year was a wet season and I didn't make enough to pay creditors. I went to each on date of promise and explained conditions, paying as much to each as possible, and they all carried the balance over another year. They continued to accommodate me until I was able to buy a forty-acre piece of my own.

As soon as I owned these few acres the mail-order houses began sending me catalogues, and gradually I began sending my loose change to them, letting my accounts stand in my home town, where I had gotten my accommodation when I needed it.

We then had one of the thriftiest little villages in the state—good line of business in all branches,, merchants who were willing to help an honest fellow ever a bad year, and a town ful lof people who came twice a week to trade and visit. Our little country town supported a library, high school, band, ball team, and we had big celebrations every year. A farm near a live town soon doubles in value. I sold my forty acres at a big advance and bought an eighty, gradually adding to it until I had two hundred acres of the best land. I then felt no need of asking favours, and found it easy to patronize mail order agents that came almost weekly to our door. I regret to say that I was the first in the countryto make up a neighbourhood bill and send it to a mail order house. Though we got bit every once in a while, we got in the habit of sending away for stuff.

Gradually our merchants lessened their stock of goods—for lack of patronage. Finally we began to realize that if we needed a bolt quickly for machinery, or clothing for sickness or death, we had to wait and send away for it, which wasnt so pleasant. One by one our merchants moved to places where they were appreciated, and men of less energy moved in. Gradually our town has gone down; our business houses are "tacky" in appearance, a number are empty, our schools, churches and walks are going down, we have no band, no library nor ball team. There is no business done in the town, and therefore no taxes to keep things up. Hotel is closed, for lack of travel. Go down to the depuot when the freight pulls in and you see the sequel in mail order packages.

Nine years ago my farm was worth one hundred and ninety-five dollars an acre; to-day I'd have a hard matter to sell it at one hundred and sixty-seven dollars an acre. It is "too far from a live town"—so every farmer has said that wants to buy. He buys a place near schools and churches, where his children can have advantages. I have awakened to the fact that in helping to pull the town down, it has cost me $5,000 in nine years. Like the majority of farmers, I didn't figure far enough ahead.

This sort of business means the doing away with country towns. What will it mean to farmers to have only a few large cities at a distance of five hundred to a thousand miles?

What are we going to do with our children who are demanding even better advantages than we had?

Those cities we help to build return no favours; they take our money but offer no credit in time of need. If we want high schools, etc., we must raise the money and build near our farm homes, or send our boys and girls to the cities at great expense, amidst temptations of which the farm has no equal. Neither am I the only awakening farmer. These mail order agents that come to our homes every week are becoming a nuisance and making it unsafe to leave women and children alone on the farm. With farm cordiality we take these strangers into our homes, often as one of the family, and we are sometimes paid in having them entice our girls to the city.

These are some facts that need consideration, and I have decided that the safest proposition all around, is for the country people to look after their own interests, and build up their own country towns that bring value to their farms. Let those who want to patronize the city mail order houses go there to live, getting their living where they give their patronage. The remainder of my life will be given to building up the home town that I helped to pull down. Brother farmers, you can take my advice or get your knowledge the way I got mine.

TURNBULLS

THE WORLD OF SPORT

GOOD WORKOUT OF THE LOCAL JUNIORS

The local juniors had a big workout last night, with Harold Knapman the only absentee among the regulars. Two full teams were on hand, including several of the old boys home for the holidays, and the practice was lively. The presence of "Lornie" Rose was a pleasing feature. The youngster who was one of the stars of the Junior City League last season, has been undecided as to whether or not he would play O.H.A. this year, and the management was happy when he turned out last night. He will uphold the reputation of the Rose family, succeeding his brother Ray, who has played centre for the local juniors during the past two seasons. Legros of the Alert City League team was out for the first time in the nets and did good work, while McQuaid, formerly of Seaforth, also made some good scores. Wilfrid Stratton of the 'Varsity juniors, Orme Cavanagh of the Woodstock College team, and Gordon Matthews, who is attending 'Varsity, were out, and all three performed brilliantly. The others out were Long, Morrow, Richardson, Jackson, Smyth, O'Connell, Picard and Martin. The juniors will night and will also have a workout tonight and wil lalso have a workout tomorrow night.

Scottish Cup Ties Abandoned

It Was Decided Not to Proceed With Them After a 14 to 13 Vote

LONDON, Dec. 23.—At a meeting of the Scottish Football Association last night, it was decided by 14 votes to 13, not to proceed with the Scottish Cup ties this season.

The decision is in accordance with the recommendation of the deputation which recently interviewed the War Office authorities.

A notable event will be included in the programme in connection with the charity regatta at Richmond on Boxing morning, when the Winnipeg Rowing Club members whose members are at present training with the Canadian contingent on Salisbury Plains, will oppose an eight made up of well-known British scullers and oarsmen, stroked by H. T. Blackskiff. The regatta is in aid of the Belgian refugees and Richmond Hospital.

Bill Donovan To Manage The Yankees

CHICAGO, Dec. 23.—On their arrival in New York to-morrow morning Colonel Ruppert, Jr., and Capt. Huston will announce that they have purchased the New York Highlander baseball team. They will also announce "We intend to build a modern plant for the Yanks. Our present idea is to construct a plant that will eclipse Manager McGraw's for completeness and convenience to the New York baseball fans.

"Wild Bill' Donovan, former pitcher of the Detroit Tigers, and later manager of the Providence team, will be the new pilot of the Yanks for the year 1915."

New faces in the line-up of the Yanks will include Rehg, Boston; High and Pipp, Detroit, and Miller, St. Louis.

Col. Ruppert and Capt. Huston, with Manager McGraw of the Giants, left Chicago to-day on the Twentieth Century Limited, and this line of baseball information will be given to New York newspapermen immediately on their arrival, according to the statement of an American League magnate who attended the secret session of the magnates.

EXPLOITS OF AUTOISTS "OBSCURED" IN FRANCE

The exploits of the daring automobile drivers who whiz along the fringe of the shell-torn battle front, and sometimes into it, on missions of military duty that have cost many a life, are as remarkable as many of the aerial dashes in the air.

Thousands of luxurious touring cars and limousines that once graced the boulevards of Paris are now employed in this service and many of them are driven by their wealthy owners, who rank as privates, and are comrades with professional chauffeurs. They wear uniforms marked with an "A" on the arm. Little is heard of their individual deeds, which led the "Figaro" to say their service was "obscured." In reply the "Figaro" printed on its first page a letter from one of these daring drivers, a Paris lawyer, that speaks for itself. It follows:

"'Obscured!' The word is quickly said. There is too much 'obscured.' And one has reason for being so who is forced to remain far from the front.

"The other day, about nine in the morning, the quartermaster entered the garage.

"'They want a car!' cried the quartermaster. 'Who can go?'

"Every man answered 'I.'

"One of our comrades, Jean R——, was chosen. A turn of the crank and the car was gone.' Where? No one asked. One is too much accustomed to seeing these machines depart to

HOCKEY GOSSIP

"Mawk" McKenzie, who was counted upon by Hamilton Tigers as rover for their O.H.A. intermediate team, has been unable to get out to practice. He was injured in a football game near the end of the season, and since that time has been troubled with a sore knee.

Preston O.H.A. Intermediates defeated Stratford Northern League Seniors 5 to 4 at Preston Monday night. After five minutes of play, Eltherington scored. Verner of Stratford tied the score in two minutes. The next three goals went to Stratford, being scored by low, and two by Boles, and just before the end of the period I. Bowman and Schlagel scored, and the period ended with Stratford leading by the score of 4 to 3. Schlagel evened the score in the second period, and Freeman scored the winning tally in the third session.

Wiarton's dangerous Intermediate O.H.A. team is intact this season, and has as recruits Johnston, the Orillia goalkeeper, and Earl Miers, the Detroit forward. Henry Chatell of Ottawa is coaching the lads.

With McLean and Sidley in front of the nets, and Laird in goal, the Toronto Rowing Club will be well fortified on the defence. Reynolds will be moved up on the forward line with Burrell and Farr, and a right wing yet to be selected. Jack Brown was out with the Oarsmen last night, and with him on the right boards would round out a god team. The T.R.C. will play their first game with the Peterborough Intermediates on New Year's night.—Toronto Star.

Eddie Livingston has about spilled the fat into the fire, for Jack Brown and Alf Skinner, the local amateurs, and Wilbur Beatty, the Midland boy, by registering them with the N.H.A. Brown and Skinner both say that they are not going to turn professional. Brown wants to play with Toronto Rowing Club, and Skinner with the Riversides. The O.H.A. has threatened to expel any man who tries out with the professionals. Will Brown and Skinner get the axe? Both say that they were merely out with the professionals trying to get into shape.—Toronto Star.

Wilfrid Stratton, who played with 'Varsity juniors, and who will likely be with the same team this season, was going great guns at the junior practice last night. He has a world of speed and stick-handling ability, while he packs a good shot. The youngster would look very sweet in that right wing position on the local intermediates. He is eligible to play here, but the college authorities frown on the students playing with outside teams, when they are needed on the college line-up.

Stratton is a graduate of a formerly well known local juvenile team, the Midgets, who were contemporaneous with two other renowned "kids" teams, Jack Thirnbeck's "Chieftains," and the "Aberdeens." The three teams have turned out a raft of good hockey players. hTe Midgets were a west end aggregation, the Aberdeens' home was at the goose pond, while the chieftains were the favoured team of the three, getting their practice on Brock Street rink. From the Midgets have come Wilfrid Stratton of 'Varsity, Harold Parker of the Hamilton team, Harold Morrow of the local team, and Nagle Phelan, who was on the defence of the City League champions last season. The best known players turned out by the Chieftains were Ken Crane, now with the Argos, and Hugh 'Burritt, who has since played in Seaforth, Winnipeg and Toronto. The Aberdeens developed Charlie Ray, Harry Clancy and Stan Wade, who afterwards played for Peterborough.

Bert James will be out with the local intermediates to-night for the first time in the clash against the juniors.

Orme Cavanah, who played with the local juniors two years ago, and who is now attending Woodstock College, was out at the practice last night. In spite or a bad ankle he showed great speed, while his stick handling has developed since he left Peterborough.

Lindsay Post: A meeting of the officials interested in the Lindsay Junior O.H.A. hockey team was held last night, and the schedule of games talked over. This schedule appears in another column. A good live team is practically made up. The certificates came this morning and will be signed at once. Messrs. Callaghan, Taylor and Dennison, three expert O.H.A. players, who are known to every hockey fan in Lindsay, have consented to coach the boys, and will be on hand to-night for the first practice of the season, which takes place at the Lindsay Street Rink at half-past six.

The O.H.A. has a fairly good representation among the Canadian soldiers at the war. When it is considered that the largest section of the three, the junior, was almost a negligible quantity because of the youth of the players in that section, it will be seen that the intermediate teams did fairly well. Nearly all at the front are from the intermediates.

Richardson, the star Kingston defence man for years past, is a commissioned officer in the Salisbury camp.

Cobourg holds the palm on all the O.H.A. map, having sent six players to the war.

Other clubs represented at the front are:

Penetanguishene—W. R. Gordon.
West Toronto Vics.—Norman Cliff.
Port Hope—J. Lewis.
Harriston—Irving Kett.
Paris—A. D. Fraser, the veteran goal-keeper, who has guarded the nets for 16 years for Paris, Aylmer, St. Marys, and Woodstock sevens. He saw service in South Africa. Leslie Cook is with the 12th York Rangers, and is at Salisbury.—Toronto Mail and Empire.

Up in Wiarton they believe that they have the intermediate O.H.A. championship already won. Well, Preston, Berlin, London and Peterborough will have something to say about it before the season is over.—Toronto Mail and Empire.

GERMAN FOOD ECONOMY.

Cook Potatoes in Skins and Feed no Bread or Corn to Animals.

Copenhagen, Dec. 23.— An official edict being distributed throughout Germany urges the necessity for economy in food, and gives the following instructions to housewives:

"Cook potatoes in their skins.

"Give animals no bread or corn, but save them the scraps.

"Respect your daily bread; then you will always have it, no matter how long the war lasts.

"Eat war bread, known by the letter 'K,' it is as satisfactory and nourishing as other kinds."

A Good Start.

Jack—You must remember, dear, we are just starting out in life, and we must economize.

Flo—But don't you think getting into debt is the best way? Then we shall have to economize.

THE GREATEST HAPPINESS COMES TO OURSELVES WHEN WE MAKE OTHERS HAPPY WITH OUR GIFTS

THE value of a gift consists not in costliness or variety, but in the feeling of affection, or regard, or sympathy, or honor, which it is supposed to carry. It is time that both the giver and receiver realized this. Too often the spirit of Christmas is utterly sacrificed in the contest between the desire to spend and the duty of refraining. For a gift to be worth the giving, no sacrifice of duty must enter into it. A tiny flower given in love and simplicity is better than a rare and costly gem procured with worry, anxiety and doubt. When you give something TO WEAR you exhibit good sense, good taste and good judgment.

Let us suggest—

etc., in fact everything carried by first-class Clothing and Men's Furnishing Stores.

TRAIN STALLED IN THE SNOW

Port McNicholl C.P.R. Train an Hour and a Half Late

The blinding blizzard that blew across this portion of the country, yesterday, was the worst that has hit this City for some time, and possibly the worst that this winter will bring forth. Fortunately there was not much snow on the ground before the storm came up and consequently the drifts, though bad enough in some places, were not nearly so large as they would otherwise have been.

The only local passenger train affected was the Port McNicholl, C. P. R., which is due in this City at half-past six o'clock. The train got stalled in the snow between Coldwater and Brechen, and did not reach the City until after 8 o'clock last evening. This morning, however, none of the trains were affected, and except for that one train, none were materially interfered with yesterday.

The farmers who attended this morning's Christmas market reported that the roads are not very bad in most places. One man from Springville direction was telling of a hard time he had negotiating the highway, seven miles from the City. On the Otonabee road, just a short distance fro mthe City a bad fillin was also reported. But the general testimony was that the storm had improved the sleighing, rather than otherwise.

One man, who resides in Smith, said that the storm must have been felt more in the country than here. He said that at one time yesterday he could not see his barn, which is not much more than a hundred yards from the house. As it was, the citizens thought that the gale was fierce enough in Town, when passing street cars disappeared within a block and a half, and the wind swept the snow eastward with great fury.

Trains Late Due To Xmas Rush

The trains on local lines have been very late during the past couple of days, owing to the pressure of Christmas traffic. It is said that the traffic this year is not as heavy as usual, but a goodly number of passengers are using the railway lines just now. The Port Hope train at noon to-day was an hour and twenty minutes late. The great delay is due to the fact that the trains are obliged to stop at every flag station to take on and let off passengers, at this season of the year, and the whole network of trains in this region are of course dependent on each other for their schedule of time. One train late throws others out and the effect is far-reaching.

"THUNDERBOLT" PROTESTS

Sir,—With reference to the letter appearing in your issue of yesterday and signed "Conservative"?

I must certainly say it appeared to be filled with malicious hatred and revenge. Still the point I wish to get at is this: The English view of a man who takes advantage through the press to show such spite and hatred at any person, especially when named — whether it be J. H. Burnham or any other individual—and uses a nom de plume to cover such cowardly actions, is neither a gentleman or man.

I am more than surprised that you allow letters under above circumstances to appear in your valuable paper. However, rumour states you have "Iron Crosses" at the Examiner office. If such is the case I hope you will give "Conservative" at least half a dozen for his noble deed. That is, "for his personal attack," and using a nom de plume under such circumstances.

Yours, etc.,
"Thunderbolt."

Dec. 23rd, 1914.

Note.— "Thunderbolt's" letter as above would not have appeared in the Examiner if one had heeded his proof for printing anonymous letters. Satan reproving sin is not alone as a type of inconsistency.

FINE PROGRAMME

An elaborate programme has been prepared to be rendered on Xmas night at the S. A. Temple by the children of the Sunday School, followed by the Arrival of Santa Claus in an Aeroplane and the distribution of presents to about 450 children which will appreciate them very much indeed. Everybody welcome.

PLOTTERS ARRESTED.

Four Germans Meant To Send Timed Bomb on French Ship.

NEW ORLEANS, Dec. 23.—The arrest here last night of four Germans is believed by the police to have frustrated a plot to blow up the French steamship Rochambeau, due to leave New York next Sunday. The police confiscated a box containing seventy-five pounds of dynamite set by clockwork to explode six and one-half days from last night. Two of those arrested confessed, according to police officials, and said they understood the Rochambeau was to sail from New York Saturday. Shipping records, however, show that she left New York Dec. 13, and the police say the alleged conspirators miscalculated the date of her departure.

Burned To Death.

KINGSTON, Dec. 23.—One man burned to death, giving up his life to save another, and a woman so badly burned that she will not recover, is the sad tale of a fire which occurred in the village of Sydenham, 18 miles from Kingston, yesterday morning. Alfred Doye, 27 years of age, lost his life and the life of his sister-in-law, Mrs. William Doye, hangs in the balance.

Mrs. Doye's husband met a sudden death a few weeks ago, when he fell into an open shaft at Sydenham.

Russians Preparing to Check Invaders

SAYS TRENCH FIGHTING IS GROUND HOG LIFE

Pen pictures of life in the trenches are given in extracts from two letters, one from a lieutenant commanding an infantry company in the North of France, the other from a private serving in the east, and published in the Figaro. The first letter says:

"We have taken up our ground-hog life once more. It is not gay, but in this work we suffer less losses than when marching ahead, although we are at the mercy of some chance cannon shot. The other night something like this happened: I was sleeping in one trench when a great pic-rite shell fell about four yards from me, whattering the tren and burying both me and several other men near by under heaps of earth. We lay there for a few moments, for other shells were dropping. Each time I heard one whistling in the air I said to myself, "This is the end.' Fipally all emotion went off. We were covered with earth and muck and half smothered by the intolerable odour of the picrite powder.

"We lead the lives of savages here. For twelve days I have not taken off my clothing nor been able to wash. Each company is completely separated from the others, and it is impossible for the officers to communicate with each other. I only receive orders after nightfall and before the dawn. Despite the fact that the battlefield is full of combatants, with the inability to see and look around, comes a sensation of vacancy and isolation. We are far from the hand-to-hand fighting of other wars.

"I profit by the fall of night to inspect my sections of the first line, and to see what is going on. In the daytime, it is extremely dangerous to walk about, for the Germans hold walls that have been pierced with loopholes, through which they watch us and pick off all who show themselves carelessly. For that matter so do we. Every time that we have tried to advance in daylight we have undergone great losses in general we made all our advances at night and progress slowly but surely, entrenching at each rush forward."

The second letter gives details of a skirmish:

'Arrived in the daytime, we at once set about entrenching, my section across a ravine. The enemy's infantry approached as soon as night fell, and the cannonade started, to continue ceaselesely. Our company was first, the other companies being in reserve in woods further to the rear, also under the German fire. Our guns were there, too, and they opened on the German advance.

"After blazing away all night we found ourselves alone; the troops on our right and left had retreated. With three battalions opposed to us it was thought time to get out, section by section. But before we went half of my section, in which I was, with another section, made a counter attack, rushing up to a slight rise and opening fire. Here we stayed until the enemy's rifles and the spray of his machine guns made the place untenable. We fell back, but our counter attack had made the Germans wary, and they did not at once pursue.

"We had to fall back over a plain which was being swept by the big German shells, the huge projectiles which bury themselves ten feet underground when they fall, then explode, throwing huge masses of earth into the air and tearing out holes twenty-five feet in diameter. We buried seven horses in one of these holes.

"We passed through this fire without much loss and arrived at the woods, where we found the rest of the battalion. As soon as we got there we set to work entrenching again. Each time a whistling was heard up would go a cry, "Here comes another shell," and we would throw ourselves down flat, our knapsacks over our heads. As soon as it passed, back to work again until the next one. We finished the day that way, then stayed there all night and the following day and night."

The First Christmas

8 And there were in the same country shepherds abiding in the field keeping watch over their flock by night.

9 And, lo, the angel of the Lord came upon them, and the glory of the Lord shone around about them; and they were sore afraid.

10 And the angel said unto them, Fear not; for, behold, I bring you good tidings of great joy, which shall be to all people.

11 For unto you is born this day in the city of David, a Saviour, which is Christ the Lord.

12 And this shall be a sign unto you; Ye shall find the babe wrapped in swaddling clothes, lying in a manger.

13 And suddenly there was with the angel a multitude of the heavenly host praising God, and saying,

14 Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace, good will toward men.

Great Forces of Russians Are Being Poured Into Poland

Success of the Austro-German Movement Resulted in Threatening of Communication of the Army About Cracow, But Line Has Been Straightened Out.

THE ATTACK ON WARSAW

PETROGRAD, Dec. 24.—Great forces of Russians are being poured into Poland between Kielce and Radom to day, as well as to the south in an effort to check the German advance which has forced a retirement from Cracow.

The success of the Austro German movement from the region of Pietrkow, it is now admitted, consisted in threatening the communications of the army about Cracow. This was followed by the retirement of the Russians in the south, thirty miles east of Cracow. The advance of the Germans was directed toward the main railway line from Ivangorod, running southwest of Miechow along which the Russian movement upon Cracow was conducted. The general withdrawal of the Russians from the Vistula to Galicia has now placed their main line of defence within twenty miles of Warsaw on their right wing. The retirement to the south straightened the Russian line which now presents an unbroken front extending over 160 miles.

German attempts to force the passage of the Bzura and Rawga rivers in the main attack upon Warsaw have been repulsed. The Russian artillery has swept all points at which crossing might be made for three days. Skiernlewice has been reached by the Germans, but the Russians have taken up strong positions east of that point.

Westward from Donajec Valley, the battle against the Austrian line is gradually developing into an engagement of great proportions.

COUNTER ATTACK TO EMBARASS GERMANS

PETROGRAD, Dec. 23.—Large Russian troops moving toward Cracow from the North and East.

An important battle is developing here. The holding of the German advance on Warsaw, combined with this counter attack is expected to compel a German retirement.

CONCRETE TRENCHES CONFRONT ALLIES

AMSTERDAM, Dec. 23.— Advantages won by the allies along the Yser are undeniable. A vigerous offensive gained success at Ypres and Nieuport. Germans are reinforcing a new defence line with concrete trenches.

FURTHER ADVANCE SHOULD FOLLOW

PARIS, Dec. 23.—The Germans occupy unfavourable positions following the British advance near Reulers and Middlekerke, not yet occupied by the allies, but evacuated by the Germans.

GRAND DUKE IS NOT WORRYING MUCH

PETROGRAD, Dec. 23—Grand Duke Nicholas to-night sent out an encouraging message to Russia. "Our troops are holding their own and will undoubtedly prevail."

ALLIES HOLD GROUND IN FACE OF MORE TROOPS

PARIS, Dec. 24, 8 p.m.—Heavy reinforcements of Germans are reported this afternoon, but the Allies to this hour hold everything gained.

BAVARIANS CURSE TO SUFFER MORE THAN PRUSSIANS

NEW YORK, Dec. 23—A London cable to the Tribune says:

"From Munich it is learned of increasing dissatisfaction among the Bavarian troops, who contend that they are not getting proper recognition for the sacrifices they have made during the present war.

"The feeling is spreading quickly throughout Bavaria that King Ludwig has been deceived by the Kaiser and that Bavaria is now engaged in a war which can bring no profit to the kingdom, whatever may be the outcome, while in that case of Germany's victory, that Prussians will reap all the profit and honour, notwithstanding the fact that the Bavarians have sacrificed, proportionately, three times more men and money than Prussia.

The Bavarians now also are beginning to inquire what the war is about and are angry at the Kaiser's ambition, which is simply ruining the Bavarian finances, while crippling the army. This feeling, if not speedily counteracted, may possibly lead to the formation of a union of the South German sates as a counterpoise to the all-Prussian tendencies prevalent at Berlin.

MORE BRITISH WORKMEN THAN GERMAN FIGHT

NEW YORK, Dec. 23.—A cable from London to the Tribune says:

The "Vorwaerts," the organ of the German Socialist party, publishes the numbers of members of English trades unions who have enlisted since the war began.

"Many people," it says, "will be surprised to learn on comparing statistics available in both countries that the percentage of organized workers in the army at the front is far greater in the case of England than in that of Germany.'

It adds: "If Germany should in the future be tempted to speak with contempt about English mercenaries, it would be advisable that they remembered this fact."

BRITISH SOLDIER'S GRIT.

Italian Paper Pays Them Great Tribute.

ROME, Dec. 22.—The Giornale d'Italia publishes an article entitled "British soldiers keep smiling," by Signor Diego Angeli, one of the best-known translators of Shakespeare. The author says that the whole psychology of the British soldier is summed up in the exclamation of the father who, his sons having died fighting, simply said, "They died like gentlemen."

Signor Angeli especially emphasizes the cleanliness of Britishegs, which, he says, is but a reflection of their moral cleanlines, made up of simplicity and loyalty, qualities which are powerful factors making for courage and victory. The repulse of the Germans from the gates of Paris was due to three soldiers, who opened the attack and compelled the Prussians to retreat, so that "Field-Marshal French's contemptible little army" avanged themselves by sweeping the Kaiser's generals from the field. Signor Angeli gives several anecdotes to show the calmness in danger and coolness in darrag of the British.

The writer concludes by relating that one day a whole regiment shouted to their comrades in some distant trenches. "Are we downhearted?" A pause ensued, then a bloody spectre raised himself from a trench, shouted, "No!" with his last breath, and fell back dead. "English heroism is summed up in this incident," says Signor Angeli.

New Leader For Austria's Beaten Army

Special to The Examiner:

VIENNA, via Berlin and London, Dec. 24.—Archduke Eugene, the devout cousin of Emperor ranz Josef, has succeeded Gen. Potierek as commander of the Austrian army, which was recently driven from Servia.

This was officially announced to-day in a statement explaining the withdrawal of the Austrians from the invaded territory, the statement also asserted.

Allies Are Advancing In Alsace

Energetic Attack With Bayonet Helped Turn Battle—Are Approaching Ostend

PARIS, Dec. 23.—The French attacked fiercely nor of Verdun to-day and drove the Germans from a long line of advanced trenches between the Argonne and the Meuse. Their bayonet charges carried them to the barbed wire entanglements, which the Germans hold as a second line of defence in the region of Varennes. To-day's energetic and skilful attack seems to have turned the scale in the fierce battle which has continued north of Verdun for several days.

Yesterday the French and British, assisted by their Belgian allies in West Flanders, continued their determined offensive and gained ground toward Ostend, toward Bixschoote, at the western edge of the Argonne and in the Argonne, although a check was reported at Bourlilles, which was captured by the French on Tuesday, and where it has been difficult for the French to hold fast under the persistent and violent counter-attacks by the Germans.

Substantial Progress.

In ten days of offensive operations the allies have driven the German line back from four to ten miles in important areas of fighting between the North Sea and the Alsace plain. Such slight progress, comparatively, is reported in the Government's daily announcements, and the difficulty of dislodging the Germans from their numerous and skilfully prepared trenches is so great that the success of the allies' general offensive is only realised when the gains of ten days are surveyed.

From Nieuport to Dixmunde the Belgians and the French have gained four miles, and have compelled the Germans to retire to the east of Lombaertsde. On the salient of Ypres the French and British have forced their way north and east about two and a half miles, and now hold a line which is virtually Birschoote, Passchendaele, Gheluvelt and Hollebeke.

WILL INDEMNIFY THE COAST LOSSES

LONDON, Dec. 23. — Premier Asquith announced that relief will be extended from the national Funds for damage to property and death and injury in the recent bombardment of the Coast towns.

MOBILIZING THE PORTUGESE TROOPS

LISBON, Dec. 23.—Regular troops and militia were ordered to mobilize throughout Portugal tonight.

CHURCH SUES THE CORPORATION

To Recover Sum of $84 Which Was Levied For Garbage Collection

The trustees of George Street Methdist church are suing the city for eighty dollars, the amount said to have been levied by the city for the collection of refuse and garbage. It is claimed that garbage was not collected from the church and that they are not liable for service which was not performed. The act which empowers the city to assess churches, factories and schools for garbage collection, is a creation of the Ontario government. Only government property is exempt from taxation. The action that has been instituted by George Street Methodist church will be tried in the Division Court before His Honour Judge Huycke. The city has eight days in which to file a defence. In the meantime the matter is in the hands of the Legal committee of the City Council.

The action practically constitutes a test case and should the church authorities win out it will be an incentive for others to follow suit. The Act makes the taxation of churhces, factories and schools compulsory, whether the service is desired or not.

When the matter was brought up in Council last evening it was suggested that the city take action to compel the church authorities to move the sidewalk on the south side of the church back to where it properly belongs

"THE BATTLE CRY"

Charles Neville Buck

"Well," the woman's voice was contemptuous, "I jest took them pertater sets an' flung 'em in thet crick. Next time mebbe ye'll know better."

"Aw, pshaw! ole woman," Fletch's voice was unruffled, "ye didn't do no sich of a fool thing. Ye're jest a-lyin'."

Between the strident voices came every now and then the softly modulated tones of the stranger whose words Juanita lost. Yet somehow, whenever she heard their cadence, she felt soothed, and after each of these utterances the woman outside also spoke in softer tones.

Whoever the stranger was, he carried in his voice a reassuring quality, so that without having seen him the girl felt that in his presence there was an element of strength and safeguarding.

At last from one of the beds she heard a scuffling sound, and a moment later a childish form opened a door at the back of the cabin and slipped out into the darkness.

That revealed an avenue of escape. Juanita had not known that these windowless cabins are usually supplied with tow doors and that the one into which the wind does not drive stands open for light on winter days. Now she, too, rose noiselessly and went out of the close and musty room. It was quite dark out there and she could feel, rather than see the densely foliaged side of the mountain that loomed upward at her back.

Off to one side she could make out, by virtue of lantern-glow between its cracks, the barn, where some one was still busy with the stock.

All about her was impenetrable murk, and she sank down on a large rock which she found in her path. She was wrapped in the depressing contemplation of the task which lay ahead of her, and its stark contrast with all which lay behind her, so that, in her brooding, she lost account of time. The voices at the front seemed now to have died into the same universal silence which held the mountains throttled, and the night chorus had not yet opened. Evidently no one had missed her from the cabin. At last she heard a voice sing out from the stile:

"I'm Jim White, an' I'm a-comin' in."

A thick welcome from Fletch McNash followed and then again silence settled except for the weird strain of a banjo which one of the children was thrumming inside. The banjo carried to the eastern girl's heart a sense of lost soul isolation and eerie loneliness, for the fingers that nursed its strings were slowly picking out one of those mournful ballads which have filtered down from the Scotland of Mary Stuart, and which have survived nowhere else than in this desolate stronghold of the dead ages.

After a while as she sat there on her rock, with her chin disconsolately in her hand, and her elbows on her knees, Juanita became conscious of footsteps and knew that some one was coming toward her. Whoever the person or persons were the approach was very quiet and at first she heard only the light crackle of chips and twigs as they passed the chopping block in the woodpile, but in another moment she caught the calm voice which had already impressed her; the voice of the stranger who had brought home the half-helpless householder.

"I reckon we're out of earshot now. I reckon we kin hev speech here, but heed your voice an' talk low."

In the face of such a preface the girl shrank back with fresh panic. She had no wish to overhear private conversation. She could think of nothing she dreaded more than to be the recipient of any of the dark secrets with which these hills seemed to be honey-combed. If either one of the two men who were only shadows bulked a little blacker than the general darkness, should light a pipe, she would stand forth revealed with all the guilty seeming of an eavesdropper.

She huddled back against the rock and cast an anxious glance about her for a way to escape. Behind lay the mountain wall with its jungle-like growth, where her feet would sound an alarm of rustling branches and disturbed deadwood. But the men were strolling near her and to try to reach the house would require crossing their path.

Then the second shadow spoke and its voice carried, beside the nasal shrillness so common to the hills, the tenseness of suppressed excitement.

"Thar's liable ter be h——l ternight."

The girl thought that the quiet stranger laughed, though of that she could not be certain.

"I reckon ye mean concernin' Cal Douglas?"

"Thet's hit, whin I rid outen Peril this a'ternoon ther Jury hed done took ther case an' everybody 'lowed they'd find a verdict afore sundown."

"I reckon," the taller of the two men answered slowly, and into his softly modulated voice crept something of flinty finality. "I reckon I can tell ye what that verdict's goin' to be. Cal will come clear."

"Thet hain't ther p'int," urged the messenger excitedly. "Thet hain't why I've rid over hyar like a bat outen h——l ter cotch up with ye. I was aimin' ter fotch word over ter ther dance, but es I come by hyar, I seen yore hoss hitched out thar in ther road so I lit an' come in. . . . I reckon ye knows thet Co'te an' thet Jury. Thet's yore business, but thet hain't all."

"Well, what's the balance of it? Talk out. What are ye aimin' to tell me?"

"I met up with a feller in Job Heath's blind tiger jest outside Peril. He'd drunk a lot of licker an' he got ter talking mighty loose-tonged an' free." The girl sickened a little as she felt that her fears were being realized, and one hand went involuntarily up to her breast and stayed there. The young man with the shrill voice talked on impetuously.

"Ever since the trial of Cal Douglas started good, old Milt McBriar hain't been actin' like hisself. Him an' Breck Havey's been stoppin' at ther same hotel in Peril, an' yit Milt hain't 'peared ter be a-bearin' no grudge whatsoever. When ther jury was med up, Milt didn't seek ter challenge fellers that everybody knowed for friends of Cal's. Milt didn't seek ter raise no h—l when Jedge ruled favourable ter Cal right along. This feller what I talked ter, 'lowed thet Milt didn't keer ef Cal came cl'ar."

The listening man once more answered with a quiet laugh. "Do ye 'low that that old rattlesnake, Milt McBriar, aims to stand by an' not try ter hang or penitentiary kin of mine for killin' kin of his" he inquired almost softly.

"Thet's just hit," the answer came quickly and excitedly. "This feller 'lowed thet old Milt aimed ter show ther world thet he couldn't git no jestice in a Co'te thet b'longed ter Anse Havey, an' then he aimed ter 'tend ter his own jestice fer hisself. He 'lows ter hev hit home-made."

CHAPTER IV.

"How is he aimin' to fix it" The question was a bit contemptuous.

"They figger thet when Cal comes cl'ar, he'll ride lickety-split, with a bunch of Havey boys over hyar ter this dance what's a-goin' forward at ther p'int. Some of Milt's fellers aims ter slip over thar, too, an' while Cal's celebratin' they aims ter git him ter-night."

"Do they?" The taller man's voice was velvety. "Well, go on. What else?"

"They aims ter tell ther world thet they let thet law take hit's co'se fust, but thet Bad Anse Havey makes a mockery of ther law. This feller I talked with was just a boy an' ther licker had made him brag mighty heedless. He let on like I was Statt's evidence, same as him an' he told me everything he knew. He 'lowed thet the Haveys were aimin' ter make this dance a big celebration—an' thet Old Milt aimed ter give 'em ter celebrate right an' proper."

For a moment there was silence, and then the quiet voice commented ironically: "My God, them fellers lay a heap of deviltry up against Bad Anse, don't they?"

After a moment of silence, through which Juanita Holland was painfully conscious of the quick beat of her own heart, she heard again the unexcited voice of the tall stranger. Now it was the capable voice of a general officer giving commands.

"Did ye give warnin' in Peril?"

"No—I couldn't get ter speak with Cal. He was in co'te—and seein' as how they didn't figger on raisin' no h——l twell they git over hyar—I didn't turn backwards. I come straight through. I 'lowed this was ther place ter fix things up."

"You ride over to the dancin' party. Get the older fellers together. . . . Keep the boys quiet an" sober . . . cold sober. Watch thet old fool, Bob McGreegor. Don't spread these tidings till I get there. . . . If Cal comes over there tell him to keep outen sight. Nothin' won't break loose before midnight. . . . That's my orders. By God Almighty, I aim to have peace hereabout just now." The speaker's voice broke off and the two men passed out of sight around the corner of the house.

The girl rose and made her way unsteadily to the back door and let herself in. She threw herself on the bed and lay there rapidly thinking. It was obvious that her absence had not been commented upon. A few minutes later she heard the voice of Mrs. McNash singing out, "You folks kin all come in an' eat," and found herself, outwardly calm, making her way around to the shed addition which served jointly as kitchen and dining-room.

When she entered the place Fletch McNash was already seated and sagged over his plate with the stupid inertia of dulled senses. Gone now was his hilarity, and in its place was come the sleepy heaviness of reaction. Even the sight of the "fotched-on woman" elicited from him only a thickly muttered and incoherent comment.

At the centre of the miserable lean-to stood a home-made table covered with red oil-cloth and nondescript crockery. Light came from the roaring blaze of the open hearth over which with pioneer make shift the cookery had gone forward. In the yellow and vermilion flare of the logs the walls appeared to advance and recede in tune to the upleapings of flame. Huddling as far into the shadow of a corner as possible sat the girl, Dawn, like a pink laurel-blossom in a sooty place. Above her head hung several "sides of meat," and at her feet was a pile of potatoes and onions.

But Juanita dismissed with a quick view those figures she had seen before. To Fletch McNash she accorded a glance of veiled disgust. She found herself unaccountably eager to see the tall stranger whose voice had reassured her; who had appeared first as the Samaritan bringing home the helpless; then as the man whose words gained prompt obedience—and finally as the self-ordained advocate of peace.

He was standing as she entered, a little back from the hearth, with the detached air of one who drops into the background or comes to the fore with equal readiness. She found that in appearance as in voice he bore a rough sort of impressiveness about him. In the brighter light stood the messenger, a gaunt youth in whose wild, sharp features lurked cunning, cruelty, and endurance. But the other man, who stood a head taller, fell into a pose of indolent ease which might make instantly into power.

On his clear-cut, rather lean face was a calm which seemed remote from even the memory of excitement. From a breadth of shoulder he tapered wedge-like to the waist and was knit with none of the shambling looseness that Juanita had come to associate with the Cumberland type. In clothing he was much like the rest, except that in a rather indefinable way he escaped their seeming of slouchiness. She wondered where she had seen some portrait that wore as his face did roughness combined with dignity; crudeness with gentleness.

It was a face strongly and ruggedly chiselled, but so dominated by unfaltering, grey eyes that one was apt to forget all else, and carry away only a memory of dark hair — and those eyes. Now as the girl met their steady gaze her own fell before it, yet she had caught a feeling that although she had never looked into such cool depths there lay back of them a strong impression of banked and sleeping fires.

"No, I kain't hardly tarry," she heard the messenger declaring in his nasal, high-pitched voice. "I reckon I've got ter be gone."

As Juanita made her way to a chair at the rough table the woman was saying in that old idiom of the hills, which springs from days when matches were unknown and dead fires must needs be rekindled from a neighbour's hearth, "What's yore tormentin' haste, Jim? Ye acts like ye'd done come ter borry fire."

"I'm a leetle-bit oneasy," interposed the tall man quietly. "Jest those boys over at the dance might git quarrelsome with licker, and I want Jim to ride over an' keep an eye on 'em till I git there. A dancin' party ought richtly to be peaceable."

Then as they sat at table and the girl struggled with her discomfiture over each unclean detail of the food, she raised her eyes from time to time, always to encounter upon her the steady, appraising gaze of the dark stranger. In the desultory conversation of the table he took no part, but sat as taciturn and as wrapped about with his own thoughts as some warrior of the Indians from whim his forefathers had wrested these hills, and from whom they had, to their shame, learned their ethics of warfare.

When they had finished, the stranger drew Fletch, now somewhat sobered by his meal, aside and the other men retired to the chairs in the door-yard. Then the girl from the East again slipped away and took up her solitary place on the top of the stile, where she sat thinking. The group about the door seemed a long way off as their droning voices floated to her in the dark.

A CHRISTMAS CUPID

(By Rosalie G. Mendel)

The day before Christmas was a busy one for the Whartons. The big old-fashioned trunk stood in the middle of the room. As Katherine spread tissue paper over the black silk dress, neatly folded on the top tray, she heard her mother say for the fifth time within the hour, "I just can't make up my mind to leave you alone for the Christmas holidays."

"Now, mother," proclaimed the girl in her full sweet voice, "it is all settled that you are going. Your trunk is nearly packed. The expressman is ordered—your ticket is bought, and I have no doubt that a regiment of your doting relatives are already at the depot waiting to meet you. So put your heart and soul in the trip and stop worrying about leaving to her own resources for a few days your perfectly capable, full-grown daughter."

Mrs. Wharton, gazing lovingly at her beautiful daughter, said, "You who have been under a nerve-strain all winter teaching those restless youngsters, are the one who need the trip—not I."

money and my teacher's modest ing to celebrate their golden wedding," said Katherine, "it is yours. Just think how you would feel if you couldn't be at the family reunion at so great and rare an occasion."

"If only we both could go," sighed the little lady wistfully as she tacked a jet ornament on her last year's hat.

"That is out of the question," declared Katherine, "we had to scrimp and plan enough to get you ready, dear. With our meagre life insurance money and my teacher's modest check, we can't do much in the way of travelling, can we?"

"No, I suppose not," answered the mother plaintively with a pucker between her eyes. "I wouldn't mind so much leaving you if it weren't for the Christmas holidays. All young folks should be celebrating and having a jolly time. I fear you will be lonesome, beacuse we are unacquainted in this strange city."

"Oh, I shall manage all right, dear," proclaimed Katherine cheerfully, as she took a lost look in the closet to be sure nothing was forgotten. "I am not the kind to sit with my hands in my lap and mope and indulge in self-pity. I shall read, sew, write letters and go Christmas window wishing. Maybe some of the neighbours might call. The people in the apartment below appear to be nice and sociable. The little boy is in my room in school. The time will run away; so don't let me hear another word on the subject," commanded the girl with assumed sternness, as she bent over the woman and playfully pinched her pretty white cheek.

Then, after a few moments' hesitation, the fond mother said wistfully, "Have you quite decided about Harry Walker, child? This Christmas season might have been a different one for you."

"I believe so, mother," answered the girl as she lowered the lid of the trunk and turned the key. "I might love Harry well enough to live with him, but the man I marry I want to love so well that I can not live without him."

"Are you sure that you know your own mind—that you will not regret your decision?" inquired Mrs. Wharton.

"No, that is the trouble. I am not certain whether what I feel for Harry is love or friendship and I do want to be sure. Sometimes when the school days are long and hard, when everything goes wrong from that minute that Tony Hawkins comes dragging in ten minutes after the tardy bell has rung, until the time when Susy Brubbs breaks the ink bottle the last thing in the afternoon; when we have to worry our poor heads over the inevitable rent, gas, clothes, et cetera, bills. Then in the back of my brain, I wonder if I have quixotic notions on the subject of marriage and if I shall ever feel any warmer affection for anyone than I do for Harry."

"I like him tremendously," went on Katherine, "and miss him dreadfully since he has decided not to come again until I send for him. But when I think of living with him always—always — always—maybe even until our golden wedding day, I can not decide to marry him."

"That question you must settle for yourself daughter. It is your own life that you must lead and I would not unduly want to influence you. But I must say that I consider Harry a splendid man—one whom I feel confident would make a good, kind husband for you. I think it would be well not to be too hasy in your final decision."

"Oh, you dear old thing," laughed Katherine, hugging her mother impetuously, "you think it is the duty of a practical mother to give me worldly words of wisdom, but down deep in the bottom of your heart you have the same ideas on the questions of love and matrimony as your romantic daughter. However, I promise you," she added, "that I shall give the matter due and serious consideration, and who knows but maybe Christmas will send me a Cupid to help me learn my own mind."

At six o'clock that evening after waving a cheerful farewell from the station platform to Mrs. Wharton, Katherine returned to their cozy little apartment and prepared supper. Clearing away the few dishes, she brought out her work basket, drew a rocker under the lamp in her bedroom, and planned to spend a quiet and restful evening after the past strenuous week.

"Hardly an exciting Christmas Eve," she mused, "but maybe next year at this time things will be a little brighter."

Suddenly the girl sat erect in her chair. She heard a peculiar noise that sounded as if it came from the library, a drip, drip, drip.

"Am I geting nervous and imagining things?" Katherine asked herself in disgust. But still the noise continued—only a litle louder than before. Standing up and breathing hard, she heard the drip, drip, drip change to what sounded like the rushing of water. She hurried into the library and beheld streams of water pouring in from the apartment above.

"Oh!" she cried aloud, in dismay, "the water-pipes upstairs must have burst and our walls and carpets and everything will be ruined.

Quickly running upstairs she rang the bell and pounded at the door of the apartment, but not receiving a response, she realized that no one was at home. Then she flew down to the apartment below her own. At the first ring of the bell, the door opened and she looked into the dark, clear-cut face of a tall young man.

"Oh, please get the janitor or someone, quick!" she said with a childish appeal in her upturned face. "A pipe has burst. I live upstairs. Our place will be overflowed.

Before she had finished the man answered in a deep, rich voice, "I'll find the janitor at once, and then I'll come up to see if I can be of any assistance to you."

On entering the Wharton home a few minutes later he found Katherine busy with a pail and dipper, mops and rags.

"Here, let me help," he said as he came to her rescue. "By George, this is a flood! It reminds me of 'Doctor Foster who went to Gloucester in a puddle of rain!'"

For two hours he man and the girl worked over the deluge. Then, as they both sank down on the couch, Katherine exclaimed, "I thank you so much. I don't know what I should have done without your help. May I ask to whom I am indebted?"

"You are not indebted to anyone," responded the man, with a twinkle in his eye. "In fact, I am under obligations to you for saving me from a most dreary, impossible Christmas Eve. I came here this afternoon from my home town expecting to surprise my sister, who lives downstairs. Imagine by dismay on my arrival to find that she and her family had left the city for the Christmas holidays. As I am a stranger I had no other plans for spending the evening. When you called on me in your distress, you found no more lonesome man on land or sea than Edgar Herrick. That is my name and yours is Miss Katherine Wharton."

"How did you ever know that?" gasped the surprised girl.

HAD SAME COUGH FOR SEVERAL YEARS

Woman Fifty Years Old—Coughed More or Less Since Childhood—Found No Relief Until She Got Vinol.

Dayton, Ohio.—"I want everybody to know what Vinol has done for me. I am now fifty years old and ever since I was a young girl I have had a cough most of the time, and sick headaches which left me weak and with no desire for food.

"I took all kinds of medicines but nothing seemed to do me any good. Finally my druggist asked me to try Vinol, saying that if it did not help me he would refund my money. I felt so much better after taking one bottle I bought more. Now my cough is entirely cured. I have no more sick headaches. I have a good appetite and feel better than I ever did in my life, and I cannot recommend Vinol too highly."—Mrs. J. C. SCHNEIDER, Dayton, Ohio.

Vinol is not a secret nostrum, simply a combination of the medicinal elements found in cod livers, together with tonic iron, contains no oil and is delicious tasting. We ask every man or woman in this vicinity suffering from chronic coughs, colds or bronchitis, and every weak, run-down person to try Vinol.

"That's easy," explained Herrick, observing her apreciatingly as he spoke. "I have heard almost all of your history. My young nephew, Grant Herrick, has the good fortune to be in your class this year. We correspond. He writes regularly and in detail about 'my teacher, Miss Katherine Wharton, what lives upstairs from me!' He has lost his boyish heart to you. He confided in me that he likes you best in your pink blouse because it matches your cheeks."

"Then you must be Grant's author uncle who writes story books and puts Grant in them," stated Katherine.

"The very same," responded Herrick, rising, placing his hand on his chest and making a deep bow.

"Grant has also spoken a great deal about you. I thought it likely that I might meet you some day," laughed Katherine, "but I never expected that you would assume the role of a life saving crew—that you would save me from a watery grave."

Then in a serious tone she added, "I do want to thank you, Mr. Herrick. You have been very kind."

"I really have had a great time, Miss Wharton," answered Herrick enthusiastically, "but as a reward for services rendered I ask you to allow me to continue this rather unconventional acquaintanceship."

"I don't see how I can do otherwise," was Katherine's frank admission, "although I suppose water pipes and a small absent nephew are rather irregular means of introduction. But I am sure, even Madame Grundy might make some allowances at Christmas time, especially since we both are lonesome, are neighbours and have Grant in common. Don't you think so?"

"I most certainly do," replied Edgar warmly. Then shaking hands with the girl and looking into her brown eyes, he added with a warm smile, "I had intended returning home to-morrow, but owing to circumstances over which I have no control, I have decided to remain indefinitely. If you will allow me I shall call for you to-morrow morning and we shall have one big Christmas day together. Will you?"

"Yes," answered Katherine softly, with a pleased look of anticipation.

After Herrick had left Katherine stood in the library and gazed sadly at the damage the water had done to the walls. Going to her bedroom, she took Harry Walker's photograph from her dresser, stared at it long and thoughtfully and then, with a dubious shake of her head, placed it back again.

Christmas day was one of the happiest that the girl had ever spent. In the morning Herrick and she took a long brisk walk in the clear crisp air. Then they stopped at a restaurant for a real Christmas dinner. In the afternoon they went to the matinee, seeing a pretty play entitled "Love at First Sight." After the theatre they returned to Katherine's home and ate a "pot-luck" cold supper from the kitchen table. When it was time for Edgar to leave he said, "I never knew before what a blessing a broken water pipe might be."

That night before retiring Katherine again stared at Harry's picture long and thoughtfully, but this time she took it from her dresser and placed it on her desk at the other end of the room. The following morning Katherine telephoned to the landlord, explaining the damage that had been done to the walls. He refused absolutely to repaper the room before spring.

"If that man won't do it, I will paper the walls myself," decided Katherine as she hung up the receiver. "Mother would be miserable in such a looking place." Having reached this decision, she proceeded to carry it out. Hastening to a wall paper store near her home, she selected an artistic but inexpensive pattern. By noon the paper and paste were delivered and the energetic young woman, enveloped in a large blue-checked apron, was busily engaged in measuring, cutting and hanging wall paper. On hearing a loud knock on the door, Katherine called out, "Who is there?"

"It is Herrick. I came to find out if there are any more waterfalls in this apartment."

"Oh," gasped the girl, "you can't come in now. This place is a perfect fright."

"I like frights. Please let me in," begged Edgar.

"Well," hesitated Katherine, "if you promise not to look."

"Cross my heart," answered the man.

As Herrick entered the room and saw what the girl was doing, he threw back his head and gave a great peal of laughter.

"I think you are most unkind to make fun of my efforts," stated Katherine with a toss of her head. "Our stingy landlord refused to have the work done until spring. I wouldn't want my mother to come back to a water stained room. I couldn't afford to hire a paper hanger, so I decided to do it myself. It isn't hard. I once helped a friend paper her dining-room and we did it beautifully."

"Forgive me, litle girl," pleaded Herrick, "I know I am rude, but if you could see yourself with the daub of paste on the tip of your nose, the smudge on your left cheek and the blotch over your right eyebrow you wouldn't blame me."

Katherine, looking into the mirror, burst into laughter at the sight that greeted her eye, while Edgar snatching a large apron from the kitchen and a brush from the table, mounted the ladder and was soon busily engaged in the art of paper hanging. Until late in the evening they toiled, chatting, laughing and exchanging confidences as they worked. Finally they completed their task. As they stood and gazed with shining faces at the result, Katherine with a happy light in her eye, remarked, "I am proud of our labour."

"It was a labour of love with me," Herrick replied, as he took both of her hands and looked deep into her eyes. Her glance fell under his steady gaze and he caught her in his arms and kissed her tenderly.

"I love you, girlie," he whispered.

Katherine gave a little gasp and then nestling close to him murmured, "Christmas did send me a Cupid after all, and now I know my own mind at last."

IF BACKACHY OR KIDNEYS BOTHER

Eat Less Meat, Also Take Glass of Salts Before Eating Breakfast

Uric acid in meat excites the kidneys, they become overworked; get sluggish, ache, and feel like lumps of lead. The urine becomes cloudy; the bladder is irritated, and you may be obliged to seek relief two or three times during the night. When the kidneys clog you must help them flush off the body's urinous waste or you'll be a real sick person shortly. At first you feel a dull misery in the kidney region, you suffer from backache, sick headache, dizziness, stomach gets sour, tongue coated and you feel rheumatic twinges when the weather is bad.

Eat less meat, drink lots of water; also get from any pharmacist four ounces of Jad Salts; take a teaspoonful in a glass of water before breakfast for a few days and your kidneys will then act fine. This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and has been used for generations to clean clogged kidneys and stimulate them to normal activity, also to neutralize the acids in urine, so it no longer is a source of irritation, thus ending bladder weakness.

Jad Salts is inexpensive, cannot injure; makes a delightful effervescent lithia-water drink which everyone should take now and then to keep the kidneys clean and active. Druggists here say they sell lots of Jad Salts to folks who believe in overcoming kidney trouble while it is only trouble.

Last Friday evening, Dec. 18th, Mr. and Mrs. John Edwards, life-long and highly respected residents of Keene and vicinity, celebrated their fiftieth wedding anniversary. Their home was beautifully decorated for the occasion, in the parlour an arch of evergreen to which was suspended a large white bell under which the bride and groom sat to receive, looking as happy as fifty years ago. After the reception about forty guests repaired to the dining-room, where an elegant repast was served, to which all did ample justice. The dining-room was decorated with ever greens, and white satin ribbons running from the ceiling to service plates on the table. In the centre of the table was a three-storey bride's cake decorated with gold leaves and a large white rose and buds on the top. After supper was over the family presented the mother with a beautiful gold watch and chain, and to the father, a black guard mounted with gold, and a handsome chair. The groom's present to the bride was a gold ring. Mr. David Edwards read a splendid address, to which Mr. Edwards, Sr., gave a heart-felt reply. Among other things the bridesmaid was still living and was on her way to attend the aniversary when she received word of the death of her brother, Mr. James Kempt, at Longfort, Ont. The hapy couple were the recipients of many other beautiful and useful presents. Mr. and Mrs. Edwards were the parents of six children, all of whom are living. Half a Million Hardy Warriors Join the Russian Forces.

PETROGRAD, Dec. 23. — Half a million Calmucks, members of a nomadic, pastoral race, which has always been free from obligation to furnish any soldiers for the Russian army, have just been added to the Russian forces.

A deputation from the Calmucks recently arrived in Petrograd with a request that they be allowed to serve in the ranks during the present war, and offering to supply 500,000 mounted troops, if necessary. "Our tribes have volunteered practically en masse," declared the leader of the deputation.

The Emperor's reply grants them a military organisation and privileges similar to those enjoyed by the Cossacks.

PETROGRAD, Dec. 23. — (Via London.)—The Bulgarian Minister announced yesterday that an agreement had been reached between Roumania and Bulgaria, under which Roumania will restore to Bulgaria the Province of Dobrudja and most of the other territory which she acquired from Bulgaria as a result of the second Balkan war.

Twitching of the Nerves Broken-down System

Now Entirely Cured—Never Used Any Medicine With Such Benefit as Dr. Chase's Nerve Food.

Headaches, sleeplessness and nervousness are often very disagreeable, but when your nervous system gets into such a condition that the nerves twitch and jerk, and you have peculiar nervous sensations come over you there is cause for grave alarm.

MRS. MCKELLAR.

Everybody dreads the thought of paralysis or locomotor ataxia. Nothing is worse to look forward to than helplessness. Sometimes it is helplessness of body, and at other times the mind is affected, which is far worse.

The writer of this letter did not know what to expect, but fortunately began the use of Dr. Chase's Nerve Food in time to head off danger, and writes that she was entirely cured of the old trouble. The last paragraph proves that the cure was lasting.

Mrs. John McKellar, 11 Barton street east, Hamilton, Ont., writes:—"I was injured some years ago, and that left me with a broken-down nervous system. I could not sleep, and suffered from twitching of the nerves and disagreeable nervous sensations.

"I then began using Dr. Chase's Nerve Food, and can say that I never used any medicine that did me so much good; in fact, I am entirely cured of my old trouble. The Nerve Food not only strengthened the nerves, but also built up my system in every way."

Having since received data Mrs. McKellar writes confirming her cure, and states that she has had inquiries from many people who had heard of the great benefits she obtained from Dr. Chase's Nerve Food.

AEROPLANE in PEACE and in WAR

Blériot Over the Coast of England.

Louis Blériot and His Family.

Louis Blériot's Children Watching Their Father Fly on the Coast of France.

Madam Madeleine Blériot-Johnson, Sister of Louis Blériot, in Flying Costume.

Madam Madeleine Blériot-Johnson, Sister of Louis Blériot.

By Madame Madeleine Blériot-Johnson.

THE airship is no longer a thing for sport.

It has changed the whole scheme of war. It is a beautiful thing—a grand thing! I am proud of my brother, who has given to the world such an eagle for reconnoitre and defence. I think that for scouting work and to drive away the Zeppelins the aeroplane is a great thing; it is all right. But the destruction it is not fair. It is not fair to drop death upon the innocent and to destroy cities.

You will notice that the aeroplane has not been used for destruction in this war, but only to locate the enemy and fight the Zeppelins.

Think of those thrilling battles in the air! It makes one realise the first giant birds, in the beginning of the world, engaging in a fight: great talons tearing, strong wings beating, and the bayonet throats of powerful beaks. But the bird was master of the air, while the aeroplanes—ah, those poor mangled heroes!

My brother has been made head of the airship fleet in France. It is a very dangerous position. I think it one of the most perilous positions in this war.

He has, you know, many different kinds of aeroplanes, which he manufactures in six or seven cities in France, but his principal manufactory and aviation field is at Buc, in Seine et Oise, a few miles from Paris.

The demands of war have brought forth [illegible] The war aeroplane has a different structure and arrangements are different. It is a fighting craft. All the secret of perfect balance were mastered. The aeroplane would prove a terrible fighting machine. Even as it is, I think its use will have a decisive effect on the war. It is a very important thing, as you see, and, like everything now, its place in war has to be worked out. But there will come a time when they will find perfect balance in the air, just as perfect balance has been found for boats on the water. Then there will be no more danger in the use of the aeroplane than there is in the use of boats.

In the present stage of aeroplane warfare those aerial fights are terribly thrilling. One man who fought a Zeppelin and came out safe declared 'Never again.' But I do not believe those aeronauts think any more about danger than do cavalry officers. It seems to me that when a man goes to war he knows he may get killed, and so he thinks he may as well take a chance in the air as on the sea or the land. Of course, the danger is great, because he has not conquered his craft nor his element as yet, but I think there is always a chance to get out.

I am sure that women possess the requisite courage to make successful air pilots. Yes, they have the courage. I think women are brave enough for the profession of aviation, but it is not in their nature to go into dangerous occupations. They do not drive automobiles as a race; they are not locomotive engineers. The tastes of women lie in other directions. Once in a while women go into daring things for money; very seldom for glory.

Then why do we fly? Curiosity. You must go back to Eve for the real reason why women go into aviation. We want to know what it is like; to experience a new sensation. That was why I went up with my brother. And oh, how can I describe that first experience!"

It is like a young fledgling trembling on the edge of its nest and trying its wings for the first time. When the wings are spread and the nest forsaken—I don't know what to call it; the sensation palpitates through you. I felt as though everything was going away, going away, going away—the earth dropping from under me, further and further; then the feeling of being in a new world! It is wonderful! Always I have the same sensation on mounting in the air, only it is not new. One knows what to expect.

Fear? No, I do not think I fear anything, for fear is but a mental habit and can be controlled. Why are people always afraid? Being alive is the most dangerous thing in the world. It is certain to end in death, so why worry? When my time comes to die I shall die, and I shall not die before.

Nerve? Ah, nerve comes with doing things! To do anything in the world well one must be a fatalist. The fatalist is the only person in the world who takes chances. Without elegance life is dull and gray as a fog covered world below the clouds. Fatalism is the happiest of all faiths. You know you cannot hasten or retard the inevitable, and you waste no time in useless fears. To every aviatress I would say, "Be a fatalist."

I do not think that my courage is in any way remarkable. Every day when I am on the streets I am in more danger from automobiles—far more danger—than in the air. It is but a little while when travel by air will be practicable and safer, I think, than travel by land. It is just a matter of understanding air currents and storms. Thousands of men are working on that problem, and it must soon be solved. Think how absorbing it is to work in a field where every day something new may be discovered!

The possibilities of discovery make the charm of life. We do not even discover ourselves until some need arises. We all have tremendous undiscovered possibilities. That is one reason it is well to have a hobby. I think a hobby is absolutely necessary for people who do not make a living. It enables them to keep interested and to develop—to go on discovering themselves. For this reason I think many women would be better if they would take up aviation. It is absorbing; it crowds out petty things. It is dangerous, and so the head must be cool and steady and the nerves calm. It develops rapid mental and physical processes and the power to keep perfectly still.

The aviatress cannot do what you Americans call "wiggle." She must not waste what she can be helped when in the air. I think a woman really is as level-headed as a man, but she is not as steady. A woman is more nervous than a man. While a woman who takes up aviation has no fear for herself, she has the womanly heart and the woman's nerves; she would fear for the safety of those in the air with her. And you know that in the air you cannot lose your head for a moment. My brother says that is the cause of most accidents: some little thing goes wrong; the man knows there is nothing under him; for just an instant he loses his head, his nerve, and he falls.

My brother was the first airman to fly across the Channel. Once he was lost for ten minutes. That was how he learned the danger if one loses his head. The waves of the air tossed him in a storm; there was no fog; he did not know where he was. He only knew far below him there was a stormy sea and he adrift in the clouds above it. Worst of all the gas was sick. Can you think how dangerous that is? A woman who would be an aviator must face that.

Then there is another thing. When one goes very high blood is apt to spring from the ears and one gets very deaf. Indeed, momentary deafness comes at a height far less than is required for the bleeding. You feel as though something were turning around, buzzing inside your ears, and you may become deaf. It is always necessary to wear something over the ears when making high flights. My brother always does.

My brother's wife does not like his work. She was always afraid he would be killed. Think what she feels now! I was never afraid of that. He flew seven years before he gave it up professionally at the solicitation of his wife to make monoplanes. He has big factories and a big family, five children. And his heart is big. My brother wishes all humanity to benefit by everything he discovers in his work. He never dreamed to what pass his country would put his discovery; what his flight across the Channel would mean to-day.

I prefer the monoplane because it is so like a big bird. Birds don't have two story wings. "The monoplane," my brother used to say, "is best because it is natural."

When he was a child he used to go out and watch the birds flying and study their motions, and when I was little I used to go and watch his attempts with the flying apparatus. I really grew up to aviation.

You must remember there are more aeroplanes used in France than elsewhere. In Europe men often go to dinners and hunts in their aeroplanes instead of in automobiles. There is much interest on your Pacific coast in air navigation. It was there that I flew with Rodgers. He was too daring. People expected it of him, and so he lost his life. What you call "fancy stunts" are the cause of danger in aviation. I would never care to be what you call a "high flyer," but would try only for long distances. Long distance flights must become practicable and universal in order that aviation may fulfil its purpose of usefulness.

Here one aeroplane flying above the city is considered a wonderful thing. In Paris they fly above the city every day. You hear the loud b-z-z-z-z something like a sawmill. When you are in the air you do not hear the sound so plainly. In this respect the aeroplane is something like the automobile; people below the plane get the noise; people behind the automobile get the smell.

The first woman aviator, Mme. Thérèse Peltier, was a French sculptress, and Mlle. Jeanne Herves won the Coup Femina at Pau in 1910, when she flew seventy-eight miles.

Baroness Raymond de la Roche was the first to receive an aero license. Aviation to her is life itself, and certainly she has paid a high price for the fun, having had every limb broken. Hélène Dutrieux won the woman's time and passenger carrying record in 1910, when she flew from Ostend to Bruges and return, carrying a passenger.

There are quite a number of French women professionals, the Ilter sisters, Mme. Herwartson, Mme. Daily, the licensed pilot; Mlle. Marwing, who is noted for her fast flying; Mlle. Aboukaïn, Mme. Kaschlin, Mme. Franck, of English Channel fame, and Mme. Louise Faulhan, who, you know, flew over the water from Los Angeles. Men in France take their wives, their sisters and their sweethearts with them. That is the reason most women fly—it is to accompany the men they love. Only a few go into the profession for gain, and fewer still for glory.

The women I tell you of represent those fearless ones who are able to take up aviation and make a success of it. They have not experienced as many accidents as men. The profession is lucrative, but not as much so as for a man. A woman can get more money for a contract, but she is not as valuable for exhibition purposes as a man. If a woman killed herself in some aerial accident the crowd would make a terrible row. But if a man is killed the people accept that as part of the game. They are shocked, but they will remain in the field and will continue to attend exhibitions.

A properly built machine is not hard to run and a woman with courage can become as good an aviator as a man. But I do not think many will enter the aerial profession. See how many women own automobiles and how few drive them. I think in ten years aviation will be what automobiling is now. When the novelty wears off even fewer women will enter the profession. Every woman in France now wants to be a nurse. How many wish to scout? That is where the woman shows her nature. It is to comfort.

I believe that woman should do the thing for which nature destined her. The whole purpose of a woman is to give life, not to take it. The place of the woman in war is to be near the wounded; to save life.

I took up the profession of aviation because I wanted distraction after bereavement. Women will take it up here and there, as they occasionally take up other work in the field of dangerous occupations, but very few will risk life in the air from pure love of it.

Nothing but Names.

By ERNEST DUPUY.

Oh, sad is the lot of the man who writes war,
And deep are the terrors that lurk.
These Indian names were the last blooming straw
And now comes the unspeakable Turk.

The Jats and Punjabis, with Sikhs from Lahore,
From Meerut and Kohat and Lucknow:
Bengalis and Brahmins—Rajputs by the score,
And Mahrattas will join in the row.

Maharaja Bahadur Sir Partab of Singh,
Who is Regent in far off Marwar,
Will lead all the soldiers from Indian lands
Who will fight for the "Raj" in this war.

The Khan of Kalat and the Rao of Kutch
And the Thakur Sahib of Gondal,
A trio of fighters impossible as such,
With the giddy Begum of Bhopal.

Sir Bikram Bahadur Shat Sham[illegible]
Who is ruling the hordes of Nepal,
Has sent forth his Ghurkas with clatter and bang
(Their sharp "khukris" are known to us all).

Sir Ugyen Wahgchuk, who holds out in Bhutan,
Has asserted his wishes to fight;
The Nawab of Tonk and the Prince of Nahan
They have also come out for the right.

The Jam of Nawanager pines for a scrap
In a way that is pleasant to see;
The Mir of Khairpur is another young chap
With a penchant in battle to be.

Yes, sad is the lot of the man who writes war,
And deep are the terrors that lurk.
These Indian names were the last blooming straw
And now comes the unspeakable Turk.

The Elephants of India

By Henry D. Baker,

United States Consul at Bombay.

WILD elephants are found in most of the large forests of India, from the foot of the Himalayas to the extreme south of the Indian Peninsula, and throughout the peninsula to the east of the Bay of Bengal into Burma and Siam. They are also found in Ceylon.

There is said to be only one species of elephant throughout these tracts. In the native State of Mysore, in Southern India, they seem to be especially numerous, as shown by the fact that during the visit of the Viceroy of India to that State in November, 1913, there was an elephant drive, at which about 120 were caught, of which number 24 were later invoiced at the American Consulate at Bombay for shipment to the United States for circus purposes.

The declared export return of these elephants at this consulate showed prices ranging from $166 for a baby elephant three feet high, up to $583 for a female elephant five feet three inches high. Most of the consignments averaged about $500 each in price, and the total of the 24 elephants cost altogether $11,737.

The chief methods adopted for the capture of wild elephants in India are as follows:—Driving into "kheddahs" or enclosures, hunting with trained females, pitfalls, noosing from trained elephants' backs. The "kheddah" plan, such as was used at the recent drive in Mysore, is the only one adapted for the capture of whole herds, the others being for single elephants. It is a method in vogue wherever there are government hunting establishments in India. About 270 men are usually need for such work, and attached to each party there must be a number of tame elephants to deal with the wild elephants when captured, for not only have the wild ones to be led out of the jungle and taken to drink and bathe daily, but each requires an elephant's load of fodder, which the tame ones have to bring, consequently two wild ones to each tame one is the maximum that can be managed.

When the elephants are driven into a peculiar space, which may be from six to ten miles in circumference, and within which there must be good fodder, a thin fence of split bamboos is placed around it, and this enclosure may be maintained for a week or so until the elephants seem to become accustomed to it.

The elephants thus inclosed are finally guided by beaters to a gate from which two lines of strong palisades run out. The gate is made very strong, and is studded with iron spikes on the inside. Through this gateway and palisade the elephants are driven into a small enclosure, and then tame elephants enter and secure the wild ones by separating them one by one from their companions. Their hind legs are tied together and ropes placed around each captive's neck, after which they are led out and picketed in the forest until they have been sufficiently subjugated to be removed.

The largest male elephants are seldom caught with a herd in this way, as they usually make their escape out of the circle of men through their greater boldness. As a rule they are caught by making use of decoy female elephants, which are driven to the jungle where the single male is known to be. The females are allowed to graze as though they were wild, but there are men riding them who are partly concealed with dark colored blankets. When approaching the females these large males are secured by the legs and fastened to trees. Catching elephants by pitfalls is considered cruel and dangerous and is now practiced very little. The sport of noosing from trained elephants' backs is said to be an exciting but not an advantageous method of catching them.

The largest tusks of Indian elephants measure not more than four or five feet in length, outside curve, and about sixteen inches in circumference at the gum, and weigh about seventy four pounds. The tusks, except those of very aged elephants, are only solid for a portion of their length; the hollow is filled with firm bloody pulp. In young animals the tusks are only solid for a portion of their length even outside the gum and are hollow throughout the embedded portion. With age the pulp cavity decreases in depth till in very old animals it becomes almost obliterated.

The government of the State of Mysore has just issued a notice that all ivory in the shape of elephants' tusks in that State shall be sold by public auction by the district treasury officer at Bangalore in convenient lots once a year. A tusk or a portion of a tusk may be sold in retail between any two auctions, with the approval of the government, at the highest rate secured at the last previous auction sale. In all of India wild elephants are considered government property, and permission to hunt them, if obtainable at all, is only effected by payment of heavy license fees, and even then there is much restriction. In fact, wild elephants enjoy almost perfect immunity in India, except for occasional captures for government purposes.

Commercially elephants in India come under two classes—the one of pageantry, the other of utility. Every native prince or nobleman of distinction in India keeps elephants to swell his retinue, while on the other hand government officials and private persons, such as timber contractors, &c., require them for work.

For court display and temple processions, perfection of form and carriage is the paramount consideration, but for economic purposes, strength and docility are the main requirements.

The tuskers or male animals are far more valuable for work than females, not only from their greater strength but from the good use they make of their tusks in turning and carrying logs. A tusker, if given the end of a rope to pull, puts it over one tusk, and holding the end between his teeth can move a weight with this purchase which a female with only the hold of her teeth would not be able to manage.

Tusks generally require cutting once a year. For this the elephant is made to lie down in water, and the portion to be removed is then sawed off. This gives him no pain, and is necessary to prevent elephants injuring one another, but not as a precaution for the safety of their attendants.

Elephants are used by the government for the transport of troops, and for provisioning outpost stations which are not connected by roads. The progressive development of roads and railways in India may be expected to do away with the necessity for the services of some of these animals in the most accessible localities.

CHAPTER XV.
Correspondence Under Difficulties.

TWO days and never a sign more of Loubeque. Lucille had feared and dreaded that first meeting.

The room assigned her was to all outward seeming a daintily furnished bedchamber; but, trying the large windows, she found they only could be let down from the top and were there covered by a thin netting of a metal that resisted every attempt at prying apart. Looking more carefully, she saw this same filament of wire was interwoven with the glass so they could not be completely smashed. The only means of escape lay by the door, and to get out that way involved a flight of steps which passed many rooms.

But she must escape. The thought of what Loubeque might be doing unimpeded drove her brain tyrannically against a worn out body. She had the man's diary, wherein was evidence against him of such crimes as would have appalled the most hardened courts, would have set nations at one another's throats, entailed countless deaths. The thing was so deadly that, zealous though she was in her object of saving her sweetheart, Lucille knew she could never bring herself to the point of making public such a document. She had the rubies from the throat of the hideous idol in the subterranean cave. Times without number she regarded the glowing stones, shuddered at the blood red rays that mocked her from each facet, imagining the heart of each to have borrowed some of its luster from the rivers of blood that had been shed through the lure of its mocking light.

Apparently she was free to come and go about the place as she pleased, but the very mockery of such a freedom made her real situation pall the more. Absorbed in the hopeless task of finding some means of escape she took to having her meals served in her room, eating scarcely anything, so engrossed was she with her thoughts.

On the fourth day, as she sat beside the window, dejectedly looking out upon the well nigh deserted street, she was suddenly aware of a shadow falling upon the glass. She sprang to her feet, turned to face Loubeque. The spy was not smiling now. Instead there was a tender expression on his face, a look of sympathy. In his hands he held a newspaper and instantly she divined it held something that would hurt her. She nodded slowly, catching her breath with an effort, fighting back her nameless terror.

"Lucille"— The spy's eyes fell before the fear in the steady ones that met his own. "Lucille, you are too young yet to know that in the completion of any great work always there are those who must suffer." He stopped, evidently finding it hard to continue.

"I would not harm you, Lucille; would not cause you one moment's grief or misery, physical or mental, for anything in the world. But I would allow not even the—yes, the love I bear you because of your likeness to your mother to stand in the way of destroying you utterly should you attempt to get in my path. And so I am very happy today—very happy for myself, while I am at the same time very unhappy because of your distress. I know you cannot understand my feeling. I only wish you to know that you have stolen the fruits, the sweets of my victory."

"Victory?" She whispered the word aloud.

Silently he put the newspaper in her outstretched hand. She took it numbly, staring at the black, leaded type heading the column, staring at the familiar, the beloved name of her sweetheart there. When she looked up Hugo Loubeque was gone, had disappeared. But that did not matter to her now. The nature of his disappearance did not even impress her. Nothing mattered. The spy's victory was approaching completion.

Lucille looked around wildly. She beat her tiny fists against the window, then stopped at the utter futility of it. She looked down, and her eyes stared wide into those of a pedestrian upon the sidewalk. It was the captain of the ship who had been her friend. She waved her hand, knowing from his expression that he recognized her, that he had been hunting her. He made a motion as of writing, and she nodded swiftly, then darted toward the little dressing table.

And there she sat, dumb with misery. In the delight of seeing a friend's face at the psychological moment, when her despair, her misery, her desperation, was at its height, she had not thought a simple thing like a pencil, a pen, ink, paper, might be necessary. In despair Lucille looked about her. Paper she had. She tore the blank strip off the top of the newspaper page, tore it so that the headline regarding Lieutenant Gibson appeared beneath it. She stared helplessly in the mirror, her teeth fastened viciously in her lower lip, so viciously that when she withdrew them a tiny drop of red blood appeared upon the delicate skin. If only she had a pencil or pen, something to write with—

The blood drop fell upon the paper, carmining it. Lucille grasped delightedly. Her hand seized a pin from the writing table and dabbled at the blot it had dried up. Nervous herself she lightly jabbed the pin into the ball of her thumb, feverishly writing upon the blank paper. How painful it was. How swiftly the blood dried! But she must—she must—

"Prisoner of Loubeque—Here help—Head head"—

She swayed slightly. She could endure the torture no longer. It was sufficient. He could piece together what he read, what she had told him aboard the ship. But how to reach him with the fragmentary strip of paper? Tearing the necklace from about her throat she detached a jewel swiftly and wrapped the strip of paper about it. In one leap she had reached the window. The captain was still there.

For a moment Lucille hesitated. She must break the window pane. Swiftly she took a step from her seat, drew back and brought the ring heel crashing against the glass. At the sound of smashing glass she heard a rustling without her door. The captain looked up at her, and simultaneously she flipped the round missile toward him watched him eagerly as he stooped to pick it up and then thrust it hurriedly in his pocket, passing on. She saw Thompson, the butler, slip hurriedly out of the door and take after him. Then a slight creaking, as of rusty hinges, and she started about her in mute horror. She was moving down and walls were advancing forward. She was moving down and the room was moving with her.

Came a little groan, a tremor running through the walls of the room. Looking up she could see solid steel walls passing into plain where the room she was in had been. Merely a cage—an elevator had been the boudoir where she was a captive. The machinery stopped working abruptly. She peered over the edge of the room for she was merely standing on a flat surface so far as one side was concerned. To her ears came the insistent ringing of a bell. A huddled black mass showed almost beneath her. Crouching upon the floor she leaned over and gingerly groped at it with her fingers, drawing them sharply back as they encountered human flesh.

For just a second she faltered before investigating her discovery. Loubeque must have come from her room in this fashion. It might be that in some way Loubeque had fallen and injured the machinery. To stoop down, take the papers from his pocket and hide them between the crack of the floor of the room and the bottom of the elevator was the work of an instant.

As the room glided gently into place without so much as a tremor she leaped down and lifted the groaning man's head to her lap. She had come barely in time, for the spy was struggling feebly to get to his feet. He smiled ruefully as he lighted a match and scanned the features of his conqueror. For a second he appeared dazed, then swift consternation crossed his face, as his hand shot toward the place where he had placed the stolen papers.

"Come," he said quietly, his tones silky, yet dry and cold and hard. "come, young lady. Of course you understand the papers will be found, and this is merely delaying the inevitable."

He did not wait for her to speak, merely touched her arm and assisted her to the platform. He stirred slightly. Came the whir of machinery, almost immediately shut out. Once more the room was in motion, going upward this time. She closed her eyes instinctively before the mystery of it all. When she opened them once more she was in the place she had left. Everything was as it had been save for a broken window pane and the presence of Loubeque.

He regarded her narrowly, still smoking silently. He opened his lips as though to speak, then closed them sharply and stepped to the door, listening a moment, then ringing a bell, which was almost immediately answered by the butler and the woman, who had first captured the girl.

Hurriedly Thompson explained what had happened—the pebble wrapped strip of white paper which the man outside had picked up, the manner in which he had mysteriously disappeared, eluding the butler's pursuit, the admission of policemen to the house and the throwing of the spring that lowered the girl's room to the basement.

"And he got out of the way, eh?" Loubeque frowned thoughtfully, then laughed a dry, barking laugh as he turned to the girl. "And with all this luck working for you, Miss Lucille, you see now how impossible it is to escape. Now I shall leave you alone to reflect upon the advisability of restoring the packet to me. Until then you will not be disturbed even by a servant. You may recall, my child, that thirst is a very unpleasant torture."

He closed the door behind him very softly. Not a sound came from without. Hunger, thirst, solitude—all three in this prison, this prison so much unlike a prison that it was rendered only the more hideous thereby. And even though outsiders knew she was being detained here they could not find her, could not even secure adequate evidence that she was here did they make an examination. She flung herself upon the bed, burying her face in her hands and giving way to sobs.

She straightened, startled by a faint tinkle against the window pane. Swiftly she approached the window. Upon the street no one was in sight. She noted up and espied the face of the captain peering cautiously from over the brick wall above her.

Feverishly she ripped at the netting which had been within the glass before she broke it. Carefully she drew the glass inside and laid it upon the floor. The netting gave slightly. She tore her hands opening the space until she could get her shoulders through. Slowly, round and round, she worked the opening. It was finally wide enough. She looked up. The captain nodded briefly, then disappeared.

In a moment he reappeared, slowly dangling a heavy rope from which he had made a looped chair. Lucille edged her way slowly through the opening, her guard upon the heavy sill outside. Hanging to the netting with one hand the while she reached for the rope with the other. The second time her fingers closed about it. Swiftly she tucked it about her skirts, then drew taut. Her feet swung clear of the ledge. Then she felt herself being slowly lifted, lifted in little spasmodic jerks.

Her finger tips brushed the roof. Another pull and she had a firm hold and was drawing herself over. Powerful hands closed about her wrists, when from below came a shout that told she had been discovered.

With an oath the captain yanked her to the roof, jerked her there so violently she toppled and fell against him, straightened and caught his arm to support herself.

From beneath them came sounds of pursuit, hurrying footsteps upon stairs, loud voices. Lucille seemed to have all the initiative now. She grasped the man's arm and hurried him toward the closest chimney just as a skylight door flung open where they had stood.

He drew a revolver and held it steadily pointing toward the place. A chip of plaster crackled at their feet. Lucille looked down at a flattened lead bullet. Yet there had been no shot fired. She stared incredulously at the man.

"A silencer—Maxim silencer," he whispered.

She nodded understanding. Together they crept in the shadow of the chimney toward the thin brick dividing wall, the sanded roof scratching their hands terribly. Again that flutter of chips. The captain turned and fairly hurled a shot from his revolver at the figures so cautiously approaching. A cry of pain followed the report and in the confusion, the pair made a short rush.

The pursuit grew bold now. Rose the voice of Loubeque, cold, steady, terrible.

"Don't waste shots. Get the man with lead. Catch the girl."

The captain's grip tightened reassuringly on her wrist.

"If they get me," he said quietly, "take the gun and make them work."

In the excitement he became separated from Lucille. She looked about, then uttered a cry of warning. He took a step backward, then instinctively lifted his elbow as though to avert a bullet. The movement overbalanced him and he disappeared over the edge, a groping, tumbling thing.

From every direction came the pursuit. Lucille suddenly noticed there was no attempt made to close in upon her, but that she was being driven in a certain direction. A bullet chipped a spray of sand into her face, and she darted aside—darted into a yawning blackness.

When she opened her eyes she was surprised to find that there had been no fall worth mentioning, that she had merely been driven toward a trap door and caught as she toppled down. Loubeque was watching her, a curiously twisted smile playing about the corners of his mouth.

"You have too many friends, Lucille," he said.

"Yes," he murmured, after a moment's silence, "you are altogether too too slippery, too nerve racking a prisoner. I think, while the match lasts, the packet is going on it would save wear and tear on our constitutions to move you to my ranch—my ranch in Mexico. A beautiful spot," he smiled. "I trust you will enjoy it as much as I have."

Lucille looked at him steadily. In the eyes of both glowed an indomitable purpose, a hard resolve, a grudging admiration. Loubeque smiled once more, this time grimly.

"Honors have been too easy all now. I fancy the ranch will settle the matter satisfactorily—at any rate satisfactorily to me."

As Thompson, the butler-thief, swiftly descended to the ground floor and out into the court and knelt over the body of the man who had fallen from the roof top, his hands fluttered over the man like tiny, white birds. Through the pockets he went, finding them completely and replacing those things which would be of no value to him. He stopped as he unwrapped the note Lucille had written on the scrap of paper and bound about the robe.

Incredulity, avarice and puzzled delight fought for mastery upon his face. In his eyes. Secreting the ruby in his pocket, he carefully lifted his burden and carried it to the basement of the house. Then he took one last, loving look at his find and started in search of his master. Already a plan had entered his cunning brain to gain the rest of the necklace, a plan whereby Loubeque was to be no gainer.

Hard of Hearing.

An old farmer in Ayrshire had a habit of feigning deafness when he wanted to avoid answering an awkward question. One day a neighbour said to him:

"I'd like to borrow your cart this morning. Mine is having a spring mended."

"You'll have to speak louder," the old farmer answered. "I don't hear very well—and I don't like to lend my cart, anyhow."

GURKHA'S LATEST FEAT.

Capture of Two Bags of Mail From the Germans.

LONDON, Dec. 23—An officer from the front spoke last evening in glowing terms of the work of the Indian troops at the front:

'Their cleverness in spying out thte enemy is a mystery to the British 'Tommy.' As the result of an exploit by the Gurkhas the Army Intelligence Department was presented with some valuable information contained in a couple of mail-bags for the Germans.

"With the consent of their officer they crept out of the trenches, and after a few hours returned with the bags. It is assumed that they accounted for those in charge of them, and on their return they took them to the officer, saluted, and returned to their posts without offering any explanation."

SHE GAINED 36 LBS.

Mrs. George Bradshaw, Harlowe, Ont., writes: "I was troubled for many years with weak, watery blood and dropsy. I had nervous headaches, dizziness and sinking spells, and was, in fact, a semi-invalid. Doctors told me my heart and kidneys were diseased and gave me up. By using 10 boxes of Dr. Chase's Nerve Food I have been cured of many of my old complaints and gained 36 pounds in weight."

EXAMINER PATTERN SERVICE

The waist illustrated is made of sand colored satin and trimmed with striped silk in very dark blue and sand color. Dark blue buttons and a tiny bow made from the blue stripe of the silk finish the front. The raglan sleeve has been used and, as the back view shows, can be made full length if desired. The "outside finish" in this case is the girdle, which is not separate, but attached to the waist at the upper edge. The pattern, No. 6,968, comes in sizes 34 to 44 inches bust measure.

Sand color is all the rage and one of the smartest Fifth avenue shops has a window full of sand colored blouses. All sorts of materials are represented and many in combination—chiffon, satin crepe de Chine, Georgette crepe—all in sand color. For contrast in small details black is used and midnight blue; but a very little of either—just a girdle or a bow, or something dangling from the neck. These blouses look well with hats in the same shade, though, generally speaking, this is not a reason for matching. If the costume is blue or green the hat is almost certain not to be.

Price, 10 cents

When ordering remember to give your name and address as well as the number and size of pattern required and age of a child.

Soldiers Dance When Under Fire

Interesting glimpses of how Tommy Atkins and his comrade in arms, Jacques Bonhomme, amuse themselves while under German fire are contained in a letter written by a French soldier at Ypres and printed in the Figaro. The letter is dated November 6.

"My dear friend," he writes. "We arrived at Ypres one fine morning behind our division and installed ourselves in a big house whose tenants had run away at the first sign of danger. Before us is the beautiful architecture of the market place, while on the square is the hurry and rumble of passing automobiles, of convoys and columns crossing each other, the stir and life of a centre where several divisional headquarters are situated.

"The English are in the majority. Their officers stroll through the street, correct and phlegmatic, cane in hand. The civilians, numbers of whom still remain, are taking the air, chatting gaily. Only the far off rumble of cannonading tells us that war is going on. Life is beautiful. For two days we have calm—we breathe. Then, the following night, a cluster of German shells drop in the town just at midnight, demolishing six houses.

"The civilians who have remained take themselves to the shelter of the bomb-proofs they have constructed. These are cold little caves under the heavy walls, and are some twenty yards in depth. At the end, a brick wall; above, a tiny opening for ventilation. Benches and planks strewn about form the furniture, on which they have placed mattresses and covers. The furthest part is reserved for the nursery, where the children are making almost as much noise as the bursting shells. The little ones are playing happily while their parents worry.

ARTILLERY FANTASY WITHOUT RHYTHM.

"The shells destined for the town pass over our heads. One hears their approach, which sounds like the siren of an automobile, the rolling of a railroad car on the track or the whistle of the tempest. And two or three seconds after the noise of the explosion resounds. They arrive at unequal intervals; three or four a minute, then interruptions sometimes for hours. Sometimes isolated shots, five or ten minutes apart. The German artillerymen are playing a fantasy without rhythm.

"To fill in the periods of silence there is the armoured train which rumbles about under the walls of the town; the largest gun in it hurls its projectiles twenty kilometres. This diabolic engine is manoeuvred by an English sailor who smokes his pipe with an aggravating calm. 'Little Willy,' as the gun has been nicknamed, is a troublesome neighbour, but he does his work well. Every time that the sailor jerks the lanyard the roar of 'Little Willy' fairly shakes the walls.

"Ba—ba—plouf—plouf! Two German 'smoke-pots' burst beside our casemate, causing the first casualty among our men. A soldier barber shaving a comrade neatly clips off the tip of his client's nose as the roar of the bursting shells makes him jump!

"In such circumstances it is interesting to listen to conversation. One would think that the men would have nothing to talk about but the war, but this is not so. Some are talking shop; others are making projects for the future.

"But some carry their devil-may-care spirit beyond all limit. At the moment when the shells were raining heaviest over the town an indescribable cacophony came to my ears in our bombproof. Pricked by curiosity, I went out. The noise came from a nearby house, and I ran in. The unexpected sight that met my eyes made me speechless for a moment. A platoon of English hospital corps men having discovered the instruments and costumes of a local musical society, had donned the costumes and were dancing about like madmen while horns brayed and fiddles squeaked. It was the most comical sight I have ever witnessed.

SOLDIERS DYING IN THE SUNLIGHT.

"On the other hand, the reflections that come to one's mind in the casemate when not gay are very melancholy. We are not drunk with the fire of combat, and we coldly calculate our chances of being killed.

"One thinks of those at home, and one says to one's self that it is silly to be struck down foolishly, uselessly, in these times. But one says—it is duty. So we amuse ourselves as best we can at cards, writing letters, smoking. The least excuse furnishes a pretext to rush outside and gossip. Above all, one listens to the noise of the battle that unrolls itself, mysterious and formidable, so near that the crackle of the machine guns and the rifles is very distinct.

"The most strange and annoying thing of this war is the ignorance in which the fighting men find themselves. One never knows just what is going on outside.

Keep Your Lungs Strong

This advice is doubly important with the knowledge that every three minutes some one in the United States succumbs to consumption and many refuse to realize they are afflicted until it is too late.

It is after colds or sickness, from overwork, confining duties or when general weakness exists that tubercular germs thrive because the resistive powers of the body are weakened.

Only with fresh air, sunshine and abundant rich blood can one hope to arrest their progress, and the concentrated fats in Scott's Emulsion furnish fuel for rich blood, and its rare nourishment helps strengthen the lungs while it builds up the forces.

If you work indoors, live coolly, feel languid or run-down, Scott's Emulsion is the most strengthening food-medicine known and is free from stupefying drugs. Avoid substitutes.

A Cheerful Giver.

The father of a Germantown lad had given him a ten-cent piece and a quarter of a dollar, telling him that he might put one or the other on the church's contribution plate. At dinner the father asked the boy which coin he had given. "Well, father," explained the youngster, "at first it seemed to me that I ought to put the quarter on the plate; but just in time I remembered the saying, 'The Lord loveth a cheerful giver,' and I knew I could give the ten-cent piece a great deal more cheerfully. So I put that in."

Farm and Dairy Market Report

Toronto, Monday, Dec. 21.—The Christmas trade is experiencing the usual last-minute rush, and during the week the situation has improved from the merchants' standpoint. On the whole the volume of Christmas business will not be anything like as good as in previous years. Merchants, however, did not stock for a normal Christmas trade, and will not have great supplies left on their hands. This decrease in Christmas trade is again indicated by the decrease in railway earnings this month, as compared with the same period last year. Business men are feeling more hopeful than a few weeks ago.

The wheat situation is strong. To-morrow this cattle have taken an unexpected slump from which they will probably not recover until after the first of the year. Other farm produce is normal.

WHEAT

Advances on the local wheat market have been in response to a situation universally strong. Many European countries are bidding for the surplus wheat of the United States and Great Britain is buying freely in Canada. Even the news that the area of fall wheat planted in the United States has increased by 4,000,000 acres has not served to shake the faith of brokers in a strong future for the wheat market. No. 1 Northern is now quoted $1.27¼; No. 2, $1.24¼; No. 3, $1.19¼; Ontario wheat, $1.18 to $1.19.

COARSE GRAINS

Ontario oats continue quiet. Peas have lost 2c. Other lines are in good demand, particularly corn, which is up a few cents: Oats, C.W. No. 2, 43c; No. 3, 41c; feed, 41c; Ontario oats, 40c to 42c; corn, 72c; peas, $1.60 to $1.65; rye, $1.05; buckwheat, 76c; barley, malting, 63c to 67c. At Montreal the demand for all lines is quiet; Oats, C.W. No. 2, 43c to 43½c; No. 3, 42½c to 43c; extra No. 1 feed, 43½c; local white, 40c to 42c; barley, 62c to 70c; malting, 70c to 72c.

POTATOES AND BEANS

It is now assured that there has been an extra good crop of potatoes over all of Western Canada. The rot reported to be developing some time ago does not seem to be serious. The market is dull, with no immediate prospect for improvement. Ontario will go 75c to 80c in car lots; New Brunswick, 70c a bag. The Montreal quotation is 65c to 68c.

Beans here are quoted: Primes, $2.60 to $2.70; hand picked, $2.75 to $2.85. The Montreal quotations on one-pound pickers is $2.65; hand picked, $2.70.

EGGS AND POULTRY

Receipts of strictly fresh eggs have dwindled away until we have the usual small supply for the extensive market. The great volume of business at all centres is now done in storage eggs. Quotations remain as before. Locally fresh eggs are quoted at 60c; cartons, 65c to 70c. At Montreal new laids are selling at 60c to 65c; No. 1 storage, 45c to 47c; No. 2, 40c to 42c; selects, 38c to 40c; No. 1 storage, 37c to 38c; seconds, 34c to 35c. At Montreal new laids are selling at 60c to 65c; No. 1 storage, 45c to 47c; No. 2, 40c to 42c; selects, 38c to 40c; No. 1 storage, 37c to 38c; seconds, 34c to 35c.

Poultry has taken an advance due to the Christmas demand. Live: Spring chickens, 13c to 15c; old fowl, 9c to 10c; ducks, 9c to 12c; geese, 9c to 8c; turkeys, 12c to 13c. Dressed: Spring chickens, 13c to 15c; old fowl, 10c to 12c; ducks, 14c to 15c; geese, 12c to 14c; turkeys, 16c to 18c. All prices are for choice stock.

DAIRY PRODUCE

The market is still quiet, but there has been an increased volume of business, and altogether the situation is improving. Most of the demand is coming from outside towns and small cities, from which shipments a short time ago were coming to the central markets. Receipts of fresh made butter are not anything like sufficient to meet present demand, and are continually getting smaller. Choicest creamery butter is quoted 29c to 27½c and seconds, 26c to 26½c; dairy butter is wanted on the English market, and some Manitoba dairy butter has been sold at 25c to 25½c for extras.

HAY AND STRAW

There is more hay in the country than [illegible] and [illegible] evidence of this is seen in the large quantities that are now being offered when it is suggested that quotations may drop. On this market No. 1 hay is quoted $16 to $16.50; No. 2, $15.50 to $16; No. 3, $13 to $13; baled straw, $7 to $7.50. At Montreal offerings are liberal from both Quebec and Eastern Ontario. No. 1 is quoted at $20 to $20.50; No. 2, $18 to $19.50; No. 3, $16.50 to $17.50; inferior, $14.50 to $15.50.

LIVE STOCK

The slump in live stock, that has been characteristic of the whole week's proceedings, must have been totally unexpected as deliveries from country points have been liberal. Prices are still in advance of previous years, but altogether too low to not [illegible] to the drovers. The strong buying of the previous week seems to have filled the coolers of the packing houses, and it is not anticipated that there will be any great demand until the first of the year.

There is no reason for discouragement in this state of affairs. It is a transient situation. Farmers will be wise, however, to reduce shipments to a minimum for the next few weeks and give the market a chance to gain its feet again. Butcher bulls seem to be the least wanted of all the animals coming to the market. Stocker receipts have been small and here demand has been well maintained. Quotations average as follows:

Shipping steers, $7.25 to $8; butcher steers, good, $7 to $7.25; com. to med., $6.50 to $7; butchers, $6 to $7.20; choice cows, $5 to $5.50; com. to med. $4.25 to $4; butcher bulls, $4.50 to $5.75; feeders, $6 to $6.50; stockers, $4.50 to $5.50; canners and cutters, $3.75 to $4.50.

There is a good steady demand for milch cows at seasonal prices; choice, $80 to $90; com. to med., $40 to $60; springers $5 to $100. Calves range from $3.50 to $9.

Lambs continue in normal demand; yearlings, $7.50 to $8; heavy, $7.25 to $7.50; culls, $6.50 to $7; bucks, $5 to $6.25; heavy sheep and bucks, $4 to $5; culls $3 to $4.

Hogs have continued steady at the one price throughout the week, $8.90 f.o.b. country points.

PORTUGESE TERRITORY IS INVADED

Germans Attacked Naulili With 1000 Men and Artillery and Garrison Deliver Counter Attack

AN ALLY OF BRITAIN

Examiner Special:

LONDON, Dec. 24.—The latest German invasion of Angola, Portuguese African Province, is officially acknowledged, according to a Lisbon despatch received here to-day. The Germans are declared to have approached Naulili, with artillery and one thousand men. The Portuguese garrison was engaged for a short time in delivering a counter attack on the Germans, but withdrew and reinforcements are now being awaited. The government is to-day assured of complete support in any action that may be taken toward defending this colony or even to entering the European war as an ally of England.

Fire In Moving Picture Theatre

Blaze in Basement of the Princess Last Night Caused Considerable Excitement Damage is not Great

A telephone message from the Examiner office last night at eight minutes after eleven informed Fireman Tennyson, who was on watch at the station, that smoke was being emitted from the Leah store on George Street. The watchman, following out the general instructions issued by the Fire Chief, ordered the whole brigade out, and it was found that a fire was burning in the basement of the Princess Theatre.

A large crowd gathered to watch the progress of the fire. As it was in the very heart of the business district every effort was made to stem the flames at the very outset. Although the theatre was filled with smoke, the Chief and his men penetrated to the trap door into the basement and located the fire. Two lines of hose were laid, one from the front and one from the rear of the building, the before midnight the fire was completely extinguished. The actual damage to the building will hardly exceed $50 or $75, although holes had to be chopped in the floor of the theatre to get at the fire. The ceiling of the cellar was also badly charred and some of it may have to be repaired.

It is thought that the fire was caused by hot ashes from the furnace igniting some fire wood in the cellar, and the prompt action of the brigade prevented the remainder of the block from being in danger from the spreading of the flames. Some of the joists of the building were burned. The fire was near the front of the edice.

The theatre is unfortunate in losing the holiday business.

A WHITE CHRISTMAS EVERYWHERE IN CANADA

OTTAWA, Dec. 24.—Santa Claus took a squint at the weather to-day and ordered out his reindeers and sleigh for to-night's jaunt. It's to be a "white Christmas" everywhere in Canada where it is cold enough to freeze. The weather bureau declared to-day in its Christmas forecast that snow is falling nearly everywhere in Canada. To-day's general snowfall will continu all day and night almost everywhere, the forecast stated, but to-morrow morning the snow will stop for a clear, cold Christmas under a blanket of snow. Much colder weather in the northern half of the country to-morrow east of the Mississippi, is predicted.

GERMAN RESISTANCE IN WEST STRONGER

Allies Continue to Make Progress However and All the Enemy's Attempts to Regain the Ground Lost Have Been Repulsed--Sand dunes Are Mined.

Special to The Examiner:

PARIS, Dec. 24.—Advances are being made in Belgium near the coast, by the mining of sand dunes. This is reported to-day in the official communication which announced the repulse of all German attack along the battle front. The Belgians have gained ground on the right bank of the Yser south of Dixmude.

The official statement to-day does not report extensive advance along the wide front such as the previous communiques of the week have announced. The number of German counter attacks appear to indicate that the allies are now meeting with more stubborn resistance, and that the enemy is making strenuous efforts to regain the ground which has been lost in the general advance of French and British.

In addition to avances made by mining operations, and the forward movement of the Belgians south of Dixmude, however, French advances are reported in Argonne and in the Weavre region. "Between the sea and the Lys," the communique states, "we advanced by mining dunes. At Lombaertzyde and Zwartelen the attacks of the enemy were repulsed."

A heavy fog has operations in the region of Arras, the statement asserted, and east and south-east of Amiens the action was confined to cannonades. In the region of the Aisne brilliant resistance by the Zouaves repulsed the attacks by the enemy. A German attack in the region of Ville Surtourbe in the Champagne district, failed owing the effectiveness of the French artillery.

LONDON, Dec. 24.—Mlawa, which the Germans claim to-day to have recaptured, is fifteen miles east of Soldau on the railroad line from that point which runs to Neve Georgievsk, 16 miles from Warsaw. The German movement from Mlawa, which was repulsed, and which Germans are evidently endeavouring to resume, had for its object a wide sweep to the north-east of Warsaw.

TOKIO, Dec. 24.—Parliament to-day rejected the request of the cabinet for increased appropriations to enable the government to maintain a larger army. As a result it is said that the cabinet will dissolve parliament to-morrow and trust to a popular election to gain the support of the country.

The opposition is due to the fear that the government would send troops to Europe to fight the Germans.

Went Down With The Monmouth

A Brother of a Lake Street Citizen Among the Lost in the Sinking of H.M.S. Monmouth Off Chilean Coast, Nov. 1st

Mr. George Wilkins, 147 Lake street, has received official information from the British Admiralty that his brother, Arthur Augustus Wilkins, landing boatman of H.M.S. Monmouth, which went down in the naval battle off the Chilean Coast, on Nov. 1st, was among the lost. The deceased Mr. Wilkins, who formerly served as Sergeant in the Coast Guard Service, at New Quay, Cornwall was on the mobilization of the Monmouth put upon her strength. He was 35 years of age and won and wore the Long Service and Good Conduct medal. He leaves a wife, father and mother, three brothers, and two sisters. The official intimation is the first news Mr. George Wilkins, who is the only relative of the deceased in Peterborough, had of his death, or of the fact that he was on the Monmouth.

EMPLOYE'S INJURIES FAULT OF COMPANY

Widow of Richard Ball of Havelock, Given Damages at Osgoode Hall

At Osgoode Hall yesterday Mr. Justice Middleton ratified the settlement of an action between the C. P. R. and Mrs. Sarah Ann Ball, of Myrtle. The judgment awards Mrs. Ball and her children $1,200 for the death of Richard Ball in the Havelock yards last February. The man was painting and an engine ran over him, inflicting fatal injury.

Who Received The Commission?

Just when the City Council was sailing serenely along, with a fair wind and a manifest desire to bring the meeting to a speedy conclusion, Alderman McIntyre introduced a squall in the form of a question as to whether there was any commission paid for arising out of the sale of the city's short-term debentures. If the regular commission was charged it would amount to approximately eight hundred dollars, and just who it would accrue to, is what Alderman McIntyre was anxious to find out. The city sold one hundred and fifty thousand dollars' worth of the short term bonds. Alderman Johnston, as chairman of the Finance Committee explained that there was no commission as the bonds were sold through the City Treasurer. The misunderstanding evidently arose out of a computation made by City Treasurer Adams as to what it would cost to market one hundred and fifty thousand dollars' worth of debentures. The commission figured in the calculation as though the debentures were being marketed by a brokerage firm instead of by the city.

"If I had known you were going to dig up anything like this, I would have brought in a report," remarked Alderman Johnston.

DEATH OF MR. FRANK BIRDSALL OF OTONABEE

Pioneer Resident of the County Passed Away This Morning

GRANDSON AT SALISBURY

One of Otonabee's most prominent residents, in the person of Mr. Frank Birdsall, passed away at half past 12 o'clock this morning, at his home in that Township. Death was due to paralysis, and came after an illness of several months. Deceased was 76 years of age and was born on the farm which he occupied at the time of his demise. His death marks the passing of one of those pioneers to whom the present gengration is so greatly indebted.

The late Mr. Birdsall was for many years one of the foremost and most active workers in the interests of local or County-wide movements for the advancement of the community. As Reeve of Asphodel Township he was head of the Township Municipal Council, and held a seat in the County Council. He was President of the East Peterborough Agricultural Association and Farmers' Institute since the inception of these organizations, presiding over the former for fifty years. For years he was a school trustee, and was a leading Conservative in the East Peterborough riding, having occupied the position of President of the Conservative Association. His death will be very generally and deeply regretted, as he was highly respected and widely known throughout the community.

He is survived by his wife, one sister, Mrs. Huycke, of Otonabee, and one son, Col. Richard E. Birdsall, of Birdsall. Two grand-children —Captain Everett Birdsall, with the Canadian Contingent at Salisbury Plain, and one daughter, Miss Birdsall, also survive.

The funeral will be held on Saturday afternoon at 1 o'clock to Westwood.

Brutal Attack On Clergyman in Toronto

Rev. J. M. Scott, Son of Mrs. George Scott, Peterboro', Victim of Shooting

BULLET TOOK EFFECT

TORONTO, Dec. 24—Riverdale was horrified last night when one of the most eminent and highly respected ministers in the East End, Rev. J. McPherson Scott, of St. John's Presbyterian Church, was shot, but not dangerously wounded, by Harry Asher, a converted Jew and former member of the Church.

Mr. Scott was descending the steps of his house at the corner of Sparkhall and Broadview avenues, when he was suddenly confronted by Asher, who, pointing a revolver at the minister's breast, fired point blank without warning. The bullet struck a spectacle case in Mr. Scott's vest pocket over his heart, and as it was thus deflected Mr. Scott probably owes his life to this fortunate circumstance.

Emptied His Revolver.

Seeing that he had not been successful, Asher continued to fire at the retreating figure of the minister until he emptied the contents of the revolver. Of the remaining shots, four went through his clothes and one lodged in his hip, bringing him down. The weakened minister succeeded in reaching his door and calling for assistance. Dr. Sneath was called in, and spent some hours last night with the patient. While Mr. Scott was seriously wounded and lost much blood it was a flesh wound, and was not regarded as dangerous. He will be taken to the General Hospital this morning and a search made for the bullet by means of the X-ray.

Rev. Mr. Scott is a son of Mrs. George Scott, and brother of Mrs. J. Oliver, [illegible] Peterboro, four

There will, of course, be no issue of the Examiner to-morrow, but if there be any news of great importance, it will be bulletined in front of the office.

UNSUCCESSFUL AIR ATTACK UPON DOVER

German Aeroplane Dropped Bombs Upon the British Port But Was Driven Off by Air Craft and Aerial Guns Bomb Struck in a Garden and Did No Damage.

SPECIAL CABLE:

LONDON, Dec. 24.—A German aeroplane to-day dropped bombs upon the British port of Dover. The guns in the fortifications at the famous port fired upon the hostile air craft, but the latest reports indicate that the aeroplane probably escaped. Dover is 76 miles from London. This is really the second attack that has been made upon Dover by German aeroplanes.

A heavy fog prevailed to-day which aided the German aeroplane in making its escape. A British machine took to the air to pursue the enemy but failed to overtake the hostile craft. No damage is reported.

The War Office statement declared: "One of the enemy's aeroplanes was seen over Dover at 10:30 this morning. A bomb was droped which exploded in a garden and no damage was done." The aeroplane flew out to sea followed by a British aircraft, but the pursuit was unsuccessful. The weather was foggy.

ROME, Dec. 24.—Pope Benedict clings to the hope of early peace in Europe, despite the failure of his first efforts and the rejection of his proposal for a Christmas truce. At the Christmas réception to the members of the sacred college to-day His Holiness declared that he would continue to work for peace despite the failure of previous attempts to bring the war to an end.

"I shall never cease doing all in my power for a war suffering humanity," the Pope said, "and I have firm conviction in my heart that with the help of God, peace will soon come."

X-RAYS TO SEARCH OUT CONTRABAND.

NEW YORK, Dec. 24.—X-rays to discover hidden contraband of war is the latest exploit of the British consulate here. Three operators are to-day taking photographs of 10,000 bales of cotton consigned to Bremen, Germany. Each bale, as it is lowered on the City of Macon, scheduled to sail on Monday, is searched by rays for arms, ammunition or other contraband.

FRENCH CRUISER'S NARROW ESCAPE.

LONDON, Dec. 24.—An official statement given out in Paris to-day, says an Austrian submarine torpedoed a French armoured cruiser in the Gulf of Otranto. The battleship was damaged only slightly. No one was injured. The official communication issued to-day by the French Minister of Marine, says: "An Austrian submarine fired two torpedoes at a French armoured cruiser in the Strait of Otranto, one of them exploding forward. The damage done to the vessel was unimportant. None of the cruiser's crew were injured."

OPERATED FOR TWO MONTHS

Without a License—Police Department Censured

The Police Department came in for a mild expression of censure at the hands of the City Council when Ald. Duffus demanded to know why M. Pappas was permitted to operate thirteen billiard tables since November 1st, without possessing the necessary license. Nobody seemed to be able to give a satisfactory account of the matter. Mayor Buller admitted that Chief of Police Thompson was at fault and he thought that the following resolution was the best solution that could be evolved to meet the situation as it stood to-day:

The Resolution.

"We recommend that if M. Pappas does not take out licenses for five billiard tables by Dec. 26th next the Chief Constable take action against him and that if he does not take out the licenses for the remainder of the tables in use in [illegible] by Jan. 15th next, that action then be taken."

"It's a slack piece of business," put in another Alderman.

Thirty-five Soldiers Home for Xmas

Thirty-five of Peterborough's second contingent of volunteers for overseas service are expected home from the camp in Kingston at 5.30 this evening. Mayor Buller arranged to have the band meet them at the G.T.R. station and give them a warm home-coming welcome. Among the arrivals of half a dozen of the members this morning were Johnson Paudash and Frank Roberts. The former is looking in the pink of condition and is delighted with the provision for the volunteers in camp. His brother, George Paudash, is in the machine gun section. Note of the recruits are prouder of their military equipment and status than the Indians from Rice Lake. The visitors have a holiday until Monday. The remainder of the contingent will be home at New Year's.

CHRISTMAS.

A Merrie Christmas is its fullest, widest meaning, to all its readers, to all the city, to all the country, to all the Empire, to all the world, is the season's salutation of The Examiner. What this greeting means is not mere feasting; not mere jocund exchange of good wishes; not mere sharing of presents. Christmas came to the world, and its birthday comes to us now, as a message of unselfishness; the burden of its call unselfish thought for others. The message is not for a day, nor a year, but is to be unwoven into our while life, and to colour all our human relations, if its depth of import is to gain full fruition. The Christmas season only puts emphasis upon a duty that should be immanent in our lives. Especially at the Christmas tide of this year of grace, the call comes to us with clarion voice mingling with the trumpet blast of war. We always have the objects of our kindness with us; but this year they are sadly manifolded, as are the forms of our expression of good will—the Gospel that was proclaimed in the first Christmas message twenty centuries ago. We must all take upon us a larger spirit of benevolence and benefaction. We must strive to supply the cheer that is wanting in many a home. Other years, as this year, there were, and are, joyous homecomings when the rushing trains and the plunging ships brought and bring home the wanderers to the Christmas fireside reunion. This year, there will be no home-coming in many a household. In the battle line, in the training camp and, in many a sad case, in the better land, many of our loved ones, our friends, our neighbours, will keep the Christmas feast. We can send or take messages of cheer, implemented with deeds of kindness to these desolate or desolated homes. The conditions imposed by the cruel war, the unemployment, the empty larders, the fireless hearths, the naked wardrobes, the cheerless homes, make an especial and insistent appeal to the Christmas spirit. To reduce this to practice for Christmas day is the duty of the moment. We that feast must see that no others within our knowledge or reach should lack the means of feasting also. If we all in our way and in keeping with our means and opportunity do this; and if we make the spirit of this a precedent, and a motive of action in all our human relations in the year to come, a Merry Christmas for ourselves and others will be the prelude to a Happy New Year. The skies are dark, the clouds float low, and when we see the awfulness of war in Europe—the unchained passions of men holding sway, we find it hard to feel that the Prince of Peace even came into the world. But we have faith and with faith hope, God is in Heaven and still rules, still is able to bring good out of evil. Over the fields of carnage in His good time will rise the sun of peace to lighten a new world purged of the blight of human oppression and of wrong; and the brotherhood of nations shall be builded upon the brotherhood of man, whose spirit became incarnate on the first Christmas. When we look up, look forward, there is all to hope, and the outlook under God's guiding, gives ample warrant and prophetic significance to the wish that goes out from us all to all the world—

A MERRIE CHRISTMAS AND A HAPPY NEW YEAR.

BOTH LANGUAGES NECESSARY.

Sir Wilfrid Laurier has been telling English audiences to learn French, because it is the language of art and diplomacy, not to mention its being the mother tongue of two million of our fellow-Canadians. Sir Wilfrid is right in all counts. He might have added that it is a useful accomplishment whith not only opens up a great treasury of literature, but enables us to get under the French skin and understand Quebec. If Ontario read French, and Quebec read English, the politicians would find it a hard matter to play the devil's game by setting the two Provinces against each other. Mr. Pasing Both Ways would be put out of business, race and creed cries would disappear, and many local problems due to the deliberate perversions of campaign orators would vanish like fog before the noonday sun. To know all is to understand all, and until English Canada learns French, and French Canada learns English we must expect politics in this country to be blind of one eye. Incidentally we observe that many members of the Second Canadian Contingent are learning French, their intention being to do a lot of fighting in that language. It is a good language to fight in, as Napoleon proved. It is also a good language to eat in, to sing in, to dress in. With French and English a man may find his way around the world and be stuck nowhere. —Saturday Night.

CHRISTMAS, 1914

The air is hideous with the crash of guns;
The screaming shrapnel and the hurtling shells
Make night a Hades where the nations' sons,
In demon frenzy that hell's hate compels,
War fiercer than the Visigoths and Huns.

The mangled corpses fill the Village street;
The peaceful plains are littered with the dead;
The roads are heavy with the hurry'ng feet
Of homeless outcasts, seeking daily bread,—
And nought but new found horrors do they meet.

The old are spared not, nor the young and fair;
Alike they tribute pay to ruinous war,
The ages heritage, the House of Prayer—
(Be these, then, Christian men, or sons of Thor?)
Are razed to earth, so wantonly they dare.

The nations, Heedless of the still small Voice
Of Bethl'hem's Babe, have trampled into dust
The glad evangel, and have made the choice,
They wield the sword, impelled by Empire lust,
And mothers weep while Satan doth rejoice.

O what a spectacle for Him Who comes,
With blessings on His lips, the Prince of Peace!
No star of hope the Christmas sky illumes,
His beacon blest, herald of War's surcease;
O world gone mad! O place of many tombs!

O mockery of that first Christmas night,
When shepherds heard the angel cohorts sing,
While Juda's hills were robed in dazzling light!
O doth not e'en an echo of it cling
In these sad days when brutal power is right?

Is this the answer of two thousand years
Of Christian teaching? God in Heaven look down,
And pity'ng dry the mothers' blinding tears,
For sake of her who once in Bethl'hem town,
Could find no place, but now a place appears.

The little children call Thee. There is room
In our poor hears where fain we'd have you bide,
Then come to us, blest Fruit of Mary's womb,
For some are faithful still, some doors are wide,
Dear Jesus, do no not tarry, quickly come.

PETROGRAD'S GREAT RECORD.

In Russian City in Four Days No Arrests While in Toronto in Three Days There were 178 Arrests for Drunkenness.

TORONTO, Dec. 23.—Compared with Petrograd, Russia, Toronto is a wide-open town. A despatch from the former city says that in four days, including two holidays, since the sale of alcoholic liquor was forbidden, not a single arrest was made for drunkenness.

The feat that Toronto can come to this was new Year's Day, 1912, when but two drunks were arrested, while on Christmas Day, 1911, five drunks ware arrested. On both these days the bars were closed.

On Christmas Day, 1909, the last Christmas that the bars were allowed open, the drunks totalled 60. But the worst is yet to come. The biggest record ever in the police annals for drunkenness was the list before the magistrate on September 2nd, 1913. That list chronicled the names of 178 people arrested for drunkenness. This list covered those arrested from Saturday night till Monday night.

Compared with Petrograd, the figures show that for four days, including two holidays, and a Sunday, in three city there wasn't an arrest, while in Toronto in three days, including one holiday and one Sunday there were 178 arrests for drunkenness.

A Christmastide Symposium Of Representative Citizens

I offer sympathy and comfort to all whose way in life has been hard and disappointing, to all who have had tears, heartaches, loss and sorrow. The present situation in this city, in Canada, and the Empire summons us to true resolution, manly courage, heroic self-denial and service to make the most of life, to bring to a holy and complete fruition the rich heritage that we have fallen heirs to through the pioneer labours of our fathers.

Let us be brothers with one another in holy faith and charity. Let us be citizens in hope for a larger Canada and a larger Empire to be realized when the world brotherhood vision of the Prince of Peace possesses the conscience of nations, controls their passions, and makes mighty their judgment in the councils of men, to bring about universal righteousness and justice, which alone are the habitation of God's throne.

A Merry Christmas to All!

R. G. Peever.

REV. I. PHELPS

Pastor of Mark Street Methodist Church.

In response to your request for a few words of greeting, may I say:

Whilst the Kaiser with his soldiery, is ravaging Europe, slaying defenceless people, it is no occasion on which to speak the soft word of Peace. Whilst the ideals of our Empire are being challenged—an Empire which, as England, Great Britain, and now Greater Britain, has stood for a thousand years the friend of the oppressed and the champion of the helpless, our patriotism and our Christian faith urge our hand to the sword and the service of our suffering fellows—our prayer is that young Canada, in eager and ever-increasing numbers, may respond to the call to arms; that personal victories may be won over indifference and the selfish love of ease and mere material interests, and our nation take her place in the ranks of the Empire at war that war may be no more; that each Canadian soldier moy be worthy of the ideals for which he goes forth to the battle, and that he may return to pursue, in his homeland, the blessed works of peace.

L. Phelps.

REV. JAS. ROLLINS

Pastor of St. Andrew's Presbyterian Church.

"Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace, good will toward men."

These are the words which ushered in hte Christian Era. They are regnin the Christian era. They are regnant still. The land is full of martial music, but it is not full of hatred. When one considers how immense the provocation is and ho little animus there is in any of our hearts to our foes, one begins to realize how deeply the angelic music has entered into the warp and whoof of life.

* * * * * * *

One does not forget that the teachers of a great nation have assailed the ideal of the angels and proclaimed the right of the sword to hack its way through the integrities of the heart; but one must be blind indeed who does not see thot that sword is in process of being shivered upon the conscience of the world.

Greetings, then, to the people of Peterborough in the words of the angels—"Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace, good will toward men." That message must reign until it has transformed all its foes into its own wondrous likeness.

* * * * * * *

You ask me for an expression of my view of what should be the attitude of the people of our city and country towards Christmas under the conditions in which it comes to us this year. Just the old attitude. Good will to men—joy in life—happiness in friendship. Ill-will only to ideals which are subversive of human good. Let us go on warring a good warfare against all we know to be wrong, keeping our hearts all the while free from personal bitterness.

* * * * * * *

The old custom of Christmas remembrances should be followed within our means. The merchants have their stocks—much of them purchased before present conditions could be foreseen. Those who can afford it may this year have the double joy of making happy the friends beloved, and at the same time lifting a load from our worthy tradespeople.

To those who can do neither, let me say, Do not compromise your finances even by obedience to an old and beautiful custom. Send out wireless messages of good will in the sure and certain faith that kindred souls shall catch them from the blue. So shall we keep Christmas and all our days in the spirit of the Christ.

James Rollins.

REV. F. J. SAWERS —

Rector of St. Luke's Church.

Longfellow wrote of the Christmas bells:

"I heard the bells on Christmas Day
Their old familiar carols play,
And wild and sweet the words repeat
Of peace on earth, good will to men."

In this generation has the old, old proclamation of the Christmas message fallen upon men's ears in the midst of such troublous times—the message of peace and goodwill in the midst of awful war and frightful carnage such as the world has never seen.

What an awful commentary between the message and the present suffering and conflict. Christmas message, and the truth is the same. Peace on earth, the Christian message

REV. J. R. WEBB

Pastor of the Murray Street Baptist Church.

Christ appeared after His resurrection in the upper room—the doors being shut. When He came into the world as the Babe of Bethlehem, the doors of the inn were shut. When He came unto His own, His own received Him not, for the doors of their minds and hearts were shut. The psalmist had sung, "Lift up your heads, oh ye gates, and be ye lift up, ye everlasting doors," but when the King of Glory came, it was angels, not men, who sang His welcome.

Yet "the doors being shut," He stands in the midst of men. His is the world power. His place is not only in the sun, but in the centre of it. With the accumulated armament of twenty-eight years a nation stalks forth confident of world sway, but is smitten by the Christian sentiment of the world, and becomes a stench in the nostrils of all well-thinking people.

The doors are shut at this Christmastide. All forces seem to be against the usual gaiety and festivity; let it not be so. Jesus stands in the midst, and when He is with us we must joint the angelic song. I know how hard it is for some to sing the Lord's song in the strange land in which we find ourselves this year, but a determined effort must be made to take the harps from the willows for this one week, and tune them, not to dirge, but song—for Jesus stands in our midst though the doors are shut.

J. R. Webb.

REV. J. P. WILSON

Pastor of Charlotte Street Methodist Church.

I am pleased to send Christmas greetings once more to my friends in this good city—wishing them all the joys of the festival. Why should we not keep Christmas? True "The Hun is at the gate," the world in agony, but our Empire is not at war with the Prince of Peace. Our people wish peace and goodwill to all mankind.

The world has not "gone Pagan." Christianity has not broken down. That cry reveals the great advance in Christ's conquest of the world. It acknowledges that if nations were Christian there would be no war.

The true Christmas spirit was never so widespread; distinctions of race and creed have disappeared; a broader brotherhood has realized.

We should keep Christmas in a more sober, more earnest, more unselfish way; a sense of solemnity should rest upon us as we see in a clearer light the value of the Empire for which our men are freely laying down their lives. We should realize the responsibility to carry out the great purposes which our soldiers are dying to secure.

While the troops guard the outposts, our "Home Guard" should guard the "interior frontiers" of our civic life against drunkenness, impurity, selfishness, and every other element by which it is endangered, and make our country worthy of the blood of her sons.

J. P. Wilson.

A Christmastide Symposium of Representative Citizens

S. R. ARMSTRONG

City Clerk of the City of Peterborough.

It is a pleasure to take advantage of the privilege you have offered to extend to the citizens of Peterborough—in whose service I have been for over twenty-one years—the greetings of the season and to wish all a most pleasant Christmas and happy New Year.

At this particular time, the customary pleasant tokens of remembrance between members of households and friends should not be neglected. To neglect them might tend to cause or add to feelings of depression. But the expense might be curtailed, and the difference used towards making the season a pleasanter one for those in needier circumstances, in which all who can to any extent do so should assist.

S. R. Armstrong.

W. H. BULLER

Mayor of the City of Peterborough.

To all the people of Peterborough I am glad to have the opportunity of extending most cordially the greetings of the season. I heartily wish, for one and all, a Christmas of unalloyed pleasure and a most happy New Year.

This season comes to Canada, as to the Empire and to the world, at a time when our thoughts are engaged with the momentous struggle in Europe.

But we are not discouraged. We should, and will, celebrate this season in a manner that will show that our hopes are high and our faith is strong, sanibly and unselfishly remembering all to whom we can give help and good cher.

W. H. Buller, Mayor.

J. H. BURNHAM

Member of Parliament for West Peterborough.

In reply to your kind request for a word of Christmas greeting and an expression of my idea of what should be the attitude of the people of our city and country towards Christmas under the present conditions, I can only say that until we learn to make use of our heritage for the good of all the people and not for the good simply of those who are fortunate enough to control it politically and financially, we shall be unable to look Christmas fairly in the face, under the present or any other condition.

The war in Europe is no worse than the war which decimates the ranks of humanity otherwise from year to year. We must learn to be fair. We must learn to be sensible. We must learn to be strong, and if possible unselfish. We must learn to be more efficient. We cannot do this by refusing to give to the people their own resources by refusing to give to the people the opportunity to work those resources which, strange to say, though almost unlimited in wealth and range, are yet not great enough apparently to provide opportunity for the mass of the people who inhabit this great country. When with our ample means we have made this simple provision, we shall then be able to congratulate ourselves at Christmastide or at any other time.

The spirit of Canadians is admirable. In the face of a great danger we drop our differences of opinion and fight as with one mind, but that is only half the battle. The rest I have taken the liberty of referring to. We must always remember, too, a thing some of us sometimes are in danger of forgetting, that no institution of nation can flourish except in the free atmosphere of freedom of opinion.

J. H. Burnham.

REV. I. N. CLARRY

Pastor of the St. James' Methodist Church.

This is the season for Christmas greetings and we believe the old wish is still the best, a wish for a Merry Christmas to all your readers.

The sadness of this titanic war, whether we have victory or the reverse, and the greatness of the problem confronting our civilization, is coming home to us. How are we as Christians, remembering the awful cataclysm, to face the facts and yet to feel secure in our Christian faith and heritage? Some are at home enjoying the fruits of British citizenship; others are abroad defending the very existence of the Empire, its glory and its ideals. At such a time as this, we are persuaded, only that faith which believes believes our God reigneth, and that seeks the mind of the Master and the Spirit of the Christ, can be masterful and quieting. May such a faith possess us during the Christmastide of 1914.

We rejoice in the Christmas spirit that brings good cheer the homes of the needy and distressed; and yet we cherish the hope that the time is drawing nearer when the toilers' plea for work, rather than for charity, shall be heeded.

J. N. Clarry.

REV. CANON DAVIDSON

Rector of St. John's Church.

The chief blessings of Christmas come from above and are not therefore interfered with by adverse conditions blew. Indeed by contrast these blessings shine more brightly and their nature and value is made more evident.

Turn we, then, our eyes and thoughts at this time from the strife of man to the peace of God, from a disappointing world to a kingdom not of this world so widely different, but just now so near at hand.

Yes, with Christmas bells and voices and hymns in our ears we look up once more to the Christ-child and in something of Christ's love we look around to our Father's other children.

And, as in the bye-gone years, behold our darkness illumined and our troubles lightened.

The Glory of the Lord still shines on earth.

J. C. Davidson.

D. W. DUMBLE

Police Magistrate of the City of Peterborough.

Our people on the eve of our greatest festival cannot but experience feelings of deepest gratitude to Almighty God for our present happy conditions.

In our land there is no pestilence, no famine, no horror of war, and God is over all, the same great Being who manifested to us His eternal love in the gift of the Christ Child.

'Tis true there is cruel war in Europe, our Motherland is involved, and in a manner never before so deeply felt, we realize that as an integral part of the British Empire we suffer when the heart of the Empire is attacked, and with exulting joy we assume our responsibility and hasten to aid and bear the new burden cast upon us. Is be a man who stands with folded hands when his mother is struck? We are proud to be called upon, we are proud to be allowed to help.

In this glad season we have found our greatest joy in giving; so our gift of men and foodstuffs to Britain and of bread to the stricken ones of brave Belgium has added new joy to the Canadian heart as it offers up its prayer to Him Whose advent was ushered in with the song from the skies—

"Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace, good will toward men."

D. W. Dumble.

GEO. H. DUNCAN

Chairman of the Board of Works.

May I, in response to your invitation, express the hope that this Christmastide may be a happy and joyous one with all our citizens. May those from whose homes have gone forth loved ones to fight the Empire's battles be cheered and comforted by the knowledge that they are fighting in a cause that is just and honourable—a fight for the weaker nations against the tyranny of the strong. May the true Christian spirit be abroad in our city so that no one shall be forgotten, so that all may have some share in the festivities of the occasion. And may that Christmas spirit be carried with us throughout the coming year so that we will be enabled to make brighter the way of those to whom misfortune and suffering may come.

Geo. H. Duncan.

REV. E. A. GROBB

Rector of All Saints' Church.

"On Earth, Peace." That is the oldest Christmas greeting in the world. It was coined by angels and it would seem to have been made for the year 1914.

Not that the world is outwardly realising the ideal of peace, but that it is being forced back upon its religion as the source of peace that the world cannot give.

Into countless human hearts will come this year as never before the real meaning of "Christmas," in their need of what the Bethlehem story offers. Not for a peaceful world was Christmas made. Its joy is not likely to come to a people able to boast of unprecedented prosperity and unlimited natural resources, at a time when millionares are made in a day. It is more apt to come to hearts impoverished, robbed of wealth and loved ones and home in a night, and whose only boast is their need.

Not "A Merry Christmas" is the best greeting for 1914, but a Christmas striking the old note of the peace of God and filling the world with the song of angels.

E. A. Grobb.

GEO. A. GILLESPIE

Member of the Legislature for West Peterborough.

A CONTINUOUS CHRISTMAS.

To my mind, the 25th of December should not be a holiday yearly anniversary, but an every day anniversary. If we got more to appreciate Christmas and had the true spirit every day of "Peace on earth and good will towards men," there would be no war. May it not be that whatever is happening to the world just now, is just the lack of this very kinship of feeling.

With peaceful hospitalities in our homes, in the midst of war, and considering that we are supposed to be "on the firing line," we in Canada should be attired to a kinship for others. Let there be a continuance of that splendid spirit which was manifested in Peterborough last year by the noble response to the call in aid of our Patriotic Relief Fund.

We should celebrate Christmas with a [illegible] as never before. The present situation has drawn us closer together and demonstrates the Christ-like spirit and brotherhood of man. Let there be no empty stockings to-morrow.

G. A. Gillespie.

G. N. GORDON

Solicitor of the City of Peterborough.

Forgetting all the petty jealousies, dislikes and unkind feelings, as we did during the Patriotic Campaign, and having in mind the care it will be necessary to bestow upon those who may suffer privation, the people of Peterborough have joined hands this Christmas, as never before, to help each other learn the depth of meaning of goodwill towards men.

G. N. Gordon.

O. A. LANGLEY

County Magistrate of the County of Peterborough.

With due thought for all our soldiers and sailors serving the Empire in this time of peril, and with confidence in Divine protection of them, may happiness be the portion of each and all of our people this Christmas season.

The state of war in which we are involved, calls for a temperate enjoyment of the Christmas blessings, and our thoughts should at this season particularly go out to those serving their country, and who are suffering all the hardships of a winter campaign, and are constantly in the midst of personal danger.

O. A. Langley.

DR. M. A. MORRISON

Chairman of the Local Board of Education.

Never since the Holy Angels sang to the shepherds on the Judean hills has there been more of the Christmas spirit abroad than there is this Christmastide. The Christ idea has taken hold on the people, and all are busy giving gifts to those that are in need and who cannot give in return. This, no doubt, is brought about by the conflict in Europe. The British people recognize the fact that in this struggle they are fighting for the principals of truth, justice, and mercy, and they will win. This fact alone should make us more generous and kindly disposed at this season.

I wish to compliment the many organizations of the city that are dispensing good cheer, especially let me mention the Mothers' Clubs of our schools. These clubs are providing clothing, boots, and food for many children who otherwise would be without and unable to attend school. These ladies merit our best wishes.

While giving our gifts and remembering the needier ones, do not let us neglect to give also to our friends, our own families, and those we are in the habit of remembering. Keep the happy spirit abroad, and so make our own city and community feel that in truth Christ came into the world to elevate mankind.

Wishing all a very joyful Christmas and a happy and prosperous New Year.

M. A. Morrison.

ADJT. J. A. McELHINEY

Head of the Local Corps of the Salvation Army.

In wishing all our citizens a very happy Christmas time, as well as a very prosperous New Year, I would say that our city has as much, if not more, to be happy about than any city in this Dominion of ours.

The needs are great, but so far as I see it, the people [illegible] and the happiness of our [illegible] be increased by [illegible] of their daughter in [illegible] this thing.

[illegible] in the Master of [illegible] city [illegible] them [illegible] and [illegible] would [illegible] and [illegible] sent time here. May He who came to bring this about nearly 2,000 years ago, reign continually in our homes, and speed the time when our whole civilization will accept Him, which will mean an early ending of greed and selfishness, and consequently the fearful war we are all praying will cease soon.

REV. ROBERT POGUE

Pastor of St. Paul's Presbyterian Church.

The Editor suggests that in writing a few words of Christmas greeting for the readers of The Examiner I should also say something on what should be the attitude of the people of our City and Country towards Christmas under the conditions in which it has come to us this year. My own attitude might, in brief, be put as follows:

(1) I do not regard the participation of Britain in the war as the failure of the Christ spirit in our Empire. 'Tis true at the advent of our blessed Lord the angels sang, "Peace on earth, good will to men." But our Lord also said, "I come not to send peace, but a sword." I agree with the sentiment expressed by a great preacher in the Old Land that, if the British Nation had not known Christ we should have been at peace. The evil one would have advised neutrality. It is because we are Christians that we are at war. The love of liberty so characteristic of the British people, their hatred of tyranny, their respect for the rights of other nations, their high sense of honour are all the result of the Spirit of Christ within us. I am thankful now, and I intend to be so throughout the Christmas season, that Britain has drawn the sword in a righteous cause.

(2) There are other evidences of the Spirit of Christ in the world. There is much of crime, and cruelty and selfish greed, and man's inhumanity to man yet among us. But they are much less dominant with every passing year. Nearer and nearer is coming the time when every day of the year will be a Christmas day, and when the peace and goodwill of the Christmas season will extend through all the seasons and "when the strong shall wait for the weary, and the hale shall halt for the weak," and when every day will be like the Christmas day which Charles Dickens, that great lover of his fellowmen, always thought of as "a good time, a kind, forgiving, charitable time." Because I believe in the coming of that good time I shall observe this Christmas season with a happy heart.

(3) The hardships and poverty occasioned by the war, the unthinkable horrors of the battlefield, the sorrow of bereaved wives, fathers and mothers, sisters and brothers, cast a pall over all our spirits. But here again there is room for the exercise of the spirit of Christmas. I can pray for the sorrowing, I can sympathize with the troubled, I can feed the hungry, and if I am unable to do this, I can be happy in the thought that I have the will to do it. I can rejoice that God gives me the privilege of contributing in some measure to the good cheer, the gladness, and the joy of the Christmas season.

RUSSIANS HOLD FIRMLY IN LINES BEFORE WARSAW

Germans Unable to Pierce Grand Duke's Lines, and Are Themselves in Serious Positions at Cracow and in Hungary

LONDON, Dec. 24.—Despatches today show that Russia has strengthened her centre before Warsaw and occupies strong positions along the Bzura that effectively bar the German advance on Warsaw. Meanwhile the Grand Duke has flung all his available forces like a thunderbolt at the advancing Austrians in Galicia, one army operating immediately northeast of Cracow and another crossing the Carpathians and pushing on by forced marches toward Budapest, the capital of Hungary. The Berlin and Vienna despatches confirm the report from Petrograd of the failure of the Germans to break through to Warsaw, and of the failure of the Austrians to raise the siege of Cracow and Przemysl.

"So far as can be determined from the reports available, the situation has not altered materially on either front in the last twenty-four hours," says an announcement made last night by the official press bureau.

"Unquestionably," the announcement continues, "heavy fighting is proceeding along the Bzura, where one may fairly assume the Russian position to be extremely strong. Their front apparently rests on the Bzura, affording them protection from flank attacks, and in the rear are the fortresses of Novo Georgievsk and Warsaw.

"The fact that the Germans have succeeded in crossing the Bzura and Rawka rivers at certain places should render their task easier.

"The official report from Vienna shows that comparative quiet prevails in middle and southern Poland. The Russians have assumed the aggressive in Galicia, although at the cost of heavy losses along the lower Dunajec.

"The Russians are still battling also in the region to the northward and eastward of Unghvar in the Carpathians. (Unghvar is on a branch of the River Latorcza, mentioned in Vienna despatches. It is about thirty-five miles southwest of the boundary line between Galicia and Hungary proper, where Germans say the Russians have succeeded in crossing the Carpathians in considerable force.)

A despatch from Petrograd says: "We are invading East Prussia from the east and from the south; we have driven the Germans back across the Bzura river; on the Pilica river we are repulsing the Germans attempting to advance from Lodz; Warsaw is safe; in Eastern Galicia and Southern Poland we have broken the Austro-German offensive."

Minister of War Soukhomlinoff summed up the military situation in these words yesterday. The man who has done more than any other two men in Russia to make the army an effective organization, made no flamboyant predictions that the German armies would be crushed immediately.

The Minister of War had just returned from the front and was in conference with Emperor Nicholas at Moscow. He declared that the stories of great victories given out in Berlin were "lies designed to counteract the discontent caused by the failure of the German war machine to accomplish any of the magnificent deeds expected of it."

"We have given ground at some points on the great battlefront," he said, "but we have gained more ground at other points which are of great importance. The German gains have been made at the expense of terrible loss of life on their part.

"The German commanders have sacrificed tens of thousands of men to gain only a temporary advantage. It is possible to foresee the result of their strategy and ours. We attack as soon as we find the enemy weakening. We sacrifice no soldiers needlessly. Our gains are permanent.

"It is the wish of the Emperor that the Russian soldiers shall not be used to feed the German cannon. His wish is echoed by our commanders, and as a result the Russian army has a strength unequalled in the world's history."

Frenchman In Command Is A Gentleman

Always Sure of Giving Courteous Treatment, Says Correspondent

COMPARED WITH GERMANS

W. Beach Thomas writes to the London Daily Mail as follows:

My first meeting with a French officer on service was at a little village west of Rheims. In walking behind the lien of French and English armies, so far as possible parallel with them, I have since come more than once into touch with the officers in command, and my experience, for what it is worth is this: that the treat of traffic with a soldier and a gentleman is always to be secured by the simple method of asking for the local headquarters.

The German officer is doubtless on occasion a man of courtesy as well as a fine physical type; but for several years past the Germans, especially the Saxons and Bavarians, have complained bitterly that the only route to high military command lies through the drawing rooms of a proud, wealthy and narrow circles in Berlin. If I spoke only of my own experience in the war, my inference would be that in France on the other hand, preferment in the army must be chiefly regulated by the degree of gentility of nature.

The German Spies.

In the village I write of, the commanding officer, with his chief of staff was hard at work in a little low kitchen which was, however one of the best rooms in the village. He explained to me that the amazing ubiquity of German spies—of whom he said the English had caught a surprising number—made the strictest precautions necessary and he gave me some curious examples.

Then he himself took me down to the chief barrack room, and while my safe-conduct was there being made out I had the opportunity to watch the natural refinement with which he gave orders to soldiers and answered the questions of civilians. His dignity of office, it seemed to me, was maintained solely by force of master refinement, which would allow no reliance on clanking sword or pride of position or professional tone of command.

He was as the rest—only a better man. For one instant his quiet courtesy gave way to a fine scorn. He was taking me to a point where a jolly lane through the vineyards offered a short cut to my destination, when he stoped and said: "Come with me. I have something to show you."

German Soldiers.

We turned back and the general opened the door of the one little village shop. Its humbleness would be hard to parallel even in English villages. It stocked cheap caps and ties and stuffs and a few toys. The whole of what stock remained was heaped on the floor in a tangle of dirt and confusion. The heap reminded me exactly of the scene in a certain cricket pavilion in Surrey which I once visited a few hours after it had been entered by thieves on their way to the Kent hopfields. The Germans had done exactly what the thieves had done.

The old women to whom the stock belonged complained that they had taken "all that was most precious." They had sorted out especially certain sham plaid ties, worth perhaps 6d each; and this sum represented precious value in the eyes of the old women. Were the looters intending to flaunt the ties as trophies from the Scotch? The general said nothing; but his gesture expressed what half the French residents of the little towns and villages say in one form or another: "It is commerce, not war with these Germans."

I saw a more amusing example of this careful commercial brigandage close to La Werte-sous-Jouarre. A light motor-car with a wagon body had broken down. Round about, trampled in the dust, were samples of ware which announced that a commercial traveller, on a large scale had come to grief. The lieutenant commanded the guard and highly theoretical pillage of the shops in the village. Whether they were on the way back to Germany, like the precious objects of art stolen by a higher brigand from the famous Chateau de Baye, I do not know.

Passion For Peace.

The question of brigandage may be left at this point; and I should prefer to try to express the worth of the French officer without the dubious aid of contrast. One commandant who must, I know, have fought very finely, talked with me one day for some five hours round the only subject, but what he talked was not so much war as peace. The man had a passion for peace. He was clearly a considerable mathematician and somewhat of a man of science. He had studied closely the science of artillery. He told me for example, of experiments, now being successfully concluded, for the manufacture of powder which produces a blue flame on explosion — a colour which is virtually invisible at night.

But his interest was academic though practical. He hated nothing more than explosives. The sight of a shattered bridge roused him to a passionate outburst. "These things belong to humanity; and it is a crime against humanity that they should be scattered to the winds." He regarded the war solely as a means to a greater and more permanent peace. The deaths and pain of men, the cruelty to horses, the loss of harvests, the ruin of peace of mind, the breaking of the quiet passage of civil life, the shattering of historic buildings—all these filled him with a great and righteous wrath. In his quiet and humble degree he stood for the happy warrior of Wordsworth whose

"Master bias leans
To home-felt pleasures and to gentle scenes," and thereby he was the better fighter, I have no doubt.

A Furious Attitude.

A large proportion of the French officers, and indeed the men, seem to me to have a continuously acute hatred of war which may perhaps handicap them in some details of the business of a campaign but which certainly adds quality to their moral force. It has also a curious effect on their attitude, for example to the Turcos and others fighting. They regard them and speak of them naively with the sort of admiration that a lion excites, a noble creature, not lower or higher, but just different and so wonderful.

It is, of course, as different to appraise a class as to indict it without seeming partial. There are doubtless French officers as there are English or German, who "dressed in a little brief authority" confuse the symbols of position with dignity, and like fighting because it helps them to play the bully or peacock over the rest of the world. But if the French officer in war time is not a soldier and a gentleman whom all the world may take for model, my experience has been lucky out of all proportion. I have seen a succession of military men wholly unstiffened or dehumanized or professionalized by the business of discipline and the authority of command.

MILITARY FUNERAL FOR BELGIAN HERO

Although fate decreed that Ernest Bouchet, private, of the Third Chasseur a Pied, of the Belgians, was to die for his country, it gave to him a burial with full military honours, such probably as few soldiers, private or officer, will receive during the rest of the war.

Bouchet, mortally wounded, was sent to the Cottage Hospital at Herne Bay, near Dover, England and there he died. The following account of his burial—so different from that of the majority of soldiers who have died and been buried in the water-swept trenches—is from the Herne Bay Press, which has just reached here:

"Wrapped in the flag of his beloved country, Ernest Bouchet lies in the Cathedral portion of the cemetery at Eddington. He was carried to his grave on Thursday last. The weather was beautifully fine. The sun shone from a sky that was free of cloud, and that breathed the joys of life, not the combreness of death.

"A strange hush fell upon the crowd when the body was taken from the College Hospital mortuary. The firing party presented arms, soldiers stood at attention, officers saluted, Boy Scouts stood with heads bent. Through the main entrance of the Hospital came a little procession. First, some Belgian soldiers carrying beautiful wreaths. Then other Belgian soldiers, who were bearing a coffin entwined with a Belgian flag. On the flag rested a soldier's hat and tunic. Following came his comrades, their heads bandaged, their arms in slings; the tall cavalrymen and the shorter infantrymen, their uniforms worn and stained in battle. Two were in bath chairs, suffering from leg wounds.

"The firing party, with arms reversed, led the way to the cemetery, and following them were the priests, soldiers with wreaths, the ammunition waggon bearing the body, the wounded Belgians, the Territorials, and British soldiers. Immediately behind these there straggled the Belgian refugees, women and children. All wore the Belgian colours and some carried flowers. Ambulance men, nurses from the hospitals, army veterans, police and Boy Scouts followed. An acolyte preceded the body through the gateway of the cemetery, swinging a censer, and a Belgian soldier bore a large crucifix. Thousands of persons lined the way with heads bent."

In the chapel services were held, and then, after three volleys were fired, flowers were dropped on the flag covered coffin, and Ernest Boucher, private, was at rest. He left a wife an child some place in Belgium—the child two years old, the wife about twenty. ffi

Letter From the Firing Line.

Mr. Frank Watson's brother writes about the war.

The following letter from the firing line in Belgium was received last week by Mr. Frank Watson of town, from his brother, Mr. Jos. Watson, who was among the first detachment of British troops sent to the front:

Dear Frank and Wife,—Just a few lines to let you know that I am in the land of the living and hope that this finds you both in the best of health. Well, we came out of the firing line the other day for a rest, and we had a hot water bath and a change of clothing, and it was certainly time we had it. We had it hard for the first week out here. We caught the battle of Mons and had to retire quickly. We fought all day and started to retire about four, and we kept that lot up until six the following night, and then up early the next morning again. It was during the retirement that "L" Battery got cut up, and as we were all in one camp, it did not take us long to pick them up and turn the guns upon the enemy. We have had one or two good fights since we were on the Aisne, that lasted for over 18 days. I tell you this lot is worse than the South African War. I feel sorry for these people. The Germans go into their houses and demand all they've got—loot the houses, and throw all their things about and then set fire to their buildings. In some places they have killed women and children. It is a good job they are not in England. Well, we have snow on the ground now and hard frosts at night, so it is nice and warm with two blankets, and a drop of rum is not so bad these mornings. I only hope this does not last long for I am fed up, but I will tell you more when I get out of it; so you can think the other out. I conclude, with fondest love to both. I remain

Your ever loving brother,
Jos.

Account of $12.50 Paid

To William Langford for Three Months' Service on Court of Revision

At the conclusion of last night's meeting of the City Council, His Worship Mayor Buller rose to make a few valedictory remarks and incidentally extend the season's greetings to his colelagues and fellow workers. He made no mention of his prospects of being returned for another year. It is interesting to note that six out of the eleven members who comprise the City Council are out for re-election. It was apparent last evening that the municipal elections were uppermost in the mind of more than one member of the civic administration.

The account of William Langford, Jr., for services as member of the Court of Revision for the first three months of the year was ordered to be paid after some considerable discussion. It appears that J. Finnie, who succeeded William Langford, was appointed on the 21st of February last and that his remuneration of fifty dollars a year dates from the time of his appointment. However, this did not deter Mr. Langford from putting in a bill for twelve dollars and fifty cents, being the amount due for one quarter of the year. It was claimed by more than one alderman that Mr. Langford did not serve for the full quarter, but only up to the time of Mr. Finnie's appointment. Ald. Langford submitted that it was as little as the Council could do to pay the account in full to a man of his "father's ability." He intimated that any less than the full amount of the account would not be accepted.

"The remuneration is small enough," said the Mayor.

"It's equal to about ten dollars a day," put in Ald. Green. He contended that Mr. Langford was not entitled to the full amount of his claim, not having been in the city's employ for the whole quarter. "It may be the city's way of doing business, but it's not mine," said Ald. Green.

After a little more discussion, the account was passed.

THE WEATHER

Last night was the coldest of the season so far. Nine degrees below zero was the figure.—W. P.

A SUGGESTION FOR THE MAYOR

To the Editor of The Examiner.

Sir,—Would it not be a nice act for the Mayor, on behalf of the citizens to send a cablegram to the officers and men from Peterborough on Salisbury Plain and at Kingston who have gone to fight our battles, wishing them a Merry Christmas, and telling them how proud we are of them.

Yours truly,
Citizen.

Green—"You bet it did! Some one in the gallery hit the villain square in the face with a tomato."

CHILDHOOD'S DREAMS OF SANTA

Some children have a wonderful imagination on the subject of Santa Claus. A little chap of five or six was heard relating an exciting tale of how the Old Gentleman of the toys narrowly escaped drowning. It loses effect in attempted repedition, but it runs something like this — Santa Kwas wos coming out of a big woods. His sweigh was heaped with twains and autos and dwums. He had to cwoss a wiver but the Shermans had bwoken the bwidge and Santa Kwas had to wrive ova the ice. The Shermans saw him and stopped his deers. They were goin' to shoot Old Santa Kwas and burn the big heap of toys. Then the Allies comed along and chased the Shermans, killed piles of them and told Santa Kwas to go on to Peterbowo and give all the good boys lots of toys. But the Shermans couldn't get any."

* * *

Another little fellow out in the west end declares he saw "Santa Craws" last year. He elaborates in his recital with each repetition, but it runs something like this—"I woke up and Santa Craws was right in the window. I jumped out and tried to catch him, but he hoped onto the shed and jumped into his big cutter and flew up to ——'s house and went down the chimley." The youngster couldn't think of anything more, but varied his story as to doings in his room and the appearance of "Santa Craws" and his unlimited supply of toys. These are both true accounts, and every family doubtless could add to them.

AUSTRIAN BRIGADE IS ANNIHILATED

PETROGRAD, Dec. 23 — Russian troops in the neighbourhood of Tuchow, Galicia, south of Tarnow, today on observing the advance of the 2 th Austrian Brigade, slipped past on parallel roads and surprised the Austrian rear, according to reports received here. The Russians opened fire with machine guns and virtually annihilated the whole brigade.

During the last two days' fighting in Southern Galicia, near the Carpathians, the Russians are reported to have captured over 4,000 prisoners, including a major of the general staff and five other officers, besides three heavy guns and seven machine guns. In this region the Russians, it is said, are moving small detachments through the mountain passes. In the recent Austrian sortie from Przemysl the Russians captured a machine gun which they turned against the Austrians.

WIDER USE OF THE FLAG

Propaganda Presented to the City Council—Proposals Accepted

A couple of resolutions advocating the wider use of the National Emblem, were presented to the City Council at a meeting that was held last evening. The resolutions recommended that the city have the flag raised each day on all buildings under their control and that the citizens be asked to fly the flag upon all statutory holidays; also upon the third of January which is a special day that has been set aside by the Dominion Government as a day of intercession on behalf of the soldiers and sailors who are engaged in the present conflict, and for a speedy conclusion of the war. The Council promised to carry out the terms of the proposals in so far as they were able.

FROM TOYS TO STEEL RAILS

Not long ago a visitor to Berlin, Ont., which is one of the busiest little cities in the world, asked the question: "Why don't you make toys in this town for Canadian children?" The answer was: "Well we have never considered it possible to compete in price with the German toyshops."

A better answer was given the other day when in a Canadian newspaper was published a picture of Canadians working to make toys for Canadian children at Christmas time. Is there any reason under the sun why the thousands upon thousands of dollars spent by Canadians every year for toys should not be spent on toys made in Canada? So far as we know there is no reason. Our labour is just as intelligent and just as skillful. We surely know what Canadian children need as well as foreigners do. There is no monopoly in the toy business. We have the raw materials. We have the ability to design. We know how to manufacture economically. We can make as good toys as we can make any of the other thousand things made in Canada in competition with the world.

Making toys is like making anything elese, largely a matter of determining to do it. Not many years ago we were told that Canada could not make steel rails and wax matches, and a hundred other things between these two extremes. But we can make as good steel rails and wax matches as any country in the world, and we are doing it every day. What is more, we can sell steel rails and wax matches to Canadians for less money than any other country; and what is true of rails and matches is true of anything else that the Canadian manufacturer makes without touching the duty on to the cost.

Buying goods made in Canada means buying things for less money than the foreign-made. And that saving of cost goes all the way from Christmas toys to steel rails.

We wish everyone a Merry Christmas and many Happy and Prosperous New Years; and if you owe us any money kindly pay same before the end of this year, and if we owe you call us and your bill will get paid. We will all feel happier by being square.

Respectfully Yours,

J. J. TURNER & SONS.

Christmas Treat At St. Alban's

Last evening, Wednesday, Dec. 23, the children of the St. Alban's Mission Sunday school enjoyed their first annual Christmas tree, and a very enjoyable time was spent by all. The first item on the programme was a tea for the children, followed by some good selections on the gramaphone. Rev. Jas. Price gave a short address, interspersed with a few of his large supply of stories, which were well received. Unfortunately Mr. Spence was called away before the entertainment had got fairly started. Santa Claus, whose place was ably taken by Mr. A. Jubb, jr., had presents for everybody, and he was a noted good fellow. The proceedings closed at 9.00 p.m.

The thanks of the children are due to Mr. Spence for arranging the tree, Mr. and Mrs. Jubb, senior, who were untiring in their efforts to provide a good time for the youngsters; Mr. and Mrs. Butt, Mr. Burns for the use of the phonograph, and the ladies who so ably assisted at the tea, and also the ladies who provided the wherewithal to make this treat for the children the success it was.

Tom Marks Co.

At the Grand last night Tom Marks and his capable company presented a delightful Irish comedy, "Molly Me Darlint," in which Tom Marks' daughter, Miss Arlis Marks, was seen in the star part; a part she handled with ease and grace, and as a comedienne she proved herself to be a "chip of the old block." The rendition of her part was received with aproval, as was also the play in general. A pleasing feature of the Tom Marks entertainers this season is the clever vaudeville offered between the acts. The acts are numerous and very pleasing. The acts include Byron and Nelson, in refined singing and dancing, and their act is par excellent. W. L. Phillips, in English songs, who certainly knows how to put them over. Miss Madeline Beam, in national dances. She is termed the child [illegible] and rightly does she deserve the title, for her dancing of the Highland fling, sword dance, sailor's hornpipe, Irish jig and Spanish dances, was the best ever seen here. Miss Arlie Marks in Irish songs was also heard to advantage

To-night the company present "The Man from Canada." A special matinee will be given Xmas afternoon when "A Wife's Honour" will be presented.

FRENCH WAR BUDGET

Huge Sum Voted to Defray Expenses for Six Months.

PARIS, Dec. 23—The French Chamber of Deputies to-day adopted the budget providing [illegible] to carry on the war against Germany.

This sum is to cover the first half of 1915.

Today's sitting of Parliament was less emotional and more business like than the opening session yesterday. In the Chamber of Deputies, almost all the members were present, and they cast their votes with little discussion and without a murmur of dissent. Although the voting was done publicly around their seats, the vote was unanimous, since all parties were of a single mind concerning the necessity of providing the Government with the means of carrying on the war.

Votes were cast by 381 deputies of the total membership of 597. The session lasted only a hour half hour.

It was announced that General Joffre had granted a further leave to the Deputies serving with the army, who will not be required to rejoin the ranks until three days after the termination of the usual January session.

CITY HALL PARAGRAPHS

The Finance Committee of the City Council has authorized City Treasurer Adams to collect a number of accounts that are outstanding. This will be undertaken with the aid of City Solicitor G. N. Gordon.

The Home Guard.

An agreement respecting the city and the Peterborough Home Guard has been accepted by the city. The agreement vests in the city the ownership of the twenty Ross rifles that have been purchased for the use of the Home Guard with funds supplied by the city.

A Boat House.

Unless two dollars is paid into the city treasury within the next few days, the city will assume ownership of the boathouse, through which the debt was incurred. The owner of the said boathouse has neglected for two years to pay the yearly rental of one dollar for the land ocupied by the building.

"So Much Junk."

Alderman Green has made a mental calculation of the number of shots that will be fired from the twenty Ross rifles that the Home Guard will use.

There are about nine hundred members, and each member is entitled to shoot at least once a week. Seven rounds are allowed each member. "It will only be a short time until they will be so much junk," said Alderman Green.

Cheque To Be Returned.

A cheque for $300, representing a guarantee bond given by the Peterborough Hardware Company in connection with their contract to supply the city with cement for the current year will be returned to that company providing they agree to supply cement for the remainder of the year at the price agreed upon in the contract.

Damages Alleged.

The matter of compensation demanded by a number of residents on Smith street for damages alleged to have been caused by the raising of the Smith Street bridge, has been referred to the Board of Works with the request that they take the matter up at the first of the year.

Sale of Property.

The sale of a piece of property to the Canadian Chicle Company has been deferred in order to enable the Council to obtain a better description of the property. The company propose to make additions to their plant and with this object in view are desirous of purchasing from the city a lot adjoining their property.

Garbage By-law.

This is a by-law defining the amount of garbage that shall be removed from any one place at any one time. It also provides for one or two alterations in the present existing contract. The by-law was given its third and final reading at last night's session of the City Council.

Finance Committee.

Until the close of the present year and the inauguration of the 1915 Council, accounts will be paid by City Treasurer Adams on the order of the Finance Committee. This owing to the fact that there will not be another meeting of the City Council until the new Council take office.

Refused to Sell.

The Council has refused to sell two thousand dollars' worth of thirty-year debentures at a quoted price of ninety-one on a five per cent. basis. Alderman Stratton said that the bond market was improving every day and that the city had better hold them a while. An offer of eighty-five was received a few days ago.

The Tower Waggon.

The Peterborough Radial Railway has presented the city with a bill for five dollars for the rental of the tower waggon. Some misunderstanding exists as to the authority for borrowing the waggon. It is stated that there is frequent exchange between the company and the Board of Works. "It's too bad that such a narrow view exists," said Alderman Johnston, chairman of the Finance Committee, referring to the disputed account.

DOMINION HOUSE TO REOPEN FEB. 4th

Opening [illegible] February 4th, it is understood, has been fixed on officially by the Government as the date for the reassembling of Parliament, and the customary ceremonies will [illegible] at once.

The session, as previously announced, will be confined chiefly to legislation connected with the war, such as tariff changes to raise additional revenue and appropriations for the expeditionary forces. It is hoped to conclude by Easter if the Opposition concurs in the Government's programme.

Viscount Dalrymple's Life Spared in Rain of Shells

Conflict with high power rifles at close quarters and the ordeal of being under heavy shell fire for hours has been graphically described in a letter to Viscountess Dalrymple by her husband, Major Viscount Dalrymple, of the Second Battalion of the Scots Guards, who now is a prisoner of war in Germany. On the death of his father, several days ago, Viscount Dalrymple succeded to the Earldom of Stair. Viscount Dalrymple is a member of Parliament from Wigtownshire, and the Viscountess forwarded her husband's letter to the Wigtownshire Free Press for the information of her husband's constituents.

When he became Earl of Stair, Viscount Dalrymple was interned at Husaren Kaserne, Cregeld, Germany. Describing the desperate situation in the trenches preceding his capture, the imprisoner Viscount wrote:

"I am afraid there is very little left of our battalion. Colonel Bolton, Major R. Menzies, Captain J. Coke, Captain Fox, Major Trafford, Lord Gerald Grosvenor and I were all caught practically together. Fox is slightly wounded in several places and Grosvenor rather badly about the head and back. The latter we have not seen since the day we were caught, which was Monday, 28th, and we got here last night (30th). We seem to have had better treatment on the way than most of the other prisoners here, which is not saying much. We were eight of us, with nine soldiers guarding us in one second class compartment for forty-eight hours; that is, every seat full and impossible to lie down; not allowed to stand up, lit on the floor or look out of the windows, and if we opened a window it was generally shut again. After we had been in this compartment about thirty hours we were given a plateful of potato soup, with a little meat in it. We had not had anything to eat or drink for twenty-four hours previous to being captured, and had been under fire the whole time.

Life in Prison Camp.

"Here we are in the barracks. We have roll call at eight in the morning and at nine in the evening. Breakfast consists of coffee and bread and butter. I have not yet had lunch. Dinner consists of coffee and bread and cheese. We can get eggs and bacon on payment of about sixpence. We are compulsory teetotallers and, to add insult to injury, other people are allowed to come and drink beer in our canteen, where we buy all our necessaries. Of course, we none of us have anything but what we stand up in, and everything like knives, etc., were taken away from us. I was allowed to keep my coat, but most people were not. After breakfast certain days (to-day is one) there is a room full of hot shower baths, where we can all go and stand together and get pretty well cleaned.

"Lord Garlies got here two days before us. We thought he was dead. We had a real bad week to finish up with. I think Major Hugh Fraser was killed wearing my Burberry, and with my last letter to you in his pocket. He was just taking it and others to the brigade headquarters when we came out in a great hurry in the dark, and pouring rain, having heard that a trench held by Major Willie Holbech and a platoon of our right flank had been overwhelmed."

After recounting several incidents of an engagement in which 188 men and seven German officers surrendered, Lord Dalrymple continued describing the fighting which preceded the capture:

"About seven o'clock in the morning the shelling began and a lot of sniping from the village at my right rear, but as the shells were mostly landing in the village I presently saw about sixty Germans, who had been hiding, bolting across my rear and, I think, between our fire and German shells. They must have been wiped out. Then the shelling got terrific, absolutely all over us. At one time for two consecutive minutes I counted more than sixty shells a minute bursting within fifty yards of my trench. I was twice hit by pieces which did no harm, and none of my little section was touched.

Surrounded by Germans.

"Then they got a maxim on us from about 200 yards in front, but fortunately, I think a German shell knocked that out, to our huge relief. About 10 o'clock I saw a lot of people retiring through the Village—I suppose the border regiment from our right—and apparently the Germans followed them with maxims right up to our rear, and our trench got pretty much uninhabitable—fired at from front and rear and one flank, and shells coming thick all the time from every side.

"Then word came from the trench on my left, held by a mixture of Staffords, Grenadiers and my men, that Grenadiers on the left had retired. I shouted back that it was nonsense, and to stick to the trenches and fire whenever opportunity offered. I did not think there would be any genuine attack until they stopped shelling us. About half-past three I suddenly heard a bugle sounding cease fire or something that sounded like it on our right, and saw the next trench on the right full of Germans and our people surrendering.

"I could not very well fire at them then, or the people who had surrendered would have been shot for treachery. We had strict orders to stick to our trenches, so I did not like to retire, even if I had had any idea where to retire to, as the Germans were all around, so I told the men to lie low in the trenches, in case the Germans did not come so far which they unfortunately did. I was marched off with about sixty men, mostly Staffords and King's Company Grenadiers, only about eight of mine, and one Stafford subaltern, but at a village some way off I found the rest of our people."

Open Air Skating Rink For the City

Federal Member Offers to Donate Fifty Pairs of Skates But City Did Not Qualify

A $100 LIMIT

The city is to have an open air skating rink at an enormous expenditure of $100. The rink will be located at the corner of George an Sherbrooke Streets and will be free to the public. This action was decided upon at the final meeting of the City Council, which was recorded last evening. A letter was read from Mr. J. H. Burnham, M.P., authorizing the city to use the site that was selected for the combined customs house and post office, the construction of which has yet to pass the paper stage. Mr. Burnham offered to purchase fifty pairs of skates if the city would do likewise. The Federal member will be that much to the good, as the city failed to qualify. In fact it was only after a discursive struggle lasting over an hour, that the sum of one hundred dollars was voted in aid of the project. Ald. Johnston who introduced the matter, asked for the Christian co-operation of the Council.

Question of Competition.

Ald. Weir—"I consider it is not good business to spend money on a free skating rink. We have one rink now that is assessed and is paying taxes, and it is not fair to enter into competition.

Mayor Buller pointed out that there were many poor people who could not afford to spend money in that way. Ald. Green was willing to spend seventy-five or a hundred dollars but no more.

"If I had thought that there was going to be opposition to the proposal I would not have taken the active part that I did, under your instructions," said Ald. Johnston, addressing Mayor Buller. He further intimated that the opposition might have arisen from a source connected with a rink where a charge is made. One thousand feet of lumber was secured for the purpose of constructing a shelter for the proposed free rink. This had been done a little prematurely, but he was assured that the lumber could be used by the Board of Works.

"If you know anything about children you would know that they won't skate on a ten by ten rink when they can skate on the canal," remarked Ald. Weir.

"This isn't no pane of glass. You haven't seen the rink yet," put in the Mayor.

Ald. McIntyre did not agree with Ald. Langford, who suggested that the city officials look after the rink. "The city officials were high salaried men, and if they had time to look after rinks, it was time they were discharged."

"If any city official be selected to look after the rink I would suggest the name of Mark Spencely," said Ald. Green. "I would move that a maximum amount of $100 be set aside for this purpose. I don't know whether Ald. Johnston thinks I have stock in any other rink. I positively have not."

A Good Suggestion.

Ald. Stratton—"I would suggest that each of the aldermen undertake the work of looking after the rink for one week at a time, and as the Mayor fathered the movement, he will take the first week."

"Hear! Hear!"

Ald. Langford—"As Mayor Buller proposes to skate into power next year I would suggest that Ald. Duncan put it over him by undertaking to look after the rink."

Ald. Green's motion carried, despite Ald. McIntyre's amendment to shelve the matter.

"We will open the rink with a carnival, the Mayor and Council to attend. Fish and soup fronts will be worn on the auspicious occasion."

HABIT.

Doctor—"I have to report, sir, that you are the father of triplets."

Politician—"Impossible! I'll demand a recount!"

SEPARATED BY THE WAR

Young French Officer Lies Wounded in Toulouse—His Bride of Few Months Missing

EFFORT TO JOIN THEM

In a hospital in Toulouse, France, a boy lieutenant of French infantry is lying sorely wounded, and somewhere in Brussels is his bride of a few months. From New York has gone a letter to Mr. Brand Whitlock, American Minister to Belgium, who is aiding the afflicted ones, asking him to find the bride and send her to her husband, so they may be together on Christmas day. For all other efforts to reunite them have failed.

The wounded lieutenant is Alphonse Legrande, twenty-two years old, who married, just a few months prior to the outbreak of the war to Miss Vera Court, of Herne Bay, Kent, England. As a wedding present the father of the bridegroom presented his son and the bride with a villa at Uccles, on the outskirts of Brussels, and with an automobile. After a bridal tour, the couple set up housekeeping there just when war was declared. Lieutenant Legrande hurried away to join the colours and his bride was going to her home in England when the Germans came.

Young Mme. Legrande put up a Red Cross flag over the villa and had a Red Cross painted on her automobile, which was given over to the use of the wounded soldiers. Then she fled to the father and mother of her husband. For months she tried vainly to communicate with her mother at Herne Bay and to get some word to or from her husband. It was all in vain. Ultimately a letter got through to Mrs. Court, and inquiries which she set about developed the fact that Lieutenant Legrande, terribly wounded from shrapnel, was lying in the hospital at Toulouse. She went to see him, and his joy and relief were unbounded. But he wanted to see his young wife.

Every effort was made to communicate with the bride and to get her out of Brussels into Holland, but so far the efforts have been unsuccessful. She has an aunt who is the wife of a well known business man in New York, and both of them know Mr. Whitlock, so the aunt has written him asking that he use his influence to have the young woman sent on to England, where she may get to France and to the bedside of her husband by Christmas.

The young woman's mother, writing of her daughter's plight, says: "I feel ill when I eat my dinner, knowing that my little girl is hungry."

The mother and another daughter, Miss Dorothy, twenty years old, are aiding at the Cottage Hospital and the Oxenden House, in Herne Bay. A son—the only son—is fighting with the Imperial Guards in South Africa against the Germans. The mother knows that food is becoming scarce in Belgium, and she has seen horribly mutilated, wounded men come into the hospital.

Mrs. Court tells of some of the horrible brutalities inflicted on wounded by the Germans.

"If only they would not be so cruel to refugees and wounded," she says. "At Netley Hospital the men are brought there with their hands cut off. The world will never know how terrible it is.

"Here every one is knitting—kitting—knitting. I hear that you in America are doing the same. It is wonderful how good you are. Dorothy" (the daughter) "was called up by the doctor at twelve o'clock last night. Sixteen more wounded had just arrived. So she got up and went right off and I have not seen her since. We do not mix the soldiers here. We in Herne Bay are taking Belgians. We have made lots of private houses into hospitals, but all of the worst cases go, of course, to the Cottage Hospital, where they only employ trained nurses.

"Yesterday the Germans made a raid on Yarmouth coast, but were driven back. A shell burst on the beach, so you see they are in British waters. But they will get a bad time of it if our dear old tars get at them. Our Tommies are perfect darlings and are doing well with the Allies. Our Indian troops are also splendid. Absolutely all of our boys here have gone to the front from Herne Bay. I only wish I was younger and a man. I would give them what for! I will now as they come to our shores. We have dug trenches and have guns in them for fear of a raid, and Sheerness, Dover and Chatham are under martial law."

In telling of the gratitude of the Belgians for the kindness they are receiving, Mrs. Court says:

"When I go to the Cottage Hospital the dear Belgians are so pleased to see the English ladies and they hold your hands and in broken English thank you and their God for being brought to dear old England. Those who cannot speak just look at you and press your hands and invite you with their eyes to sit by them awhile. One poor fellow I was helping came straight from the trenches on last Saturday. He was brought from the field on Thursday night. They had not taken their clothes off, he said, for a month.

"I hear to-day," Mrs. Court writes, "that we shall soon have conscription. It will be out about January, so that all who will not fight will have to go then."

In closing her letter, Mrs. Court tells of the fondness of the Belgian soldiers for cigarettes, fruit and sweetmeats.

Will Meet Overdrafts

By Issuing Debentures—Cost of Furnishing New Schools Exceed Appropriations

As stated in yesterday's Examiner, the Public Utilities Commission and the Board of Education is confronted with overdrafts amounting to eighteen thousand and thirty-two thousand dollars, respectively. A meeting of the Finance Committee of the City Council was held yesterday afternoon for the purpose of deciding upon some means of satisfying the Bank of Montreal as to the legality of the means by which the overdrafts were created. Deputations representing the School Board and the Public Utilities Commission were present, also Mr. E. H. D. Hall, Solicitor for the Bank of Montreal.

Mr. W. R. Travers, manager of the bank avered that the Utilities Commission had received no authority from the city to borrow money. Mr. T. F. Matthews, chairman of the Commission, assured the committee that steps would be taken to meet the indebtedness by the first of the year. This by issuing debentures and the revenue that will accrue to the department within the next month or so.

The cost of furnishing the two new public schools was given as the cause for the eighteen thousand dollar indebtedness of the Board of Education. Dr. Morrison of the School Board advised the committee that they would wait upon the City Council for authority to meet the amount of the overdraft, by issuing debentures.

WHY EGGS ARE HIGH.

Waste Equal to $200,000,000 a Year.

New York, Dec. 23.—Between the hen and the consumer there is waste of $200,000,000 of eggs each year.

This was the testimony given at the Attorney General's "Egg Trust" enquiry yesterday by William Mann of the law department of the New York Central Railway, who read a letter from the Department of Agriculture to support his claim.

According to these figures the American egg crop is worth $700,000,000 a year, and $50,000,000 is lost through leakage in transit.

The egg as the hen lays it is almost invariably a good egg, ran the evidence, but one out of every ten eggs the hen lays for the market is broken on the way there. Three of the remaining nine eggs are addled before they reach the consumer, and 40 per cent. of the eggs are good only for strong palates or tanning leather.

THE WORLD OF SPORT

INTEMEDIATES AND JUNIORS IN A LIVELY PRACTICE

Playing six men aside the local intermediates beat the junior O. H. A. team 8 goals to 4 in the liveliest practice of the season at Brock Street rink last night. Kelly's cold kept him off the intermediates' line-up, while Rose O'Connell and Richardson were absentees from the junior squad. Janes and Dwyer divided up the net duties for the intermediates, with Pethick and Hunter on the defence and Park, Spratt and Halpin on the forward line. The juniors had Legros between the posts, Morrow and Long on the defence, and Knapman, Jackson and Smyth on the advance guard. The players showed that they are rounding into shape by going at top speed throughout. The juniors set the pace by scoring the first two goals in jig time. Then the intermediates came on and banged through five in a row. The youngsters nailed the next goal, then the intermediates hung up two more. The juniors made it 7 to 4, and just before the whistle blew the intermediates doubled the score. It was rattling good practice for both teams, who had to exert themselves all the way. A feature was the goal keeping of Legros in the junior nets. The youngster had a lot of work to do and handled the hard shooting of the intermediates nicely.

FIRST O. H. A. GAME OF SEASON ON MONDAY

The first hockey game of the season will be played at Brock Street on Monday night, when the Bowmanville and Peterborough Intermediates lift the lid off the season. It should be a much better exhibition than the usual primary, because the cold weather has given the teams an opportunity of getting some practice, and they will be in better shape than is usual in the opening battle. The Petes should be in condition to give a good account of themselves and the game will give the fans a line on the outfit and their chances during the coming season. Bowmanville are reported to have a stronger team than last season, and will prove an awkward proposition.

HOCKEY GOSSIP

The great problem that the Peterborough Intermediates have before them right now is to develop a right wing. Of the squad the only right-hander is Ack. Hunter, who is slated for the defence. The best solution looks like moving the former Rowing Club star up to the forward line. He has played the right wing position several seasons.

A funny thing about the situation is that the Junior team has a superabundance of right-handed shots. Of the Junior squad Knapman, Long, Morrow, Smyth and O'Connell all heave from the starboard side, Jackson, Rose, and Richardson being the only left-handers in the bunch. One of the Juniors may be used against Bowmanville on Monday night.

Legros, the goal-keeper who played for the Aberts, in the Junior City League last season, offered a stubborn resistance to the fire of the Intermediate artillery. The youngster will face no harder shooting all season that he was called upon to handle last night.

The Junior defence is considerably heavier than the Intermediate rear guard and the two teams average up about alike in weight.

Not many Junior teams have a better home-brew record than the local outfit. Every man of the regular squad was born here or in this district. Knapman, Richardson, Rose, Long, Morrow and Jackson all claim Peterborough as their birth place, while Legros and O'Connell were born in Lakefield, and Smyth in Millbrook. Of the last three all have lived in Peterborough for the last ten years or more.

The junior and intermediate O.H.A. teams will practice to-night at Brock Street rink at 7 o'clock. The intermediates will practice on Saturday between 5.30 and 6.30 o'clock.

Letters From The Trenches

A "SHELL" FOR THE GERMANS.

(From Gunner Archbold to Private Simmonds).

Did you hear how we fairly sold them on —— Hill? We had been in action eight days when we were spotted by one of their aeroplanes, which dropped daylight fireworks over us. That gave the Germans our range, and they peppered us right and left.

We shifted the guns about 300 yards to the right as soon as it was dark and rigged up a dummy battery out of old R.A.A. carts, etc., in our old gun pits. The Germans started on them at daybreak. I should think that they must have fired about 400 rounds or more, giving the poor old dummy "carts" what for. When they ceased up we opened on them. I guess they were surprised, as they thought we had been blown to pieces.

YOU MADE ME LOVE YOU.

(A Lieutenant in the Army Veterinary Corps.)

We are still at the same old game, fighting all day and every day and generally all night and every night. We do get some rest, but the infantry have a hard time. At present I am sitting in the kitchen of a French inn surrounded by squalling children and all sorts and conditions of refugees.

The people, taking them all round, are wonderfully plucky and very good to us. Of course there are exceptions. There are any amount of spies — in fact, one cannot sift the chaff from the wheat — and all sorts of weird stories are told of their doings. One thing is certain—their spy system to a certain extent has been broken up, as they do not find us as they used to. Not long ago some three or four Germans crawled through our lines at night under cover of some stacks of corn, bayoneted the sergeant and patrol of a battery, poured petrol over one of the guns, and set it on fire, without, however, doing any damage. A great adventure and a very plucky deed. They escaped all right. They are top-hole fighting men and not by any means to be despised.

Most of the churches in the districts where fighting has been going on have been more or less damaged. Some of them absolutely destroyed, which is a great pity, but inevitable. For breakfast these people are having baked pears, roast potatoes, coffee, and bread and butter—rather a mixture.

Requisitioning is the great means of getting things over here, and is sometimes somewhat abused. The commanding officer of the Royal Irish had a requisition handed to him for payment one day (given by one of his Tommies who had no earthly right to do it) which read as follows:

Town.
Date.
You made me love you
I don't think.
PADDY MALONE.

I rather fear the good woman was not paid.

TOLSTOY'S RELATIVES AT THE FRONT.

Nearly all the family of the late Count Leo Tolstoy are taking some active part in the present war. Some (the Standard says) are at the front and are included among the first victims. Two sons, Count Ilya and Count Leo, are at the front as commissioners in the Russian Red Cross. Count Leo was wounded during the train collision, near the firing line. Another son, Count Michael, is a reserve officer with the active army and he has received the St. Stanislaw medal for bravery. A daughter of the famous writer, Countess Alexandra, is a sister of mercy at the base hospital at Bielostock. The widow, Countess Sophia, with another daughter, Countess Tatiana, has established a hospital for wounded soldiers at Yassaya Polyana.

PRINCE OF WALES A GOOD STUDENT

LONDON, Dec. 19.—The president of Magdalen College, Oxford, has written a curious account of the two years of the Prince of Wales at the university. He does not attempt to make out that the prince was a fine scholar, but attributes to him sufficient character and intelligence to make an efficient ruler of the empire.

"Those who knew him well, who remember his advent and saw him often throughout his course, will agree that few undergraduates, taking things all around, could have got more if so much, out of the fast fleeting years," said the educator. 10 years well forward in the studies 1 years well forward in the studies and training of the navy, moral, physical and intellectual, but naturally somewhat newer to, and less directly prepared for, university life and studies than the public school boys.

In a very few weeks, however, he began to find his feet develop rapidly. From the first he took his own line, with equal modesty and firmness, determined in his own mind that he would be really par inter pares, that he would seek and accept no tribute except on his merits. His natural dignity and charm, and, it should be added, the good sense and good feeling of his college companions, and of Oxford university that democratic aristocracy, enabled him to go far in this resolve without mishap ar untoward result.

Some sacrifice had to be made. He saw very little of the seniors in the University, and was little seen by them, except by those with whom he came officially in contact. He did not want to spend any time at all, even a little, in being treated en prince. But all the more he made a wide acquaintance with a great variety of juniors. His rooms were more and more open to his friends and to his friends' friends. He went in turn to scores of rooms of other men.

He played football, lawn tennis, golf, tennis, and squash rackets; he motored; he ran with the college boats, he ran a great deal with the beagles, he shot at various country houses around Oxford; he rode, for experience, and to hounds. In this last accomplishment he started at a disadvantage; but by real perseverance and pluck soon mode up for it and become quite proficient, though among one of the genuine losses involved by the loss of another winner at Oxford is the missing of yet further days with the Oxford hunts. He was withal a punctual and diligent member, in the ranks of the O. T. C. — (Oxford Training Corps). He drilled, he marched, he went into camp like any other private.

As to his set studies his time was short. It was not clear at the first that he would have the second year; the career for which he was to prepare was a unique one. Strict educational "economy" had to be practiced. French, German and English, especially the command of literary expression in his own language, were necessary for him. History, political economy, political science and constitutional law were desirable.

For this last study he was singularly fortunate in having at hand one of the first living authorities and perhaps the first living teacher, in the late Sir William Anson. Young himself in mind and body to the last a country gentleman and sportsman, as well as a great jurist and publicist, and singularly happy in his relations with undergraduates, Sir William Anson at once put the Prince at his ease, and there sprung up between them a friendship which grew and strengthened every term.

Side by side with this the prince attended lectures on history, on political economy, and on political science. He also had many special hours of instruction with the university teachers of French and German. Mr. Berthon, the university lecturer in French, and Professor Fiedler, the professor of German. He further went for special tuition in history to Mr. C. Grant Robertson and Mr. A. L. F. Smith, the college tutors in that subject and once every week he wrote an English essay for the president lectures he chiefly attended in the earlier part of his career. It is interesting to notice how his command of all three languages proceeded together, and how he acquired a sense of literary style as regards both arrangements and form, in both English and French at much the same rate. His essays which at first were concoctions, reproductions and complications, became more and more his own, both in thought and expression. In the end, though not yet twenty and only at the age when many sixth from boys were just beginning Oxford, he acquired a considerable mastery. Gifted with a good verbal memory, a freshness of view, and decided independence of character, his essays, if not exactly literary, became more and more interesting and again and again were striking and eloquent, if only in their genuine sincerity and simple honesty.

"Bookish," he will never be; not a "Beauclerk," still less a "British Solomon." Kings, perhaps fortunately, seldom are this last. That is not to be desired, but the Prince of Wales will not want for power of ready and forcible presentation, either in speech or writing. And all the, time he was learning more and more every day of men, gauging character, watching its play, getting to know that Englishmen are like, both individually and still more in the mass.

If the role of princes in a constitutional country is to guide rather than to dominate, to persuade rather than to compel, to influence by the attractio nof character and personality, and the example of the chivalry of modern days, and of duty, steadfastly and eagerly if unostentatiously pursued, he stands on the threshold of life today wanting neither in natural gifts nor in such preparation in its more modern form, as it has been the privilege of England's ancient and historic schools and seminaries of "true religion and useful learning" from age to age to confer upon each succeeding generation of her sons.

THE WAR FROM A CHURCH TOWER

Impressions of a British Staff Officer

The following extracts from a letter written during an earlier phase of the long-continued battle in Flanders is from a staff officer with the British troops. It is dated October 25, and was sent to a friend in this country, say the London Mail, who now permits the publication of its more general passages:

Often and often have I wondered how you all were and what doing during these somewhat trying times, and how far the business in hand has changed the normal current of life with you. The thing that most I envy you is the information you get about the war, of which we know so much less than you, seeing that we can only have any real knowledge of what lies immediately under our noses. Now and again, though, the official communication strikes us as a trifle bald. You see a phrase thus: "Between La Bassee and Armentieres slight progress has been made, and our lines have been advanced 1,000 metres." Who would imagine that every inch of that 1,000 metres has been won by fighting as gallant and as determined as perhaps any in the world's history, and at a commensurate cost in blood?

Only the other day I watched from a church tower the development of our infantry attack on a semicircle of country perhaps four miles long, inside of which a matter of 8,000 men were deploying to the attack of four enemy villages under the protection of our guns. Had it not been that only a few minutes before I had myself been up into one part of our firing line to give certain information to two battalion commanders of trenches which I knew to exist along the edge of a certain wood behind the stacked beetroots near a sugar factory and that the memory of those arduous twenty minutes of advance under fire was still very fresh in my mind, the whole effect would have been too panoramic, too theatrical to seem true.

The Wonderful Scene.

Over an arc of 140 degrees our howitzers, field batteries, 60-pounders, and heavies, all conspiring together to build a ring of fire and death in front of the tiny earth-coloured specks which were our deployed infantry, the roar of lyddite detonating on a house which suddenly ceased to exist when the greenish-yellow mark of the explosion cleared; the angry white and spectacular flash and white smoke-puff of the shrapnel hanging motionless in the still, damp air; and the drone of the great howitzer shells going 600 feet above our heads to burst in some unfortunate trench, from which presently you would see a number of little grey figures running like mad, with jerky, marionette steps, away for 100 yards into the red-roofed farmhouse, whose roof in five minutes' time would fall in and bury them like the lords of the Philistines in Dagon's Temple; here and there fountains, 200 feet high, of red earth, stones, and bricks, as 6 in. howitzer shells got home—it was all like a dramatic performance got up for my amusement, save for the high-pitched ping-g of an occasional stray bullet going somewhere above my head or whang into the tower wall below my feet. And yet that anybody—and everybody does it—should be able to look at all this with complete personal detachment is one of those merciful dispensations of God to prevent our going mad.

Fine Fighters—on Both Sides.

At any rate, the trip has made me sure that my own race are separately and collectively the worthy successors of the greatest of their kin. To see the way in which Thomas A. accepts with a jest the unimagined horrors of the trenches, suffocation by falling earth, limb-racking damps, lack of sleep, vermin, death in a hundred forms, is to make one very proud of being one of their breed. Let me say, too, that the enemy are superb. Their gallantry in attack and in advance against predestined death is to be seen before it can be believed. Psychologically I suppose it must be part and parcel of the entire ruthlessness with which they have waged this war, immolating everything animate and inanimate, even to the point of their own lives, in pursuit of their object. But it has a great deal in it that extorts an unwilling admiration.

I am grossly well, save for occasional twinges of rheumatism, which the onset of winter is not likely to improve. However, a summer in the sun in North Germany ought to put that right. I must go and find out what is happening at ——, where an appalling cannonade and machine-gun fire has begun about five minutes since, about two miles away, and I must get saddled up and go.

TOOK IT ALL RIGHT.

He came down the garden path, a sad, sorrowful figure. She watched him with anxious eyes.

"How did father take it?" she asked.

"He took it all right," replied the young man.

"Oh, I am so glad, George," she cried.

"Are you?" he replied, flopping forlorn by her side. "Well, I can't say that I am, dear. At first your father wouldn't listen to me."

"Why didn't you tell him that you had two thousand five hundred dollars in the bank, as I told you to?" she exclaimed.

"I did, after all else had failed," answered George dejectedly.

"And what did he do then?"

"Do!" echoed the young man, passing his hand wearily through his hair, "He borrowed it!"

ANNUAL SERENADE

The Temple Band of the Salvation Army will commence its annual serenade in the near future, and no doubt will receive a most liberal response. The following letter has been addressed to the citizens:

Dear Friend,—Again the season is at hand when it will be our pleasure to serenade you.

The past year has been a memorable one in the history of our Band, it having visited the great International Congress of the Salvation Army in London, England, together with a number of other cities in the Old Land, representing Canada in general and Peterborough in particular.

We distributed thousands of souvenirs of the Electric City, which were arranged by Adjutant McElhiney and Band Secretary Hensley, especially for this occasion, a copy of which we are sending you to-day with greetings.

The wreck of the Empress of Ireland and the loss of many of our bravest and best comrades, threw a very heavy burden upon us which we endeavoured to rise to, though it interfered materially with our financial arrangements. This interference together with the general up-keep of the Band, makes us to face a very heavy year financially, and having endeavoured to serve the city at every time as best we could, we come asking for your best financial aid. As you know, the Bandsmen all give their services free and hope for your continued patronage this year.

With very many thanks for all past favours and wishing you God's choicest blessing for body and soul this Festive Season, we are,

J. A. McElhiney, Officer.

E. Hensley, Band Secretary.

WEDDING BELLS

WILSON—NELSON.

A pretty wedding was celebrated yesterday afternoon at two o'clock at the home of the bride's mother, Mr. W. F. Nelson, East City, when Miss Arletta Nelson of Haileybury, was united in marriage to Mr. J. S. Iveson Wilson, also of Haileybury. The ceremony was performed by the father of the groom, the Rev. Mr. Wilson, of Toronto, in the presence of immediate friends and relatives.

The bride and groom were unattended except by little Miss Isabel Nelson, the flower girl. The bride was handsomely attired in a beautiful gown of white crepe meteor and lace, trimmed with pearls, and carried a shower bouquet of white roses. The flower girl carried a bouquet of pink carnations.

Yesterday the happy couple left for Haileybury, via Toronto. They will reside in Haileybury.

Y. M. C. A. NOTES

The annual Christmas tree of the Y.M.C.A. Boys' Department was held last evening, about one hundred and forty boys being present. A number of parents and friends were also in attendance.

The Boys' Department was beautifully decorated with evergreens, wreaths, bells and so forth, and the tree was covered with coloured lights kindly loaned by Grant and Thorpe.

Boys' Secretary Galley presided and the boys joined lustily and heartily in singing "Mark the Herald Angels Sing," after which Santa Claus in the person of a well known local dentist, distributed presents and oranges to all who were present. Many of the presents were contributed by friends of the Association to whom the thanks of the Association are extended.

Quite a number of parents are placing Y.M.C.A. membership tickets in the stockings of their boys. This is one of the best presents for the boy, as it will last the year round and is good for over three hundred days of fun.

The Association would greatly appreciate the favour if all subscribers to the current expenses would remit during the coming week. Extraordinary circumstances will make it necessary for the Association to carry a considerable deficit into 1915. Any financial aid that can be rendered it by the friends of the Association will be greatly appreciated.

EXACTIONS ON ANTWERP.

Huge Demands Are Made by Germans For Food Supplies.

LONDON, Dec. 24.—A correspondent of The Daily Telegraph wires as follows from northern France:—

A detailed account of the exactions by the German authorities in Antwerp shows that the daily fine demanded is 14 tons of bread, 28 tons of potatoes, eight tons of fresh meat, three and one-half tons of preserved meat, the same quantity of smoked meat, the daily fine also includes 5,500 bottles of wine, 2,000 cigarettes, 25,000 cigars, 1,700 packets of tobacco and twenty tons of oats.

The Belgian shops have been forced to provide field glasses for the German officers again. Dentists are obliged to give their services and to supply artificial teeth and gold stoppings without payment.

On Wednesday and Thursday last German and Austrian troops, composed of infantry, cavalry and artillery, which had been entrained at Schaerbeek in a lamentable condition, passed through Brussels on their way back from the West. They had anything but the air of conquerors. They were empty in spite of everything. They looked exhausted and worn out and went about their duties in absolute silence. In their tattered, mud-stained uniforms the troops give the impression of being absolutely demoralized. Only the officers retain their arrogantly disdainful manner.

FINDING AGAINST GLADDEN

Council of London, Ont., Wants a Full Military Probe.

LONDON, Ont., Dec. 24.—London City Council in special session last night, unanimously adopted a resolution submitted by a special committee which has been investigating the matter, finding General Manager H. J. Gladden of the Public Utilities Commission, "guilty of gross neglect," in allowing German employes and the children of the committee, to leave the city for Germany following the outbreak of hostilities.

The council further decided to ask the Militia Department to investigate the matter, and to ask the Public Utilities Commission to suspend or dismiss Gladden at once.

Gladden is of German birth, though now a naturalized Canadian. He is understood to be now fighting in the German army.

Von Tirpitz Interview Fails to Impress Great Britain.

LONDON, Dec. 24.—Referring to the recent bombardment of Scarborough, The Pall Mall Gazette, commenting on the reported interview with Grand Admiral von Tirpitz, sarcastically declares that "the battle of the bath houses evidently failed to raise the spirit of Von Tirpitz, who now pins his faith on submarine attacks against British commerce. This is a form of warfare of which we are singularly not afraid. Zeppelin might well exclaim like the old lady, when told to place her trust in Providence, 'Has it come to that?'"

The Evening Standard, commenting on the interview, says: "It is a very pretty plan, to attack merchant ships approaching England with supplies by submarines. How it will work remains to be seen."
